Another story is The New Day's Dawn, by the Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton. When he became interested in photoplay writing, Dr. Stockton took a few scripts and submitted them to several "schools" and to private criticism. After the third or fourth lesson this particular school wrote him that no director would touch the script under discussion "with a ten foot pole." As he had already received a check for the script from the Imp, he decided that the school was not of much value to him and he did not complete the course. He can, in no sense, be called a graduate, nor can the school claim any merit for his subsequent progress.

There is a postal regulation concerning the circulation of misleading information that we should like to see enforced.

Give Them Names.

Marc Edmund Jones, head of the Chicago Circle, who has been staying in New York since the dinner, writing scripts and fixing up clocks for the editor of this department (and believe us he leaves an eight-day clock that ran only two minutes so that it runs eight days and then some), contributes the following:

> In writing a script today, I was reminded of a matter that I have thought might be taken up and discussed in your column. I have noticed, while watching the pictures, that people around me—those that talk about the picture while watching it—often have difficulty in referring to a certain character unless his name has been revealed in a sub-title. In writing a sub-title, I always make it a point to reveal the name of the character referred to, but I have not yet got to the point of making a sub-title merely to fasten a name to a character. It is an open question in my mind if it would not stimulate interest to see the names of all the principles revealed in some way similar to Edison's system.

This is another way of saying that the audience likes to be introduced to the people on the screen and we said a long time ago that Mr. Plompton's scheme was the only thing that adequately covered the point. All other schemes tried have failed in practice. Why not write your scripts to cover this point, writing in the leaders yourself? It is easier for the editor to cut out than to put in.

Is It the Editor?

A New York author takes up two whole pages, single spaced at that, to advise us that all editors are a specified variety of fools. He writes that he has arrived at what the editor wants through his own intelligence, and this is his answer:

> They don't want originality at all. No one does, in drama, novel, magazine story or patterns of neckties. For originality pertains to genius and the world is not ready for it. What caterers to the general public really want is something that is time-honored and therefore recognizable and when they use the word originality all they mean is something that has a novel twist in a pattern to which they are already accustomed, and therefore ready and prepared to like.

There is more—a lot more—than this, but this is the meat of the argument, that editors do not want original stuff, but won't say so.

We think the trouble is that the editor would rather have a new twist to an old plot than an "original" plot that is so jumbled and confused that no spectator could follow it. We've seen "original" stories of a sort that never could get by. They were "original," it is true, but they were utterly impossible.

When an editor says he wants original stuff he means what he says, but perhaps he forgets to add that he does not want ravings. He knows that he must get stories within the range of his audiences, and therefore he sends back the ultra-novel, but he wants something that is a shade above the average, and if it all looks alike on the screen, blame the producer who makes perfunctory production.

Our correspondent need not worry about the editors and their ability to judge. If he'll send them what they want, they'll take it. If he does not, he gets no checks, and that seems to be where this rub comes.

First Sales.

The other day a note of despair was sounded in a letter because the writer had written seven scripts and he sold none, despite the glittering promise of the school he sudied with.

We never hear of an apprentice spending a couple of days in a cobbler's shop and then making first class shoes, and there seems to be no particularly good reason why the photoplay writer should expect a percentage of sales from the very start. No fiction writer expects to start full fledged, and while, in one way, photoplay writing is easier, there are still many points to be learned through disheartening experience. The person who sells only half a dozen scripts the first year stands a far better chance of success than he who sells five to ten times as many. The man or woman who makes quick sales develops habits of carelessness that never can be eradicated, but the patient cobbler, learning through rebuffs, is getting a ground work that in later years will serve as the foundation of a lasting success due to a combination of technique and invention.

But mind you, technique does not mean a certain set form of writing a story. It does not mean using "leader" instead of "sub-title" or vice versa. Technique is the knowledge of the art and the proper form of writing the photoplay is but the smallest part of that art. Technique means getting the best possible development for a given idea. It means the cultivation of the selective faculty that enables the author to take the good and leave the bad. It means the elaborate development of a sense of dramatic values; an instinctive appraisal of the weight of a situation or incident. Technique, in a word, means the knowing how to write as well as the manner in which to write.

The professional landscape photographer instinctively places his camera in the spot from which he can get the best effect with a given scene. He possesses the technique of his art and he selects without hesitation the point of view that best lends itself to composition. The novice may move the camera a dozen times and then not get a picture half so good, but each time the novice moves his camera he learns something of composition and viewpoint and, if he has it in him to develop into an expert, he will gain this development, though thousands of movements of the camera.

It is the same way with photoplays. If you can write well enough to sell the first two or three months you will rest content with your achievements. You will get the idea that the art is easy and one not requiring practise and study. You will not develop and in time will be passed by the less brilliant beginner, who through study and practise has gained more than a superficial knowledge of the business.

Once in a while the born photoplay writer appears, the author whose mental equipment specially fits him for his wrok without elaborate study, but these are few and far between and for the rest the tortoise will pass the hare that sleeps.

Don't worry if your scripts do not sell the moment you start writing. Worry if they do.

Two Color Scripts.

Several authors want to know if it is well to use red and black ribbons in writing scripts. It is more or less a matter of personal taste and a detail that does not affect in any way the value of the story, but we believe that most editors have a greater respect for the all black ribbon, if they have any prejudice at all. The use of two colors suggests the fussy novice, rather than the practiced hand. It creates the sub-conscious impression that the care that should have been taken on the story has been wasted in putting in the scenes in red ink and the business in black. If we had a machine that used two color ribbons we would get a solid black and use the second half after we had exhausted the first. On the other hand, Marc Edmund Jones, who almost paints pictures with his machine, tells us that the bi-chrome ribbon is a better grade than the solid colors. In that case the red could be used for practice work.

Inquiries.

NOTE—No questions can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of addresses to which photoplays may be sent will be mailed on receipt of a STAMPED AND ADDRESSED ENVELOPE.

J. H. G.—We do not know that the player mentioned was in but one picture. Broncho and Kay-Bee occasionally exchange casts.

G. E. J.—A six months' subscription to this paper is $1.50.

H. M. S.—Your question was answered while it was coming in the mail. See last week.

T. R.—Edwin August was Pietro in "The End of the Quest." He is with the western section of the Vitagraph now. The Toothache picture is not licensed. According to the rules, any picture shown in a licensed theater must be licensed.

N. D.—We do not know how long the company takes to reply, but we would give most companies eight weeks before querying. Remember it is in the mail five days each way.

CURIOUS—Exact figures are not obtainable. The estimates run all the way from 10,000 to 15,000 photoplay theaters in the United States. We think it nearer the former sum.

M. E. T.—The company is said to be making special releases. We have no line on how long they take, but three weeks is not a very long time.

K. C.—The Photoplay Magazine suspended. There would seem to be no way of getting your money back. Pathe names are not available. Union releases when it has something to release, not on stated days or dates. The British and American company is independent.

J. C.—The company does not want outside scripts.

B. S.—Ethel, in "Heroes One and All," was Miss Ethel Clayton. In the synopsis she is referred to as Jane. "The Recoil" was released May 8, 1912. "The Two Browns" was released November 29, 1911, Thanhouser's "Dora Thorne" was released May 17, 1912.

TWO GIRLS.—In "The Lost Dispatch," Charles Ray was Major Payton's rival. The bugler is not cast. Miss Helen Case was Ruth in "The Tell Tale Hat Band." We have not that last cast yet.

R. A. D.—Write a courteous note to the editor and see if the story is being held. That may be the case.

C. P.—We have not that Nestor cast. Miss Edna Payne was the girl in both pictures. The late Florence Barker was the girl in "The Burglar and the Rose." The Nestor studios are at Hollywood, California, a suburb of Los Angeles.

L. G.—Miss Gertrude Bambrick was the lass in "Near to Earth," not Miss Sweet.

DALLAS BUG—John Ince was the Count in "A Florida Romance." The other identifications are not at hand. Mrs. Hackett was Flavia in "The Prisoner of Zenda." We, too, would like to see Flossie C. P. resume her questions, but parental edict forbids. She has many imitators, but no successors. She was interesting because she was genuine.

MRS. T.—Sorry, but we cannot reply by mail. The reference was general, and not specific. "Too conventional" on a rejection slip means that you are writing the same sort of stories that a couple of thousand other writers turn out. There is nothing new, nothing startling to your plots. They are merely the things that happen every day, told in every-day fashion. We are far from holding the beginner in contempt. We were a beginner once, and we remember that fact. But we do despise the "literary loafer" who is not willing to work for success.

H. C.—It is distinctly stated that we do not reply to questions by mail. Even if we did, we would require a stamped and addressed envelope, instead of the stamp alone. The editor of a picture company reads scripts when he gets the time. This may be the day of receipt or some time afterward, according to the pressure of his other work. A title is frequently duplicated. The title you ask about has not been used since October, 1911. If a photoplay is rejected, a reason may or may not be given. The last question would require the reading of your script, and we are too busy to do this.

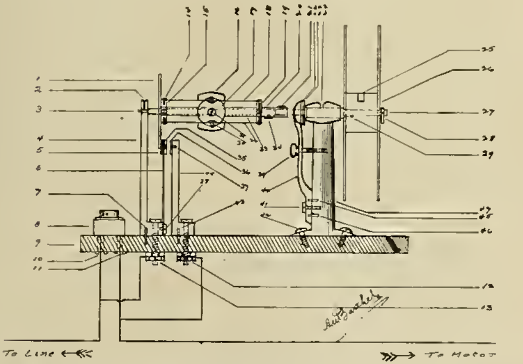
Stereopticon Trouble.

MR. VERNER HICKS, Marion, Ill., has trouble with his stereo. The light shows dark in three of the corners. I think quite likely friend Hicks is using condensers of too short focal length, or else he has a quarter-size lens. If your stereopticon lens is of more than 10 inch e. f. (and it is), it will probably be impossible to avoid yellow corners if it is a quarter-size lens. You should have a half-size. Possibly you are running a very small moving picture, as compared to the stereopticon, or vice-versa. Give me the exact width of both pictures and I can advise you further.

A Rewinder Device.

Mr. A. W. Barthel, Brownsville, Texas, writes:

> As I have not contributed anything for some time, I will make up by sending description of an automatic stop device, designed by myself, to be attached to the left hand part of the film rewinder—the part receiving the film to be rewound. The purpose of this device is to stop the motor automatically when the film is all rewound, or, should the film through any cause break during the process of rewinding. In making use of the phonograph governor principle care should be taken that the two contact points, which are best made of platinum, be ground perfectly, so as to touch each other over their entire surface, thus preventing sparking. The entire device should be enclosed in a sheet iron box to prevent any possibility of fire through sparking. The motor is started by means of a switch, which is to be pulled immediately afterwards. In the sketch, 1 is a friction disc, fastened to 15, which must be loose on the shaft. 2 and 24 are oil wells for bearings. 3 is the pivot of the governor shaft. 4 is a metal casting, fastened to wood base 9, by means of screws 13 and pin 7 to prevent slipping. 5 is a leather disc, fastened to spring 6 and contact point 35. 8 is the starting switch. 10 and 11 are porcelain tubes for wires leading to switch. 12 and 13 are screw nuts to fasten wires to contact carriers 4 and 44. 14 is a screw to fasten spring 18, holding weight 16, to parts 15 and 19. 17 is the main shaft. 18, 32 and 33 are governor springs. 20 is a tube by means of which shaft 17 is fastened, or coupled to shaft 27, using the two screws 21, 34. 22 and 23 are fibre discs. 25 is the film clip. 26 is a reel held rigidly to shaft 27 by 28 and 29. 36 is the second contact point fastened to casting 44 by screw 37. 38 is a screw by means of which spring 6 is fastened to casting 4. 31 is a thumb screw, pressing against spring 40. Fastened to casting 47 by screw 41 are two pins, 45 and 46. 42 is one of the wood screws which hold rewinding casting 7 on base 9. When reel 36 is rotating, weights 16, 17, etc., which are fastened to thin springs 18, 32 and 33, will cause these springs to bulge out in their center. This in turn forces part 15, fastened to friction disc 1, to bring contact point 35, fastened to spring No. 6, in touch with contact point 36, which keeps the motor going after switch 8 has been thrown off. A break in the film will immediately separate the contact point and the same thing will occur when the film is all rewound, since reel 26 then stops revolving. Now this is rather a lengthy description, and possibly somewhat more elaborate than is necessary, but there are many operators who are not as familiar with mechanical matters as they might be, therefore I have made the thing as complete as possible, and I trust the description will be of use to some one.



Cross section of left-hand part of rewinder with automatic stop device.

First of all, Barthel, I must compliment you on the excellent drawing you have submitted. As to the device itself, while it is a little bit complicated to construct, it undoubtedly would work perfectly, therefore it is passed along to our readers for examination. I have no doubt quite a number of the boys will get busy constructing automatic rewinder stops.

Thanks to the Moving Picture World.

Pinole, Cal., makes a talk thusly:

> I started a little show with a 1908 model Motiograph, but have since installed a Power's Six and a Pathe Professional. I have my machines working perfectly. I have had to do all kinds of repair work and have got away with it successfully, thanks to the Handbook and the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. And now I want to answer a question which has been asked several times in the Projection Department, viz: is the course in the American Correspondence School of any benefit? My advice, to anybody wanting to learn the business or unable to serve an apprenticeship under a competent operator, is to get the Handbook and the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. The American Correspondence Course is not complete. You can finish the three months' course in one month. I have taken it and know what I am talking about. What size condensers should I use for an 85 foot throw, 15 foot picture? My lens is a five inch e. f. and the light on the screen seems to have a yellow tint to it.

You should have two 7½ condensing lenses, but be sure they are pure white as you look through them edgeways. If they have a yellow or green tint, reject them. You have not told me the kind of current or the number of amperes you are using. Possibly you are not using current enough.

It Is To Smile.

A certain trade publication is now running a series of articles, entitled "Motion Picture Making and Exhibiting," written by one who presumably assumes to speak with authority. I have not read these articles in their entirety, but in glancing at one of them I find some queer things. Speaking of the projection machine, of which he gives a supposed-to-be authoritative description, the following appears:

> After being pulled into exact position, the film must be held so rigidly that no vibration will affect its centering. The device that turns on and cuts off the light must be so adjusted that no light passes through the film, except when it is stationary in the gate.

Again, we have this choice bit of information:

> Any wear of the parts causing lost motion, or any lack of adjustment, will cause serious flickering due to uncertainty of film position.

Now here is a man presuming to speak with authority upon projection matters, who evidently does not know that light passes through the film of a projection machine continuously during the time the machine is in operation, and that it is cut off from the screen by the revolving shutter, which is located between the film and the screen; also this particular authority does not know, or does not seem to know, that movement of the picture on the screen is not "flickering," this term being applied to the flickering of light due to the action of the revolving shutter. It does seem strange that men will undertake to teach others on a subject concerning which their own ideas are so hazy that they do not even know the correct names of things. What the man in question may know about picture making I cannot say, but he had better examine a projection machine carefully and put in two or three years studying it and its action before he attempts to teach, with the projector as his text.

Difference in Throw.

The Star Theater Company, Jefferson City, Missouri, propounds the following question:

> We are contemplating building a new theater. Our throw now is 65 feet, but in the new place we want a throw of at least 80 feet and would like to make it 90 or 95. Can we get a perfect picture at this distance? Will it require more current? What size lenses are required for different throw; also what condensers? Also what size picture can we project at 90 or 95 feet? Stamped envelope enclosed for reply.

Replies are only sent by mail where a minimum fee of $1.00 is enclosed. Please keep that fact in mind. As to your queries, 75 to 100 feet is an ideal distance to project, so far as the projection itself is concerned. If the picture be of ordinary size, that is to say 18 feet or less in width, I would not very much care whether the projection were 65, 80, 90 or 95 feet. The only difference would be in the focal length of the lens required to give picture of desired size. On pages 356 to 364 of the Handbook you will find full and complete directions, illustrated, as to how to figure the size and the focal length of lenses required to project a picture of given size at a given distance; also the proper condensing lens focal length to go with them. In fact the whole matter is set forth together with the reasons why 75 to 100 foot throw is preferable to a shorter one.

The Show at Lamar.

Mr. Jesse P. McBride, manufacturer of the Wagner Film Holder, Indedependence, Kansas, writes:

> I had just got my nose in the department, March 29th issue, when I ran into Mr. Abbey's letter regarding Mr. E. E. Wagner's "Spook Show," at Lamar, Mo. Mr. Abbey's description of the Bijou is very good. I have been over the theater many times and can certify to the description as setting forth just about what Mr. Wagner actually does, though friend Abbey failed to state that he goes over his pictures as they come in, and if an effect is needed which he has not got, he just simply jumps in and makes it. Mr. Wagner is the inventor of the Wagner Film Holder, recently illustrated and recommended in the department. I am pleased to advise that the Inter-State Commerce Commission will very likely approve this shipping pail at their next meeting. I expect to go over to Lamar in a short time and see if I can get Mr. Wagner to send in a description of how he does those stunts.

We should be very glad indeed to have you induce Mr. Wagner to chase his pencil around on paper, sending in a description of his methods, which most certainly are unique. It would make mighty interesting reading. Glad to know the Wagner pail is to be approved. It is a first-class device.

A Beautiful Pillow.

The Editor is in receipt of a charmingly beautiful sofa pillow, the work of the mother of Brother L. J. Shafranek, Secretary L. U. 160, I. A. T. S. E., Cleveland, Ohio. The pillow may be made in any colors and contains the emblem of the order, as per accompanying picture, picked out with gold. In the pillow I have, the body is a rich purple and the emblem in orange and white, the whole being surrounded by a heavy braided cord of white, having tassels as shown. Brother Shafranek's mother offers to make these pillows at $2.50 each, and you may take it from me, they are very reasonable at that figure. Brother Shafranek writes thusly:

> Mother doesn't care to make much on them and $2.50 certainly is no more than that class of work is worth. Father is getting along in years and was injured recently, so I thought perhaps a few could be sold, which would help them out a little. The pillow can be made in any colors desired. It is all hand-made, with the very best material obtainable (felt). Gold braid outlines the emblem and the edges may be finished with heavy braided silk cord, draped ribbon, etc. The back is made of fine satin. The number of the local union of the purchaser will be placed in the center. Mother will also make a pennant with I. A. T. S. E. and the local union number on one side for fifty cents.

If the "boys" could see that pillow, your mother would be kept busy I am sure, Brother Shafranek. Address orders to L. J. Shafranek, 7617 Union Ave., Cleveland, Ohio, enclosing money order for $2.50.

Operators' Feast.

From Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Canada, comes a neatly engraved invitation to attend a banquet. The invite tells the story. It reads thusly:

You are cordially invited to attend a BANQUET
given by the Inaugurated Motion Picture
Operators of Saskatoon
Pending affiliation with I. A. T. S. E. at Little's Cafe. 21st Street East,
Saturday, April 12th, 1913, at 11 P. M. sharp
Informal
W. H. Spicer, Pres. G. E. Dealtry, Sec.-Treas.
West Side Theater P. O. Box 126

Sorry I was not able to respond, gentlemen, but too many miles of hill and vale intervene. I trust you had one rip-roaring good time and that the new star in the I. A. T. S. E. diadem will shine with undimmed brilliancy for many years.

Ghost.

Ellwood City, Pennsylvania, describes his difficulty thusly:

> Have been running a show here for the past three years and all that while I have been fighting a ghost. Am using 110 volt, 60 cycle current through a Sterling coil. Project a 12 foot 8 inch picture 75 feet, on a mirror screen. Have used hard and soft carbons; condensers are about an eighth of an inch apart; machine is in line with lamp; wiring is all tight; am using ⅝ carbons above and below and have set them in different ways without result. Have used different projection lenses. If you or some of the department readers can help me, it will surely relieve my mind.

In the first place, you have not told me how many amperes you are using, which is a very important item of information, I can assure you. You should not use less than 40, and 60 would be better. You say your machine is in line with the lamp, if you mean your optical system is in line throughout—all right, but the "machine in line with the lamp" does not mean anything in particular. Be sure that your front condenser lens sets approximately square with the machine—not only in line, as per page 227 of the handbook, but square the other way also. I presume, of course, you have tried moving your lamphouse backward and forward. If you have not, then do so. Outside of this, I do not think of anything further to suggest.

Picture Blurs.

Mr. J. M. Yeaton, Newmarket, N. H., is having trouble with his picture blurring in the center. He says:

> Issue of April 12th, Lloyd G. Balkam, Washington, D. C., complains of a blur in the center of Independent films. I am having the same trouble, though I would describe it a little differently. The blur occurs when the figure moves—not always when it moves fast, but often when the motion is at a moderate rate of speed. When a figure lifts an arm quickly, sits down or turns its head, etc., the effect occurs. It is sometimes caused by a person moving across the picture quickly, but it is understood that this cannot be avoided. It seems, however, that the figures in the center and background ought not to blur when moving. Mr. Balkam seems to have found it only on Bison 101, but I meet it in other films also. The agent representing the company I purchased my projector from says such a thing could only be in the photography of the picture.

This same thing, if I rightly remember, has been treated of in the department before, and several explanations have been offered. Just what they were, I do not at this time remember, nor have I the time to look back through the files of the department and find them. I think if you will search back numbers you will discover an answer to this same thing somewhere. If any of the brothers remember it, please let us know about when it was, or if they have any solution to offer let them set it forth for the benefit of all. Any object moving very fast will be more or less blurred in the picture. The closer to the camera the more blurred it will be.

Shutter Trouble.

Mr. Fred Bleecker, Monticello, Ill., writes:

> Enclosed find $2.50 for the new Handbook. Have one of the old ones and find it very satisfactory. We have a motor-driven Power's Six machine. Is there any way to make it noiseless when the film is in? Is there anything to the soaking of carbons in salt water? Up to a week ago my shutter was all right, but now I cannot seem to get the travel ghost all out. Put in a new shutter shaft and that seemed to help, but I cannot wholly eliminate the travel ghost. The shutter is a two-winger and cuts a clear picture, but there is considerable flicker.

No machine is entirely noiseless when the film is in. The Power's Six is perhaps as nearly so as any, but the film and intermittent are bound to make a certain amount of noise, and this noise varies with the individual machines, even where they are of the same make. As to the shutter, I cannot say, from your description, what is the matter. With the two-wing shutter you are bound to get some flicker, though you get a greater percentage of light than you would with a three-winger. You can eliminate the travel ghost by riveting a narrow piece of metal on the stamped blade, increasing its width slightly, but this, of course, will cut a slightly greater percentage of the light. Very likely your gears are worn considerably. I would suggest, however, that the first thing to try would be to get a soft, thin, very pliable leather strap, something like half an inch wide, and about six inches long. Put it around the shutter shaft and fasten it into the form of an endless belt. Now let it hang down and to the lower end attach a weight just as heavy as it will stand without making the machine pull hard. This will hold the back-lash out of the shutter, and, after you get it set right it will probably eliminate the travel ghost. But do not get the weight too heavy or it will make the machine run objectionably hard. On the other hand, if it is too light it will not do any good. The Power's Six travel ghost is usually caused by worn gears, which allows a certain amount of back-lash to the shutter, and the strap acts on the shutter shaft like a brake and tends to eliminate this.

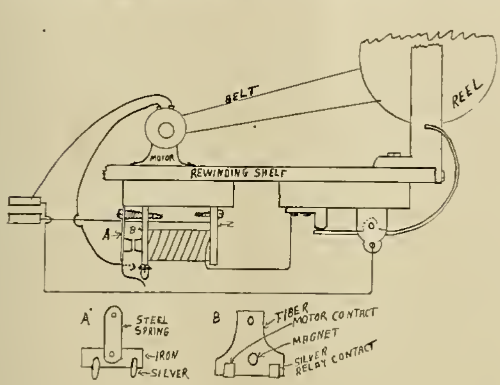
Operators' School.

Mr. W. G. Baily, Belize, B. H. (which I presume stands for British Honduras) orders a Handbook and says he expects to go into the business and would be very glad if I could recommend a good school which qualifies moving picture operators. The book is on its way to you, brother, but I know of no school which I could conscientiously recommend to you as "qualifying" a moving picture operator. You might as well try to learn to run a locomotive by "going to school." It cannot be done.

Another Automatic Motor. Cut-Out.

Mr. Wm. Hofmann, member Local Union 507, Kewanee, Ill., submits sketch and description of an automatic cut-out for the rewinder motor. He writes:

> It was a lot easier for me to make the outfit I am going to describe than to draw a picture of it; at least I did a better job of the machine than of the drawing. The sketch represents an automatic cut-out for the motor of the rewinder. It is designed to stop the motor when the reel has been rewound. It has been a successful operation for more than a year. I use a six volt battery motor and get the current for it from two coils of my projection circuit rheostat. It requires about one minute to rewind, using a spindle with a tension on it for the other reel. The rewound reel stops in about three revolutions after the end of the film has left the other reel. All that is necessary is to press spring A against the magnet. This closes the circuit through the motor and the other one through the relay, which acts as a separate circuit breaker at the same time. When the film is rewound the end hits the relay circuit breaker, which is made of sheet brass a little wider than the film, and this separates D from C, which two are held together by a weak coil spring. The effect is to break the relay current and the magnet, of course, lets go of its armature, allowing spring A to pull away, thereby breaking the motor circuit. For use on 110 volt current it would only be necessary to have a magnet with more resistance, or a couple of incandescent lamps, wired in multiple, in series with it.



The sketch makes the whole thing clear, Brother Hofmann, with the exception of your rheostat connection. This I do not quite understand and I think you will have to explain a little more in detail. I have redrawn your sketch just as you had it. Re-drawing was necessary since you used purple ink. I have told you men a good many times that nothing but black ink will do for this kind of work. If the two rectangles on either side of the word "Line" represent your projection resistance, as they appear to, I do not seem to be able to dope out that part of it at all, nor do I quite understand whether the line marked X connects to parts A, B and Z, or only to part X. The way you have it drawn it connects to all of them. Please make yourself a little plainer.

Arc Roars.

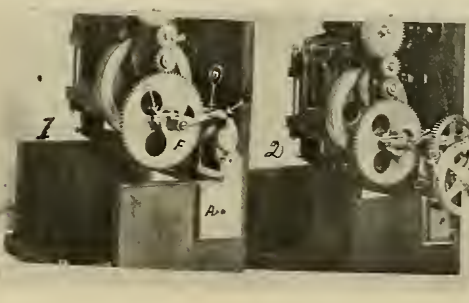
Saskatchewan, Canada, comes South with the following:

> I'm stuck for fair Using a Power's 6-A and a Motiograph, 110 v., d. c., through a Ft. Wayne compensarc. Everything running slick as a whistle until two weeks ago, then began having trouble with the arc in one of the machines. It started in by humming a trifle louder than ordinary and every once in a while would sound as if the current had broken for a fraction of a second. I put new wire connections in the lamphouse and the current breaking sound disappeared but the thing then began to roar. The carbons won't burn right. They are set almost on a line with each other, with a little outward slant. They are set the same in both machines. If I set the carbons so that they are exactly centered, one above the other. the top carbon burns almost flat and the bottom one burns off in front. If I bring the carbon (top one) back about 1-16 or 1-12 of an inch behind the center of the bottom carbon, the top carbon burns with a deep groove in front and the bottom one burns inverted V-shaped. I file the points of the carbons down at the end of every picture so that I can get the desired light for a while anyway. It holds good for about three minutes and then the flame begins working to the front. If the film is a light one I cut the compensarc down to 40 amps and with a good long arc it comes into its own and burns a good, steady light, with very little noise. The funny part of it is that the other machine takes the 60 amps like a duck takes to water and burns the carbons in fine shape, with very little noise. In the sketch herewith, I give the setting of the carbons and also the wiring from the compensarc to the machines. I use Bio carbons, top and bottom. Have cleaned all vent holes in the lamphouse. Our power is very unsteady, especially at this time of the year when the city is thawing out hydrants with electricity. Have tried reversing the positive and negative sides but it's worse than ever then.

Well, Brother Perry, I am not sure but what I am stuck, too. In the first place, there is no "positive" and "negative" to alternating current. Each carbon is alternately positive and negative. It is possible that the roaring sound is due to vibration in the lamphouse. Try holding something firmly against the two doors of the lamphouse for a moment and see if the sound is diminished. I do not see any reason why this condition should obtain with one lamp and not with the other. But, even so, this ought not to affect the burning of the carbons. As to the slanting of the lamp and the setting of the carbons, I would refer you to pages 204 to 212, inclusive, of the Handbook. If any of our correspondents have had a similar experience or can offer any suggestion to Brother Perry, let them stand forth and be heard.

The Chambless Motor-Drive.

Brother James Chambless has done what every manufacturer should do, viz.: sent in actual working models of his motor drive for our examination. He also sends directions for their installation. Brother Chambless says, and I know his words to have a large foundation in fact, that the only time he has had any trouble whatever is where the device was not properly attached to the machine and that a great many operators do not seem to have sufficient knowledge or ingenuity to properly adjust a mechanical device. I have examined these models carefully. They are well constructed and apparently made of good material. They are the best thing I have seen for the Edison machine and will do good service with the Power's Six, though I cannot see that they are superior to the regular Power's Six motor drive. Both with Brother Chambless' device and the Power's Six motor drive, the power is applied in an excellent way. But the Power's drive has the advantage of being on the off side of the machine, hence entirely out of the way; also it is very simple and has no chain. The Chambless drive, Power's Six model, can be used for the Motiograph and Standard machines. Taken altogether, I can heartily recommend Brother Chambless' device with the qualification noted as regards the Power's Six.



The directions for attaching to Edison machine are as follows: Photo 1 shows the device as made for Edison Exhibition Model, with parts broken away to show the method of attachment. Drill a ¼ inch hole to match A. When attachment has been placed in position, as shown, and gear D meshes with main driving gear F, bolt A to the frame with a quarter-inch bolt, and hook the link over gear shaft, as shown at B. Remove bar E by loosening screw C and, after placing hook on crank shaft, as shown, replace bar E and tighten screw C, which completes the job. Photograph 2 shows the attachment with its parts in place, ready to receive the belt. To put on the Power's Six attachment, first remove the machine crank and put the large sprocket wheel on the shaft in its place. Place driving chain over same. Loosen wing-nut on belt which holds the machine to its base and place V slot under it, retightening the wing-nut. There is a screw hole in the other end of the base of the attachment and a hole in base of machine to match. This completes the job. To attach to the model B Edison, drill a hole to match A in the sketch. Three and one-half inches up from point guide pins D and E. Mesh gears as D in the Exhibition Model; also attach link in the same way. Brother Chambless also sends picture of a field rheostat for small motor, which he says is excellent. It is made by the Ward Leonard Electric Company, but where that concern is located, deponent sayeth not.

The Best Gas.

Mr. H. M. Elliott, Chicago, Ill., rises to make the following remarks:

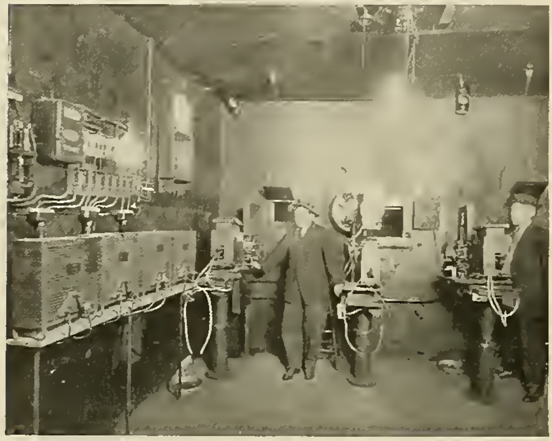
> April 5th issue, New York, asks about oxzone gas and wants to know if it is the best substitute for electricity. I worked around road picture shows under canvas and in halls, churches, etc., and the best gas I have found yet is the ozo carbide (oxygen-acetylene) gas outfits put out by Moore Hubbel, of this city. With this outfit you have to generate the gas before the show starts. It is stored in two tanks, similar to ordinary tanks such as gas is purchased in when one uses the manufactured article. One contains the ozo (oxygen) and the other the carbide (acetylene). This outfit costs quite a little more than the others; also it weighs a little more, but it does not cost nearly so much to operate, and once your tanks are filled you have no more bother for the evening. The outfit costs more in the beginning, but it is the cheapest in the long run. In limelight projection the hotter the light is the more light there is and the whiter it will be. Oxygen-acetylene is the hottest of all commercial gases. If I was ever to put a picture show on the road, I would use nothing but the ozo carbide outfit. But no road show for mine. I have been there once, though not as owner, and there is not enough money in it for the work required.

All of which is submitted to our gas using readers without comment, as I know nothing whatever concerning this particular outfit.

Little Rock Operating Room.

Mr. Benjamin Smart, Little Rock, Ark., contributes the following letter:

> I send you, under separate cover, photograph of my operating room and myself (on the right) and helper. The room is 12 x 12, with a 10 foot ceiling. There is one large window opening on the street, two doors, one leading to the stairway and one to the work room. I also have two vent pipes, one an inlet and one an outlet, with exhaust fan of the regular type in the latter—although I know you do not approve of that. There are also vents from each machine, but they were being painted when the picture was taken. On the right, but not in the picture, are two shelves, one above the other. One is for the rewinding and the other for carbons, etc. I do not expect you to publish this picture, as it is too large, 8 x 10.



Well now, brother Smart, take a good rubber at that picture and see if it looks like 8 x 10. I am going to criticise you pretty sharply on one or two things. The room is of good size, but how about those port shutters? I do not see any over the observation port at all, and the others are of the flapper type, which are next door to nothing. Also the arrangement for holding them up is not of the best. Your rheostats set right under your switches, and, especially in summer time, the effect will be to subject both switches and fuses to considerable heat, which is highly undesirable. My advice is to raise that shelf up above the switches and set the rheostats as near the ceiling as you can get them. It will be better for you and the switches too. As to the vent—well, it ought to be at least 288 sq. inches in area and not be obstructed by a fan.

A New One.

Mr. Frank Malcolm, Pomeroy, Washington, springs the following new one on the department:

> Am operating at the Grand Theater, at Pomeroy, Washington. Have a Power's Six-A machine, bought new three months ago. It is in good condition, and when putting a picture on the screen it is plain and nice, but when it comes to a title it shows a dark spot in the center. Have tried everything to eliminate it, but without result. The above trouble is the only one we have experienced. We have a new house just completed, with a seating capacity of 440; nice opera chairs. It has a first-class stage and up-to-date scenery; also an orchestra pit and six-piece orchestra. Travelers say it is the best small house in the northwest. Pomeroy has only 1,900 inhabitants and is located at the end of a branch railroad, 30 miles from the main line. I want to join the union. How is it best to do it? Pardon so many questions, but I'm in earnest. I enjoy operating. It is fascinating. Good is not enough for me. I want the best projection possible and am not satisfied till I obtain it.

I do not know of any reason in the world why a ghost should develop in the title and not in the picture itself. If any brother has had a similar difficulty, let him get up on his hind feet and tell us all about it. Glad to know you have such a nice little house and that you are endeavoring to put up the right kind of projection. Let the good work go on. Write Lee C. Hart, Int. Sec.-Treas., I. A. T. S. E., No. 63 W. Adams St., Chicago, about joining a union.

Short Circuit in Rheostat.

New York City wants to know what is the proper way to find a short circuit in a rheostat. If New York gets a short circuit in a rheostat, he will not have to look for it, since a short circuit means fireworks. Probably what he refers to is a ground, which is a very different matter. In fact, he could not very well have a short circuit in a rheostat, unless his coils or grids were grounded to the frame and the other wire of the circuit touched the frame at some point where its (the wire's) insulation was broken. If he has a ground in the rheostat—well, I dunno. My own way is just to get busy and hunt it up. Might be a coil touching the frame or might be the insulation bad at some point. If you get a ground in your rheostat, just set it on a slab of marble or some earthen plates or other insulating material. That is the easiest way out.

A Scheme.

Mr. E. J. Marshick, Detroit, Michigan, has evolved this scheme which certainly does credit to his ingenuity. He writes as follows:

> Enclosed find sample of ticket used in a scheme I evolved after reading friend Van Allen's letter in April 12th issue. I work it by the month and the lowest amount for that period was $2.00, which gave the merchants a limited amount of tickets, up to 500, according to their needs. For $3.00 a month I gave them up to the thousand limit. We had 100,000 tickets printed, used 20,000 the first week. I am not in the show business myself any more, but undertook the scheme for what there is in it. This is the way I worked it: I gave the manager of the theater a certain cash sum, say $50, for the four Saturday matinees each month. I contracted a ten-inch space in the paper for $10 per month, secured enough business men on the job to net me a little on the side for my trouble. The theaters furnished the tickets, which cost them $8.00 per hundred thousand. I contracted the theater and the business men for three months. If satisfactory, we continue. Get my cash for each month on delivery of tickets, thus saving myself the trouble of going around every Monday to collect. I run a dry cleaning store and in our window we have 80,000 tickets. Alongside of the tickets we have a sign "Guess how many tickets in the window." This has drawn a large crowd every day and has become the talk of the neighborhood. Who says the scheme will not work as well in the large city as well as in the small town? Have requests from different sections of the city, both from business men and managers of theaters, to establish the same scheme for them.

It really seems to me that our friend Marshick has sprung something of considerable value to the business. The giving away of these tickets for Saturday matinee will undoubtedly have the effect of starting a great many people going to the moving picture theaters, who were never inside of one in their lives. My judgment is, that instead of decreasing the business of the theaters involved, it would increase their cash attendance on other days. We are obliged to friend Marshick for setting forth his scheme for the benefit of all. His advertisement reads as follows:

> By contributing a small sum each month, we will give to the merchants as many tickets to the theater as they need, to be given free to their customers and families only. We advertise this Saturday show in the local papers as being given by the business men, and make customers go to the merchant for their tickets. This will draw new trade for the theater as well as increase business for the merchant. Better than trading stamps. Our representative will call on you.

By "a small sum" he means $2 to $3 for a limited number of tickets. He has fifty merchants in on the scheme already, totaling $135. His total expense is $75, which leaves $60 clear. By taking up the scheme individually, the theater could make the whole thing itself.

As To Rheostat Loss.

Mr. W. A. Norman, manager, the Magic Theater, Rockwell, Iowa, asks:

> Will you kindly advise me as to the amount of loss when I am using 20 amperes through a 220 volt adjustable rheostat from a 220 volt d. c. line. Please explain just what the loss is? Would also like you to offer some suggestion as to how to eliminate flicker. This time I am using 110 volt, a. c., through a compensarc, and the machine has a two-wing outside shutter. When I use a three-wing shutter, it makes the picture too dark. Enclosed find two-cent stamp for reply.

Replies are only made by mail when a minimum fee of $1.00 is enclosed. You will find your rheostat question fully, thoroughly and completely answered on pages 123 and 124 of the new Handbook, a 450-page book to be had from The Moving Picture World, price $2.50, which will answer not only that question, but hundreds of others for you. As to the flicker, that will always be present as long as you use a two-wing shutter. The reason for this you will find fully explained on pages 219, 220, 221, 222 and 223 of the Handbook. The remedy is to use a three-wing shutter of proper proportions, but if your current is 60 cycle and you use a three-winger, there will be a flashing of the light when the speed is increased to about 70 turns of the crank per minute. This is by reason of the fact that the blades of the three-wing shutter get into synchronism with one side of the alternations at about that speed. As to soaking carbons in salt brine, this matter is dealt with on page 212 of the Handbook, where you will find your question answered. I cannot give valuable space in the department to answering questions which have been previously dealt with in its columns many times, and which are fully set forth in the Handbook, a copy of which every operator and manager should have, not because I am its compiler, but because it contains 450 pages of matter which it took a year and a half of hard work to prepare; 423 pages being actual, solid reading matter and illustrations dealing with the practical side of projecting moving pictures and dealing with it in a practical way for the practical operator and manager.

Light Trouble.

Falls Creek, Pennsylvania, writes, enclosing money for book, and says:

> I would like to have your answer as to the following: I am projecting a 9 foot picture on a 48 foot throw, and have trouble getting a clear field. There are rainbow colors in the corners, as per sketch. I can get rid of them by moving carbons closer to condenser, but that causes a dark spot to appear in the center of the screen. I think my trouble lies in the condensers, but cannot find out whether they are 6½ or 7 inch lenses.

On page 356 of the Handbook you will find how to measure your condensing lenses. I think two 7½ condensing lenses will be the right thing for you. Try moving your lamphouse backward and forward and see what effect that has before you change lenses.

"THE BROKEN VOW" (Cines), May 2.—This two-reel picture is a genuine feature. Above all else are the backgrounds. They will appeal to all sorts and conditions—and they prove what can be accomplished by a director of artistic taste. Showing these backgrounds to full advantage is splendid photography. The tinting of sunlight is especially striking. The interiors, showing the home of the cattle owner, are elaborate and rich. Throughout the first reel there is a succession of pastoral scenes. There is a large flock of sheep in the opening. A little later we see a big herd of cattle on the way to market—the scene where they ford a stream is unusual. The picture of the rural lovers as they sit by the edge of the great cliff, the drowsy hound by their side, would be a setting for a painting. On the dramatic side the picture holds all the way—straight from first to last. The climax is tragic and sudden. The cattle owner who has lured the shepherdess from her old lover and installed her as his wife is bound against the tree under which the girl and the cattle herder had plighted their troth; the herder, who has returned to the estate after an absence of two years, takes the wife in his arms and jumps into space. The picture ends abruptly.

"THE WANDERER" (Biograph), May 3.—A mystery picture, like "The Top Floor Back," or, "Annie Climbs Upstairs," or "Little Sunbeam"; but unlike the latter, it has no real characters. The "wanderer" is a strolling musician whose artistic soul longs for the perfect note. The effect of his self-sacrificing life, symbolized in the influence of his music when heard by evildoers as it passes below, like Pippa, in Browning's poem, links two or three human lives together; but not at all dramatically. Henry Walthall is the musician, outcast like the true artist, and he marries Mae Marsh, who is woman and therefore also outcast. Of course, we, in our statement, are cruder than the picture, as the mind is cruder than the soul. Besides these, there are Lionel Barrymore and Claire McDowell, a couple in trouble who also overhear the strains. This gives Miss McDowell a chance to become most truly tragic heroine, but no chance to become a personality. We have used much space to say merely this. The picture is only art, not life. It stands on its scenes and they are fine. The photography is not as good as it should have been.

"BILL'S SWEETHEART" (Edison), May 3.—In a rough barroom in the West we find the heroine of this picture, an American girl, being played for and won at cards by a Greaser from a trader who owns her only by right of his having found her when a baby and brought her up. Then the noble hero plays for her and wins her from the Greaser. We can't see that the people like this sort of stuff and are somewhat pained to see it coming from Edison.

"THE CRAZY PROSPECTOR" (Essanay), May 3.—A good offering. There have been one or two something like it long ago; but that won't hurt it any. The situation is tragic and true enough to get across with a punch. The prospector is only silly, is pegging away at a cliff where he thinks there is gold. At the bar they laugh at him. He really finds gold. His daughter tries to keep him from blabbing; but he slips away. She finds him at the empty bar; all the "bunch" has gone to register his claim; but Broncho Billy, the stage driver, helps her. It is well put over.

"THE WAYWARD SON" (Kalem), May 3.—A melodrama with nothing new; yet it seemed to interest the audience. The wayward son, disowned and down-and-out, gets wind of a plot to rob his father. He "gets in bad" before he and the girl are able to warn his father and then comes the capture of the thugs. It is intelligently played by the Western company of the Kalem forces and the photography is first class.

"CLARENCE AT THE THEATER" (Lubin), May 3.—A farce bit almost too slight to notice seriously.

"FIXING AUNTY UP" (Lubin), May 3.—On the same reel is this farce in the well known style of A. D. Hotaling's company. We found it fairly entertaining ourselves and it seemed to please the audience. Aunty, played by Mae Hotely, won't let her three nieces get married to their three lovers till she is herself disposed of in wedlock. George Reehm writes to his dad, Robert Burns, to come and marry her. Tired of widowerhood, he comes; but is repelled by her looks, so the girls "fix her up" and she comes out of it a most charming young woman. Dad is now glad he came. E. W. Sargent is the author.

"GENERAL SCOTT'S PROTEGE" (Patheplay), May 3.—An Indian story pictured in beautiful backgrounds and fairly well photographed. There is action in it; but the action isn't new. Where Indian stories are not too often shown, this will make a good offering. It didn't take very well here.

"A MIDNIGHT BELL" (Selig), May 5.—The story of this old, rural melodrama is pretty widely known and as well liked. It has an old-time plot and is a popular, rather than an artistic offering, with plenty of the good, old horse-play. It didn't take strongly with a Broadway audience in the afternoon; but there were many that seemed impressed and we believe that it will go well in most places. We like the adaptation as acted and produced; the characters are pleasing. Clara Dale is nothing else but charming in the role of Annie Gray and Theodore Gamble makes his Ned Olcott a fine, manly lad. T. J. Commerford makes up into a perfect Squire, although his playing offered not enough contrast; he didn't seem sensitive at all times. Edith De Valmaseda, as the school teacher, adds much to the picture's charm. Lillian Leighton is a motherly Mrs. Gray. John Lancaster looks his part in the role of the justice of the peace. These are capably supported by a large cast. The producer is Charles French. The camera work is of good quality.

"THE TENDERFOOT'S MONEY" (Biograph), May 5.—There is freshness in this offering, though it deals with mining village doings that many pictures have shown. There's an idea behind it and it has a touch of irony which is uncommon enough to be acceptable. The "money" was "come by" in some evil way and we are not sorry to see the tenderfoot lose it. We watch it as it changes hands, until it finally rests with the least dishonest man, who dishonestly keeps it. The photographs are very clear in most of the scenes and the backgrounds (a bit of rocky mountain country) are worth seeing. Henry Walthall, Claire McDowell, Alfred Paget and others have roles.

"THE ANT-LION" (Patheplay), May 6.—A short picture showing how this creature lures his prey.

"THE CHATEAU OF BLOIS, FRANCE" (Patheplay), May 6.—Fine views of this great structure on the River Loire. It is to be regretted that all of the views were of different wings and that there was none of the whole.

"A TANGO TANGLE" (Essanay), May 6.—There is shown in this picture what we may believe is an authentic demonstration of the dance about which there is so much discussion—and which will go far to confirm all that has been said against it, especially in the opinion of non-dancers. In this respect the film may be said to be educational. The picture contains nothing other than the dancing to raise it out of the ordinary, either in acting or otherwise.

"THE JUDGMENT OF THE DEEP" (Lubin), May 6.—This picture is laid by the sea, the views of which will interest some. The story is nil—mechanical, almost painful. Where there is opportunity for acting, on the part of nearly the entire cast it is overdone—melodramatic, stagy.

"HATCHING CHICKENS" (Selig), May 6.—A very short reel showing a chick working out of its shell. This is the second chicken release from the same manufacturer in five days.

"A WELDED FRIENDSHIP" (Selig), May 6.—On the same reel. A picture without a thrill in it. There is at first a lapse of five years, followed shortly by another of twenty years. There is also a lapse of memory. The story is called an Alaskan romance, but somehow you don't feel as if you were in Alaska. Kathlyn Williams, in a dual role, has the lead.

"WHEN GREEK MEETS GREEK" (Edison), May 6.—This story is written by Mary Fuller, and she and Charles Ogle have the leads. It is a pretty story and will be heartily enjoyed. The work of Miss Fuller and Mr. Ogle is of their best. Miss Fuller portrays a stenographer who has a will of her own; she is continually at odds with a somewhat forceful employer, who has a son in love with her. When the time arrives, however, she tells the son that not only does she care nothing for him, but, in answer to an insinuating remark, for the father either. There are several comedy situations. The climax, in which the two leads hold the stage, and in which the stenographer discovers she really does love the employer, is finely carried out.

"OMENS AND ORACLES" (Vitagraph), May 6.—This is the third of the Belinda series. It is written by Eliza G. Harral. It will make a lot of fun in a great many houses. The character work of Miss Florence Radinoff as the boarding-house keeper is excellent. Norma Talmadge as Belinda is good. There is a competent cast.

"PEDRO'S TREACHERY" (Lubin), May 5.—A picture of the Mexican border by Romaine Fielding and his company. The story is not original or planned to be most effective. The photography is very clear in most of the scenes.

"THE HEART OF AN ACTRESS" (Kalem), May 5.—There is little that is new in this story and it is not convincing as probable life. It has been acted with dignity and grace and perfectly photographed. As an offering, it stands on its scenes, not on its unbelievable story. Alice Joyce plays the actress who tries to give back her lover (Tom Moore) to the other girl, in whom she has found an old benefactress.

"AN OLD ACTOR" (Selig), May 5.—An old story done in pictures; it makes a good, interesting offering. In the story, the actor is described as playing in Hamlet. He is found to be too old to play the grave digger and is discharged; but comes back at night, puts on Hamlet's robes and dies on the throne. This makes very appropriate the quotation, "After this is silence." The picture makes the drama "Richelieu," and, even in this, the quotation is not very much out of place; but we think that the story was better as first told. This old actor is played well by Frank Clark and he is ably supported by Bessie Eyton, H. W. Otto, T. Santschi and W. Hutchinson. Colin Campbell is author and producer.

"BINGLES MENDS THE CLOCK" (Vitagraph), May 5.—A dull offering which made very little laughter. When J. Lackaye mends the clock it goes backward; but that was the only real laugh in the picture this morning. There is a bit of acting in poor taste which made one or two laugh. Flora Finch has a role. F. Thompson produced it from the script of Eliza Harrel.

"THE ONE HUNDRED DOLLAR ELOPEMENT" (Edison), May 5.—The price, $100, was what the girl's dad had to pay the young man in the case to withdraw. You see, he was not just the kind of man that was wanted. The offering is clearly told, pleasing and commendable for common sense that will do no harm and may do a lot of good. The best thing about it is that it teaches a lesson without being a sermon. The best character in the picture is Mrs. Bechtel's drawing of Nelson's mother. Gertrude McCoy plays the girl and Edward Boulden the youth Nelson. The principal of the school from which the girl tries to elope is played by Mrs. C. J. Williams. Bigelow Cooper plays the girl's father. Mrs. E. F. Fenello, the authoress, deserves commendation. The photography is clear.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY" (May 5).—A good number; it covers a pretty wide range of interest. Many of these items would have been better if the date at which they were taken had been flashed. Those views of the grain ships getting out of the ice-locked harbor on the north shore of Lake Superior should surely have had the date.

"BILL" (Essanay), April 30.—A burlesque, with "Billy" Mason in the leading role. The situation is not new and we have seen it worked out to more advantage. Mr. Mason is good in many kinds of roles, but is hardly a great success in this. The photography is clear.

"THE BURGLAR WHO ROBBED DEATH" (Selig), April 30.—The burglar is a broken down doctor and finds while following his new calling of burglar that his professional services are greatly needed by a child. So he who had broken in to steal remains to cure. This situation is interesting; but it might have been worked up more effectively. Some time and attention were lost on unimportant details. The picture is fairly well acted and clearly photographed, and will be reasonably popular. It is written by Lanier Bartlett and produced by Lem Parker. Kathlyn Williams plays the mother of the child and Harold Lockwood the doctor.

"THE EIGHTH NOTCH" (Kalem), April 30.—There were dramatic possibilities in this situation that were utilized, but not wholly developed, and, though it is a good offering, it might have been even stronger. There is one place where it is not at once clear; it comes after the woman finds the feudist's gun with the eighth notch and from it thinks that he has killed her husband, because the other notches represent others of her family. The struggle between the sheriff and the crowd that wants to lynch the feudist, before it is found that he is innocent, doesn't convince strongly. The qualities of the offering are the truthfulness of the characters and the setting, and especially the ragged children. The photography is not as good as it might have been.

"A COUPON COURTSHIP" (Kalem), April 30.—On the same reel is this little offering that will please, because it gets hold of something actual. It will especially appeal to men whose wives collect tobacco coupons and also it shows two ways of buying a piano. Ruth Roland has said that she will marry the man who gets a piano, offered for a million tobacco coupons. John Brennan and Jack McDermott smoke, smoke, smoke, to get it; neither succeed. Marshal Neilan saves his money and buys it. The farce made good laughter.

"THE MEXICAN'S DEFEAT" (Patheplay), April 30.—The opening scenes of this offering promise a realistic story of actual people; but it straightway becomes very much like a travesty and actually caused some merriment at the wrong place. Those opening scenes couldn't have been better—they alone are truly worth while. George Gebhardt plays the lead. There is some good scenery.

"THE PANAMA CANAL TODAY" (Patheplay), April 30.—On the same reel is this offering that will surely be appreciated by all who see it. We have looked at many motion pictures of the Canal, but are sure that we never have seen any that were more newsy or interesting. The photography is good, too. The only shortcoming is that there is too little of it. Spectators will want more.

"A RELUCTANT CINDERELLA" (Edison), April 30.—A modern story in farcical vein that caused a good deal of laughter and pleased the audience. Its quality comes from the good things that break out in it now and then rather than from the situation itself, which, after all, is plainly contrived. There are pretty scenes at a dinner-dance, perfectly photographed. Elsie MacLeod is the heroine and is pretty in her evening frock. Her shoe is tight and she pushes it off during the dinner. It is kicked away and she can't get it. Arthur Housman plays the other lead. C. J. Williams has made a light-hearted and, at times, sparkling production. Alice Williams is the authoress.

"A WINDOW ON WASHINGTON PARK" (Vitagraph), April 30.—A picture that will please by its sentiment rather than by the strength of its art. A young man living on Washington Square, New York City, looks out and sees an old man, whom he invites in. The stranger tells a story, and it turns out that he is the youth's grandfather. It might have been taken in any park and the view of the "Little Church Around the Corner" might have been of almost any church. Charles Kent is strong in the role of the old man; but Tom Powers is not so good as the youth. Florence Turner has a small role, as has Courtenay Foote. The photography is fair. The picture is produced by Larry Trimble from Marguerite Andrews' script.

"THE ABSENT-MINDED MR. BOOB" (Selig), May 1.—One will be likely to conclude that the author of this farce, Malcolm Douglas, deserves more credit than the producer, C. H. France. Its situation has been approached in other offerings; but it is cleverly arranged and might have been made most effective. There were a number of laughs, but it was burlesqued, out of all humanity and amused the few rather than the many. The photography is clear.

"SOME CHICKENS" (Selig), May 1.—On the same reel; and when it —the title—came out on the screen, every man sat up. For what? Just chickens—leghorns, cochins, and other gallacious fowls. They were clearly photographed and all that; but, really, ought they to have been called "some" chickens? "Just" chickens would have been better; then we wouldn't have been disappointed.

"THE STORY THE DESERT TOLD" (Essanay), May 1.—A dramatic story of the desert that is new, though it is along well-trodden lines. It has a good punch and is a first-class offering. Arthur Mackley's company puts it over, and it is naturally and intelligently acted. It shows how a sheriff, taking an outlaw across the desert, finds a child of the village abandoned and dying of thirst. The bandit has to wait while the sheriff takes the kid to safety and when they get back to him he is dead. The desert scenes are very interesting.

"BUNNY VERSUS CUTEY" (Vitagraph), May 1.—There is much laughter while Bunny is doing gymnastics to reduce his weight, and the great comedian is truly most amusing going through the new wrinkles to give muscle or reduce flesh. The little farce features these funny things and it seemed to be liked.

"USE OF DYNAMITE BY UNITED STATES ENGINEERING CORPS" (Vitagraph), May 1.—Clear photographs show how explosives are handled by Uncle Sam's boys. There are some thrilling explosions pictured.

"THE VEIL OF SLEEP" (Lubin), May 1.—An old-style story; its chief assets are good and very clearly photographed sleepwalking scenes and generally clear camera work. It is set in the West, in a mining town. E. C. Hall is the author and L. B. Carlton the producer. The sleepwalker is Vivian Prescott. Jack Standing plays opposite to her.

"IF WE ONLY KNEW" (Biograph), May 1.—There is an easily recognized Biograph style about this offering, which tells a not improbable and interesting story clearly. There is nothing great or even very clever about it; but it is somewhat emotional and well acted. It is set in and around one of the beautiful places in California and has some surf scenes along a sandy beach. Blanche Sweet and Henry Walthall play a married couple whose little girl falls asleep in a dory on the sand and is carried by the tide out to sea. It is some time before her parents find that she has been rescued.

"BURIED TREASURE" (Melies), May 1.—A practical joke story in an interesting setting—around Sydney Harbor. The acting is able and pleasing and the photography is fair. There is nothing very startling or new in the story. It makes a fair offering.

"THE HOME OF THE TERNS" (Melies), May 1.—Terns are birds living around the sea like the gulls, and the "home" referred to is an island off North Queensland. The picture is well photographed and shows plenty of terns flying about or resting on the ground. The eggs laid on the sand will interest.

"THE PARTING ETERNAL" (Patheplay), May 1.—Two lovers are parted; one becomes a nun, the other a priest. They come face to face at the priest's first mass. The story is not new or probable, but is likely to interest some. It offers a chance to the scornful to mock—three or four did so and very loudly. The large audience didn't show any surprise at this. The photography is clear and the acting intelligent. The leads are taken by Betty Gray and Donald Mackenzie.

"FATTY'S BUSY DAY" (Kalem), May 2.—Pretty mechanical stuff for a comedy. A fat man tries several employments during the day and gets into trouble on each occasion.

"OLD WOMEN OF THE STREETS OF NEW YORK" (Kalem), May 2.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this picture in line with the news films put out by this company. It is interesting as showing the methods of making a living pursued by many women advanced in years.

"THEIR STEPMOTHER" (Selig), May 2.—Here is a pretty story. It is written by Hettie G. Baker—a picture that will strike many as one which only a woman could write. It touches a phase of domestic life which will appeal strongly to the feminine heart. Two motherless children read a tale of a heartless stepmother. They are told by their father they are to have a new mother. They decided to leave home. As they wander away they are found by the prospective stepmother, who on learning of their decision takes them to her home and there keeps them until she has won their hearts. You see the finish? Kathlyn Williams is the future stepmother, and it is a fine characterization she gives us. She will win other hearts than those of the two little ones.

"CINDERS" (Vitagraph), May 2.—Here is a story the theme of which is "ag'in natur'." No man in poverty and alone in the world will sell a splendid dog for a dollar in order to buy flowers for a sick child friend. He might do it to save a life; hardly under circumstances short of that. George Stanley and Anne Schaefer do their work in faultless style, but they are handicapped by a story that is not strong.

"THE GIRL BACK EAST" (Lubin), May 2.—There are but three characters in this picture, and one of them has but little to do. Two men in the mountains—it may have been once upon a time—are in love with the same girl as is proved by the looks they bestow upon the same photograph. One is ill; the other, though a stranger; decides to nurse him back to health, which he does. Then he prepares to depart. The first man sees in a newspaper a notice of the marriage of the girl in the case. He tells the second. They shake hands. There is a lack of real heart interest.

"GROUNDLESS SUSPICION" (Edison), May 2.—A good story of a foolish wife who tries to conceal from her husband the fact that their infant is blind and who in his absence secures the services of a specialist in an effort to restore the sight of the little one. The husband is aware that something is wrong, but of course gets the wrong view. He bursts in on the surgeon, the wife and the maid just after the operation has been pronounced successful. It is too bad that the husband was made to draw a pistol as he entered the room—the hackneyed action marred an otherwise splendidly executed picture. Laura Sawyer and Benjamin Wilson were the wife and husband, Jessie McAllister the maid, and Richard Allen the specialist.

"LIQUID AIR" (Patheplay), May 2.—An interesting demonstration of the possibilities of liquid air.

"WINTER IN UPPER ENGADINE, SWITZERLAND" (Patheplay), May 2.—On the same reel as the foregoing are these fine views of snow-covered mountains and villages nestling among them. The best is of a ride up the inclined railway on Mount Schatzalp. The photography is unusually good. A picture that will charm.

Independent

"THE NORTHERN SPY" (Bison 101), May 10.—A two-part picture that is half Indian story and half Civil War story. It is an extremely well made offering and where this kind of story has not been told too often, will be very effective. In the story there is nothing new except in the arrangement. The human situations are fine; they have always been effective and haven't lost their power yet. The Indian raid scenes are fair. The battle scenes during the war are full of beauty; there is one that goes ahead of anything of its kind that we remember seeing. It gives us a glimpse of the charge of a long line of infantry and cavalry. This is full of sweep and a big thrill. The photography is excellent throughout.

"BLACK JACK'S ATONEMENT" (Powers), May 23.—This story is simple in plot, but after the first few rather choppy scenes, it grips the attention and holds it without ceasing till the end of the reel. Harry Pollard appears as the sailor who shanghaied a man and then repented of it, after learning that he had a wife and two small children, one of them a lame newsboy, upon whom the family relied for support. The diving scenes are quite exciting. Simple and strong, with good heart appeal.

"EUREKA" (Imp), May 5.—This is a strong two-reel conception and well acted, particularly the part of the woman, taken by Helen Gardner. The photography is not first class, however, and there is a certain unpleasantness about the end of the story. The scenes between the sailor who found the woman on the beach, where the waves had tossed her, and the woman herself were nicely handled and made a strong appeal. Her memory is lost and she marries the sailor, at her own suggestion, after learning that he loves her. When her memory returns she remembers that she is already married and this drives her mad. The sub-titles in this are long and ungrammatical in places.

"BILLY'S FIRST QUARREL" (Gem), May 6.—Billy and his wife quarrel. She pretends to commit suicide and later he also makes a like pretense. An old idea handled in good, live fashion.

"CALL HIM WHISKERS" (Gem), May 6.—This, on same reel with above, is merely an illustrated joke. The woman sees a sign, "Whiskers Died Here," and thinks her dog is dead, his name being "Whiskers." Not a big enough idea to be worth while.

"ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 60" (Universal), April 30.—An unusually good number of the Weekly, bristling with timely features. We have glimpses of Dr. Friedmann, Secretary of State Bryan, the Croton Dam, a steeplechase in England, the Old Guard parade in New York, see some splendid views of lower Manhattan, and learn how the dump heap tin cans are melted up into solder.

"THE SHARK GOD" (Champion), May 5.—A slight plot, located in Honolulu, with natives attired in breech clouts for actors. The scenes are artistic and well taken, but exhibitors catering to particular audiences will find perhaps that the close views of these almost naked natives is rather objectionable. The story has to do with certain superstitions in the islands and at the close the wicked lover goes out to sea and gives himself up to the shark god.

"BETTY'S BANDIT" (Frontier), May 20.—A Western burlesque, in which the hero impersonates his bandit rival. He catches the girl and marries her by force. But later the real bandit gets her and the hero has trouble saving her from him. The photography is good and there are some fairly amusing moments in this.

"THE BOY SCOUTS TO THE RESCUE" (Nestor), May 21.—This is a typical boy's picture, enacted by boys and we believe boys will be its chief admirers. But other people will undoubtedly like it too, as the photography is excellent and the story exciting. It shows us how the Boy Scouts save the sheriff from death and help round up a band of cattle and horse thieves. An interesting picture yarn.

"WHEN LOVE IS YOUNG" (Crystal), May 11.—This half-reel contains a mixture of drama and comedy, the latter predominating at the end. Pearl White makes a very attractive heroine in Colonial costume. The windup, where she fires a gun and each of the lovers believes the other has shot himself, is amusing.

"HIS AWFUL DAUGHTER" (Crystal), May 11.—On same reel with above. Naughty Nell does not like her father's selections in the way of admirers and contrives to get rid of each of them. He finally consents to her marriage with Ned. This is also fairly entertaining.

"THE SHERIFF'S RIVAL" (Frontier), May 8.—This is not a very convincing story, but it holds the attention nicely. The handsome young gambler and the sheriff love the same girl. The sheriff learns that there is a reward out for his rival and resigns his office rather than arrest him. He advises him, however, to ride across the Mexican border and stay there, which answers the purpose, as it leaves the girl to himself. Breezy and well pictured.

"THE UNSEEN INFLUENCE" (Victor), May 2.—This story, by Bernard Musson, is a type which has many friends among picturegoers. James Kirkwood and Gertrude Robinson are brother and sister. He is an artist and leads a fast life, neglecting his sweetheart for his model. The sister is a mission worker, and after her death her spirit returns and exerts a beneficent influence over those who knew her in life. This influence eventually turns her brother back to the strait and narrow path. The photography is good and the film a good offering of its kind.

"A WOMAN LOVED" (Imp), May 12.—In this offering, the lover of two girls tries to decide which he most desires by pretending he has lost an arm and had his face disfigured. The scheme works out to his satisfaction, but we fear such a plan will lose the sympathy of the average audience for him. The story is not overly strong and the pictures are out of focus in some places.

"THE OYSTER INDUSTRY" (Imp), May 10.—Interesting views, showing how oysters are raked up from the bottom of the sea, opened for canning, etc. Incidentally there is an interesting exhibit of pearls taken from the bivalves.

"LEO MAKES GOOD" (Imp), May 10.—This, on same reel with foregoing, shows how a struggling musician borrows a dress suit from his roommate, a waiter, and makes a hit at a big reception. There is some good comedy in the picture.

"WHERE CHARITY BEGINS" (Crystal), May 27.—Helen neglects her own mother to go into the slums and look after a sick woman. Her mother becomes sick and almost dies while she is away. The story wavers between comedy and tragedy and this uncertainty weakens it very much. The end is not as strong as might be expected.

"SLAVERY DAYS" (Rex), May 22.—A very strong two-reel number, which tells in graphic pictures the old story of the octoroon who switched babies in order that her own might not be sold into slavery. The real daughter of the planter and his wife grows up as the property of the changeling. Later the hero, not knowing she is a slave, falls in love with her. The close is dramatic, the octoroon finally acknowledging the truth of the situation. She and her own daughter perish in a burning house and the real daughter is given her proper place in the family. Marguerita Fischer and Edna Maison play the parts of the two girls. Good photography and first class melodrama.

"SONS OF A SOLDIER" (Eclair), May 7.—There is a lot of good acting and some elaborate costuming in this three-reel offering, but those are its main points of interest. It follows, so far as we could understand, the lives of members of the Primrose family, from 1776 down to 1912. War scenes are given in Revolutionary and Civil War times and later there are imaginary scenes from a war between Japan and America. Washington and Lincoln are impersonated and later Fred Truesdale appears as Woodrow Wilson, whom he resembles strongly. But as a story this lacks any compelling interest and when it is all over the observer is considerably puzzled as to its intent.

"THE ANGEL OF THE CANYON" (American), May 12.—A human and appealing picture, with a number of fresh, natural touches in it. Kerrigan, Richardson, Pauline Bush and Jessalyn van Trump play the leads. There is a double love story, which becomes rather involved and then comes out happily at the close. This makes a very satisfactory and desirable offering.

"MY LADY'S BOOT" (Majestic), May 13.—A love incident in Civil War times, nicely pictured, without the usual attendant warfare. The Union officer intercepts Virginia in the woods and pulls a boot from her foot, thinking to find a dispatch. Later, when the war is over, he replaces the boot on her foot and wins her heart and hand. Some rather pretty effects in this.

"A COUNTRY GIRL'S ROMANCE" (Majestic), May 4.—A familiar plot, worked up into a fairly entertaining story. The country girl temporarily forgets her country lover, Joe, and elopes with a city man, who had come to the farm in an automobile. It turns out that the auto was stolen and Joe gets to the station just in time to save the girl.

"A CRUEL SUSPICION" (Reliance), May 7.—Bobby's sick spells bring trouble to his parents, as his benefactor is always the same handsome young man, impersonated by Irving Cummings. As the latter brings medicine to the sick boy's room, the father appears on the scene and there is a terrific hand-to-hand conflict. This is not a very powerful story, but it certainly holds the attention.

"BILLY'S NEW WATCH" (Majestic), May 11.—A very good half-reel comedy, in which the hero thinks the old gentleman who bumped into him took his watch. He proceeds to choke the old gentleman and takes his watch away from him, thinking he is getting back his own. After that the plot rolls along to a happy conclusion, in which the old gentleman turns out to be his best girl's uncle.

"LIQUID AIR EXPERIMENTS" (Majestic), May 11.—This, on same reel with above, shows Prof. Wood, of Johns Hopkins University, making some interesting demonstrations with liquid air. "Seeing is believing" and these experiments are very entertaining. A good reel.

"THE SHERIFF" (Reliance), May 10.—A film story located in Oklahoma, somewhat conventional in development, but with some pleasing effects. The outlaw turns out to be the sheriff's brother, but the sheriff brings him to justice. The outlaw writes a pathetic note and jumps over a cliff. The close was very effectively done. The opening views on the big cattle ranch were attractive.

"THE GREAT HARMONY" (American), May 17.—This is a story with strong heart appeal. The old musician is relieved from his work as organist and a younger man employed. The young man, impersonated by Warren Kerrigan, has sympathy for the old organist and goes to the city to sell one of his compositions, if possible. He succeeds and brings back a big check. Later he wins the organist's daughter. This is nicely pictured and generally acceptable.

"THE KISS" (American), May 15.—An original conception, with a very pretty girl acting as goat-herd in the hills. The artist promptly falls in love with her and kisses her unexpectedly. Her father has told her that kisses were poison, and she retaliates by feeding him poison berries. Later she repents and he is taken to her home where he recovers. The significance of the shotgun and revolver toward the close was a little obscure, unless the old man was proposing a duel. There are some wonderfully attractive effects in this, but the close must be regarded as disappointing and a little unnatural, as the young man was sent away.

"BARRED FROM THE MAILS" (Thanhouser), May 11.—In this picture a young mother actually tries to send her baby to her sister by parcels post. It is tagged and taken by the postman to the postoffice, where it is finally rejected on the ground that live animals are inadmissible. There is novelty in this picture, but the baby seemed in such genuine distress at times from rough handling, that it may make some difference in the reception of the picture with an audience.

"THE DRUMMER OF THE EIGHTH" (Broncho), May 28.—This two-reel war story sounds a deeply pathetic note at the close. It shows us in the beginning a small boy who wants to go to war. His parents will not let him do so, but he gets up in the night, finds his drum and goes out with the volunteers. There are some splendid war scenes, with tense, close fighting in the trenches and over broad fields. The drummer boy is wounded and taken to the hospital. He writes home telling his parents to expect him soon after the war ends, but dies and is brought home in a coffin. Well pictured and nicely acted throughout.

"THE FOREMAN OF THE JURY" (Keystone), May 22.—A burlesque in the courtroom, which occasionally rises to laughable moments. Mr. Bingo finds a necklace and gives it to Mary. Later, when foreman of the jury, he finds he is helping try the man who is charged with stealing the necklace in the first place. His conscience leads him to reveal the truth. A reel of pure nonsense, but hardly the Keystone's best.

"HUBBY'S JOB" (Keystone), May 19.—If the main situation in this were not so questionable, the outcome would be more appealing. As it stands, it is merely a foolish predicament on the part of a married woman, posing as single, with a "rough house" finish.

"BETWIXT LOVE AND FIRE" (Keystone), May 19.—In this half-reel, which appears with the above, there is a lot of hilarity. You can feel the humor coming up as the situations progress and the general havoc wrought by the jealous husband toward the close is very funny. It is exceptionally good of its type.

"THE MISER" (Kaybee), May 23.—This two-reel offering is worthy of especial commendation from the fact that it tells a story that is different and appealing. The character of the old miser is acted most admirably and lifts the whole picture into a class by itself. The theme is not new, but it is consistently worked out, and we can plainly see the manner in which the pretty young niece finds her way into his heart. The sharp engagement between the Indians and soldiers in the second reel gave the hero his chance to prove himself worthy of the girl's hand. A good offering.

"HER SISTER'S SECRET" (Thanhouser), May 6.—A nicely pictured offering, showing the manner in which two sisters, one of them ill, arrive in California, land of flowers and sunshine. A pretty love story develops, James Cruze playing the attractive young neighbor. The invalid accepts all his presents as coming to herself, but in this she was not altogether correct, as the story shows.

"THE OTHER GIRL" (Thanhouser), May 9.—A light plot strung together largely for the purpose of including the annual flower parade at Pasadena, with its handsome floats and chariots. The college boy's best girl refuses to drive his vehicle and he chooses a pretty girl to take her place. The girl also wins his heart in the end.

"THE TOLL OF WAR" (Bison), May 13.—A production in three reels, the last of which pictures graphically the assassination of Lincoln. The last reel is very interesting and overshadows the first two, which are conventional war pictures centering about an attractive girl spy, portrayed by Miss Ethel Grandon. Her role is not one to awaken much sympathy, as she is called upon to steal a dispatch from her lover. The war scenes were strong. but the movement of troops meaningless so far as the plot was concerned till toward the last. The portrayal of Lincoln was better from the full face view than from the profile; the scene at the death bed suggested famous pictures of the dying president. William Clifford gave a splendid portrayal of the assassin, Booth, and the portion of the story beginning with the shooting at the theater was its strongest part.

"FOR LOVE OF THE FLAG" (Kay-Bee), May 16.—A two-reel offering, which is well pictured and well acted. It gets a very dashing and interesting start, but we could not look upon the ending of the last reel as anything but far-fetched and disappointing. The motive of the wayward young officer, Ashford, for killing the squaw, Winnie, is not clear. In the forepart of the picture the scenes in which Ashford is reprimanded for dancing and assaults his superior officer, are very well done. and the later scenes leading up to the attack on the fort, which he is forced to lead, are also strongly presented. The photography is good.

"THE SMUGGLER'S DAUGHTER" (Rex), May 8.—A two-part tale of the seaside with some interesting characters, especially a strong man who nobly gets into trouble, because he will neither do wrong nor tell the revenue officer of the wrong that the smuggler's daughter is doing. He manages to escape and is the means of saving the revenue officer's daughter from rough smugglers. The ending shows the capture of the evil doers and the unraveling of the whole difficulty. There is one exceptionally fine scene in which we are shown the revenue launch coming over the tossing waters. It is most effective. Wilfred Lucas is the producer and plays the leading role. He certainly is a good actor.

"A WISE JUDGE" (Eclair), May 11.—A very slight story of a middle-aged couple who quarrel and of a judge who takes a clever way to show them that they don't really desire to separate. It gives a chance for acting; but does not get over with any punch.

"MANUFACTURE OF STEEL" (Eclair), May 1.—On the same reel is this industrial, which is truly a big offering and will be liked by all kinds of people. It is a picture of wonders such as are found in the tremendous factories at Pittsburgh and shows the steel furnaces and glimpses of the factories. The photography is clear.

FOR THE FANS.

Charles R. Holmes sends in this budget of notes from San Francisco:

It is reported that G. M. Anderson will vary his western releases with a series of pictures featuring vaudeville favorites. Kolb and Dill and Rock and Fulton are said to be among those scheduled. The pictures will be made at the Niles Studio.

Mr. Anderson also plans to take a number of pictures on the O'Day ranch near Dixon. Mr. Anderson is part owner of this ranch of 800 acres and will have free run of the place.

Miss Iva Shepherd, late of Selig and Ammex, has joined the Universal to appear under the Nestor brand.

Miss Florence Oakley, formerly of the Belasco stock, has joined the Selig company. The Belasco stock is an enterprise of Fred. Belasco, brother of David.

"HIAWATHA" AT THE BERKELEY.

Keen interest has been aroused in educational circles in the "Hiawatha" picture masque which opened a two weeks engagement at the Berkeley Theater, New York, May 3rd, with Robert Stuart Pigott reciting the poem as it is enacted on the screen. Some of the most prominent educators are giving the exhibition their hearty support and a large attendance of school children is assured for the three special performances each Saturday. For these presentations Mr. Moore has had the Indians make up some very pretty souvenirs which will be presented to the little folks.

"Hiawatha" is a story interesting to all classes of people. The New York Sun devoted more than half a page to reviewing the play from which we quote the following:

"Even Bill, the Harlem plumber's helper, who has taken his Bertha through the gate, thinking this must be a good snappy wild west show, soon falls into the spell that so easily convinces one that surely this is Gitche Gumee and that the trees across the lake are the 'pine trees ever sighing, ever singing.'"

"ASHES OF THREE" STORY BY STEWART WHITE.

On Monday, May 26, "Ashes of Three" will be released by the American Film Mfg. Co. This story was written by Stewart Edward White, the famous novelist. The plot centers about the rejuvenation of a worthless character. This is Jack Kerrigan and the story was written by Mr. White, who lives in Santa Barbara, Cal., where the American's studio is located, and was especially designed to show Jack at his best. You will like Kerrigan in the part of the parentless child. The story is in two reels.

ETHEL CLAYTON.

Ethel Clayton is the star of the Lubin Company; she is an extremely beautiful woman, about twenty-one years of age. Last summer Miss Clayton was with the stock company stationed at Port Elizabeth, Maine. Some of the Sea Coast pictures made were very thrilling and noticeable for the daring of this charming actress.

"The Tragedy of Big Eagle Mine"

Two-Reel Kalem Release.

By George Blaisdell.

JANE WOLFE in this picture has full opportunity for the display of her talent as an actress. She carries the role of an Indian woman, a woman who marries a white hunter whom she has nursed following an accident. Her portrayal of the undemonstrative native is marked throughout by an entire absence of the theatrical, the melodramatic. It is an accomplishment in the art of expression—and of repression. Laughing Water has five years of happiness, following her union with Tom Morton, the trapper, who fell under the great figure-four bear trap and in his convalescence fell in love with her. Following the departure of her husband and their young son for the East, in response to a letter from a widowed mother, her life is one of loneliness, of ostracism from all the Indians in the camp to which she returns—with the exception of her brother, Big Eagle, who remains steadfast. The deserted Indian woman is a pathetic figure. She will carry the interest and the sympathy of any audience. There is a strong scene where Laughing Water enters the empty cabin and calls for her husband and for her son; she looks into favorite hiding places, as if suspecting a joke is being played on her. The gray look that comes over her face as she realizes her position goes straight to the heart. When, twenty years later, a broken woman, she looks into the face of a well-dressed young man and recognizes her own son, in the likeness of his father, you feel what she feels.

Scene from "The Tragedy of Big Eagle Mine" (Kalem).

Scene from "The Tragedy of Big Eagle Mine" (Kalem).

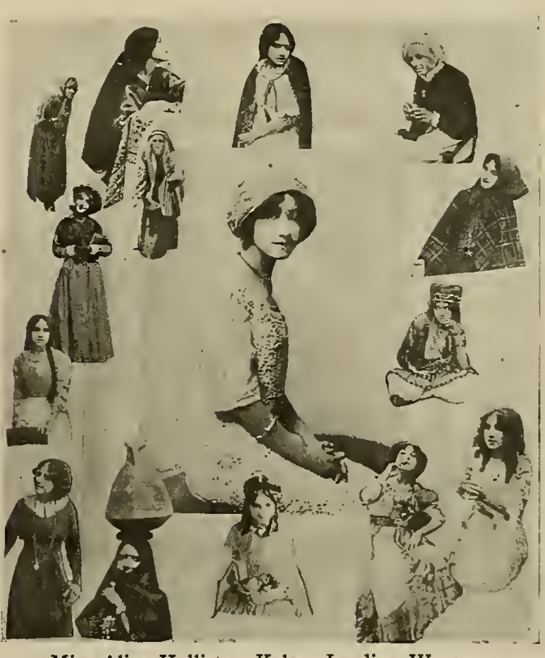
There is a good cast. Carlyle Blackwell has two roles—the trapper who marries the Indian woman, and, later, that of the son who, with his bride, goes to the West on the honeymoon and visits the gold mine which all these years the father had controlled. The trapper, grown older, is portrayed by. Knute Rahmn. Jack Hoxie is Big Eagle, the brother of Laughing Water. He gives a fine characterization of the Indian chief. There is a four-footed member of the cast who will arouse much interest. It is a bear. He comes into the picture at the third or fourth scene. He is a big fellow, and a fine specimen of the black species. Also he is a good actor. He wallows in a brook so close to the camera that he fills the screen, but he minds his own business, is concerned with no doings of humans about him. He will excite the youngsters and many of the elders.

There are splendid backgrounds, of mountain and stream; the country is wild, such as is suited for a setting of primitive Indian life. The Indian camp is laid out in convincing fashion—even to the small target wherewith the young idea is taught to shoot with bow and arrow. Entirely apart from its pictorial value, however, the story carries on its dramatic merit. It is a pleasure to see an Indian picture devoid of the time-worn features that pall on so many picture-goers—but yet, it must be conceded, still are popular in many houses. Nevertheless, "The Tragedy of Big Eagle Mine" will appeal to all. It will be released June 7.

"LITTLE MARY" AGAIN IN PICTURES.

When, a few weeks ago, David Belasco began to perfect his arrangements for next season's tour of "A Good Little Devil," which has just closed its extraordinary run of 152 performances at the Republic Theater, he was confronted by a demand for this charming fairy-play several times greater than the possible supply. In other words, every manager in the country was demanding "A Good Little Devil" during its first season out of New York. On the other hand, a series of long engagements in Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore and a few other large cities left no possible open time wherewith to satisfy the public in other cities. Through an arrangement between Mr. Belasco and Daniel Frohman, managing director, and Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players, all the wonderful scenes and effects of "A Good Little Devil" will be shown in motion pictures.

This work is now going forward. The entire company, including William Norris, Mary Pickford, Ernest Truex, Ernest Lawford, Edward Connelly and the others are busily engaged every day at the studio of the Famous Players' Film Company, and the results so far have exceeded the fondest hopes of all concerned. "A Good Little Devil" is peculiarly adapted to motion pictures, offering unequaled opportunities for illusions, visions and other camera effects. It will be in three reels. As the result, no city of any size in the country will be deprived next season of this Belasco fairy-play.



Miss Alice Hollister, Kalem Leading Woman.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

DRASTIC ILLINOIS BILL.

By Frank H. Madison, Mid-West Service.

Not only every exhibitor in Illinois, but every film exchange and every producer is affected by the bill which has been introduced into the Illinois Legislature as House Bill No. 575, by Representative Igoe of Chicago. This bill carries an emergency clause declaring that because an emergency exists it is necessary for the immediate preservation and safeguarding of the public morals that the act take effect after its passage and approval. The measure was introduced April 17, but no attention was paid to it, even by the newspapermen who believed it merely the house companion of Senator Denvir's less drastic motion picture censorship bill.

Illinois exhibitors who will not relish the idea of securing a permit to run their shows from a board selected because of political achievement.

Film exchanges operating within the State, State right owners, industrial film makers and producers, will be forced to have all their reels pass the State inspection and must pay a fee of $1 a reel.

The Illinois Legislature expects to end its work about June 20, which gives opponents of the measure little time for work of organization and for appearing before committees. The Denvir censorship bill, it will be remembered, went into committee in the Senate and was reported out with the recommendation that it pass. It was sent back, however, by Lieutenant-Governor Barratt O'Hara because there was not a quorum present when it was acted upon.

The measure, which is entitled "An act providing a board to censor motion picture films and prescribing the duties and powers of the same" has been referred to the Committee on Judiciary. The bill is as follows:

Section 1. Be it enacted by the People of the State of Illinois, represented in the General Assembly: It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to show or exhibit in a public place or in a place where the public is admitted, anywhere in the State of Illinois, any picture or series of pictures, of the classes or kinds commonly shown in mutoscopes, kinetoscopes, cinematographs, and such pictures, or series of pictures, as are commonly shown or exhibited in so-called penny arcades, and in all other automatic or moving picture devices, whether an admission fee is charged or not, without first having secured a permit therefor from the Illinois State Censor Board, as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 2. There is hereby created a board, known as the Illinois State Censor Board, consisting of three members to be appointed by the Governor, for terms of four years, and until their successors shall be appointed and qualified.

Sec. 3. Before any such permit is granted, an application in writing shall be made therefor and the plates, films, rolls, or other like apparatus, by or from which such picture or series of pictures are shown or produced, or the picture or series of pictures itself, as shown to said board, who shall inspect or cause to be inspected, such plates, films, rolls or apparatus, or such picture or series of pictures, and within three days after such inspection, said board shall either grant or deny the permit. In case a permit is granted, it shall be in writing, and in such form as the censor board may prescribe.

Sec. 4. The permit herein provided for shall be obtained for each and every picture or series of pictures exhibited, and shall be required in addition to any license or other imposition now required by law or ordinance.

The fee for each inspection by such board shall be $1.00 for each film to be censored, or for any reel of film exceeding one thousand lineal feet, the sum of $2.00, and a fee of $1.00 for each permit shall be paid to said board.

Sec. 5. All and only such films as are, in the judgment and discretion of said board, of a moral, amusing or educational character, and not of an indecent subject, nor representing lust, shall be passed or approved by said board and shall be stamped or designated in an appropriate manner and consecutively numbered, that the same may be projected upon the screens preceding the picture.

Sec. 6. A majority of the members of said board shall constitute a quorum, and in regular sessions may exercise all of the powers and duties of the board. During the absence or incapacity of any member of said board, the Governor may appoint a member to fill such temporary or permanent vacancy.

Sec. 7. When films have been passed and approved by the Illinois Censor Board, and stamped and numbered by said board, as provided for herein, they may be shown and exhibited within the State of Illinois, without restriction or interference, any other ordinances or regulations to the contrary notwithstanding.

Sec. 8. Such censor board shall, before the tenth day of each month, make a complete report of the amount of money received by them for censoring picture films, and shall pay all money so received into the general revenue fund of the Illinois State Treasury.

Sec. 9. Each member of said board of examiners shall receive an annual salary of $2,000.00, except the chairman, who shall receive an annual salary of $3,000.00. The secretary of such board shall receive an annual salary of $1,200.00. All salaries hereunder, and all expenses necessary to maintain such board and carrying into effect the purpose thereof, shall be paid out of the general revenue fund of the State of Illinois, which, however, shall not exceed in any one year, the revenue produced in censoring films.

Sec. 10. In case a permit shall be refused for any such moving picture plates, films, rolls or other like article or apparatus from which a series of pictures for public exhibition can be produced, it shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to lease or transfer the same to any exhibitor of moving pictures or otherwise put same into circulation for purposes of exhibition within the State.

In every case where such objectionable moving picture plates, films, rolls or other like articles or apparatus from which a series of pictures for public exhibition can be produced, shall be put into circulation contrary to the provisions of this section, the same shall be confiscated, and in addition thereto, the person, firm or corporation so leasing, transferring or putting the same into circulation, shall be fined not less than $50.00, nor more than $300.00, for each offense.

Sec. 11. Any person violating any of the provisions of this Act shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than $50.00, nor more than $300.00, or to imprisonment not less than thirty days, or more than one year, or both, for each offense.

Sec. 12. An emergency is hereby declared to exist, by reason whereof it is necessary for the immediate preservation and safeguarding of the public morals that this Act take effect from and after its passage and approval.

PENNSYLVANIA SECOND ANNUAL STATE CONVENTION.

Until a short time ago the name of Philadelphia was synonymous with somnambulism. It is most gratifying to note the many ways in which this quaint old city, has not only taken hold, but is now running close on par with the most progressive cities of the world. This fact is well evidenced by the way those interested in the motion picture industry and art have displayed their enthusiasm over the coming second annual state convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, which is to be held in Philadelphia, on May 27 and 28, at the Continental Hotel, Philadelphia.

On last Wednesday Messrs. Kerr, Walraven and Roth, of the Convention Committee were the guests of Mr. S. Lubin at luncheon at the Lubin plant, together with many of the Lubin producers and artists. Mr. Lubin showed great enthusiasm in regard to the coming convention, and will detail a number of his cameramen to make a reel of film, for the Exhibitors' League, under the guidance of the League Convention Committee, depicting the historic points of interest in and around Philadelphia. Also showing many of the various commercial industries, together with the civic development of the city, as well as taking a picture of all the exhibitors and their families. These pictures will be displayed in every civilized corner of the world, and strange as it may seem, this will be the first complete motion picture ever made showing the many points of interest in the city, which is looked on throughout the entire world as the birth-place of modern civilization.

Elaborate arrangements will be made by Mr. Lubin to entertain the many out of town exhibitor's and their families, who will wish to visit, not only the Lubin plant in Philadelphia, but the new two million dollar plant, which is nearing completion at historic Betzwood, outside of Philadelphia. Words are inadequate to describe this plant, as it covers over five hundred acres of ground, laid out in parks, cattle ranges, mountains, etc., besides containing a mammoth studio with many stages, together with scores of other buildings for the manufacturing of the "Clear as a Bell," films.

JERSEY LEGISLATION SIDETRACKED.

Joseph Stern, of Newark, N. J., chairman of the legislative committee of the New Jersey Exhibitors' League, reports that, while the New Jersey exhibitors have not been successful in passing any of the measures proposed by them, they have prevented the passage of a number of bills at Trenton that would have been troublesome. A bill providing for a local censorship board in every town was defeated as also was a bill amending the present "childrens law" to eliminate the words "adult friend" which would have made it a little more difficult to handle the children.

A bill similar to the New York law regarding the admission of children after school hours and until 7 o'clock p. m., was passed by the Senate, but did not get to the Assembly. Another bill permitting children to enter upon the written authority of their parents took the same course.

A joint resolution providing for a commission to study the moving picture theater question was passed by the Senate, but did not get to the Assembly. This subject will be taken up by the Public Welfare Committee of Essex County, which has called a congress of all civic societies of the state to be held in Newark on May 15. The meeting will be held at 665 Broad Street. President Robinson and Vice-President Blumenthal will appear for the New Jersey exhibitors.

WISCONSIN STATE CENSORSHIP KILLED.

"Honor to whom honor is due" surely applies to Hon. Don C. Hall, of the Don C. Hall Repertoire Co., author, actor and assemblyman from Steven's Point, Wis., the only theatrical man in the Wisconsin Legislature.

Mr. Hall appeared before the State Affairs Committee, in the Assembly, and made a strong appeal against the passage of Bill 1,029 A, a drastic state censorship bill. His argument was so clear, forceful and convincing, that an attorney employed to appear against the passage of the bill, arose and said he had practically nothing to say, as Mr. Hall had covered every point he wished to raise, even the constitutionality of the bill.

On the floor of the Assembly, Mr. Hall also argued against the passage of Goff Bill No. 1,187, requiring each motion picture theater to secure a license from the state, and placing it under the State Industrial Committee, with power to regulate and control, or cancel such license at any time.

Assemblyman Don C. Hall.

Mr. Hall's Company has a private car and reaches most every hamlet in the state, and he evidently knew whereof he spoke, when he claimed there was no need for a censorship bill, and that the exhibitors were opposed to it. Also that the public did not need such a bill for its protection, the pictures being clean and wholesome.

The motion picture exhibitors of the state surely can credit and thank Mr. Hall for his stand and action in the matter.

Regarding the fight made against the Goff bill by Mr. Hall, the Evening Wisconsin said:

"Under the spell of oratory by Don C. Hall, the actor-legislator, the Assembly killed the Goff bill Monday night, empowering the industrial commission to censor and regulate moving picture shows. Mr. Hall objected to a law that would amount to giving a free pass to the commissioners and the numerous members of the staff. His principal argument was that moving pictures are amply censured now by the national board."

INTERNATIONAL GETS TENNESSEE PAGEANT.

On Tuesday, May 6, at Nashville, Tenn., there was an elaborate pageant, Greek in character, in which several thousand citizens and citizenesses took part. The affair lasted for two days and aroused widespread interest, drawing people from all over the State. By special arrangements with the International Feature Film Company two motion picture cameramen were brought on from New York to make motion pictures of the occasion.

WEST VIRGINIA CONVENTION.

A successful meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of West Virginia was held at Wheeling on Tuesday and Wednesday, April 29 and 30. The attendance was satisfactory and considerable business was transacted. Officers and delegates to the New York convention were elected as follows:

President, A. G. Frohme, Home Theater, Wheeling.

First Vice-President, Russell Lynn, Dixie Theater, Fairmount.

Second Vice-President, Patrick McGovern, Odeon Theater, Clarksburg.

Secretary, M. A. Sybert, Park Theater, Moundsville.

Treasurer, D. B. Eagan, Amusu Theater, Ronconverte.

National Vice-President, A. L. Cottrill, Wonderland, Point Pleasant.

Delegates: L. R. Thomas, R. Robinson, U. P. Kemper, P. W. Barrett, D. B. Eagan, R. E. McCray. Alternates: C. W. Perrine, Frank McCray, J. B. Cotts, Jas. Velas, John Papaulias, O. F. Langworthy.

On the night of April 30th a big banquet was given. Many distinguished gentlemen were present; among them were: Mayor of Wheeling, Mayor of Bellaire, Ohio; Mayor of Bridgeport, and National President M. A. Neff and several other efficient gentlemen who delivered speeches.

Manufacturers and supply men were represented as follows: L. O. Hunt, of the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company; Fred C. Amer, manager of the Buckeye-Lake Shore Film Company, Columbus, O.; W. J. Newman, of the Newman Manufacturing Company, Cincinnati, Ohio; C. Lang Cobb, Jr., of the Ramo Film Company, New York; Will C. Smith, of the Nicholas Power Company, New York; Eric Morrison, of the American Moving Picture Machine Company, New York; H. A. Ross, of the Mutual Film Corporation, Wheeling Branch, and J. E. Robin, of the Simplex Machine, New York.

CALIFORNIA FIGHTING OBNOXIOUS CENSOR BILL.

A stubborn fight is being made by the motion picture exhibitors of California against a particularly obnoxious bill in the legislature, which provides for a censorship board, with three members who shall receive a salary of $3,600 a year and traveling expenses, and power to appoint a secretary and other help needed to perform their duties. Among other things, this censorship board shall examine all pictures manufactured in California, a provision that will mean serious trouble for the manufacturers if the bill should become a law. Another paragraph of the bill, which is susceptible of various construction, is Section 13, which reads as follows:

> Section 13. It shall be unlawful for any person to exhibit any motion picture of any human figure in such detail as to offend public morality or decency; or of any lewd or lascivious or sensual act; or of any other matter or thing of an obscene, indecent, immoral or suggestive nature, or offensive to the moral sense or against public policy; or of any act educational to immorality or crime; or of any murder, suicide, robbery; hold-up, shooting, stabbing, clubbing or beating of any human being, wherein such acts or any of them are shown in grewsome detail or in a revolting manner, or in any manner objectionable to the moral sense or of any act of brutality, cruelty or barbarity shown in grewsome detail or in a revolting or disgusting or horrible manner, or of any act or scene untruthfully or inaccurately depicting or representing any nationality, race, sect, class or type in such manner as to tend to bring the said nationality, race, sect, class or type into public scorn, hatred, ridicule or contempt; and the commission shall have power to forbid and suppress the exhibition of reel or motion picture not in accord with this section.

While there seems to be little chance of this bill becoming a law at this session of the California legislature, on account of the press of more important measures, it is to be hoped that the exhibitors of California will keep up their fight until it is effectually killed or sidetracked.

MOTION PICTURE EXPOSITION NOTES.

The recent cinematograph exposition held in London proved conclusively that all the world, men, women and children, are interested in moving pictures.

The forthcoming International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art to be held at the New Grand Central Palace, New York City, July 7th to 12th, 1913, bids fair to awaken even greater interest than that held in London, which was a big success. This exposition will be of great assistance to exhibitors, a wonderful business medium for manufacturers, and of appealing interest to thousands of the general public who are interested in the motion picture art.

Educational bodies will be represented at this exposition, as well as branches of the church, and undoubtedly its influence will have a favorable and lasting effect with them.

The main floor of the New Grand Central Palace is being rented to manufacturers of all articles pertaining to the industry. Price of space inclusive of rails, back platform and signs is $2 per square foot. Space on the mezzanine floor is $1.50 per square foot. On this floor arrangements have been made to install four "Model" theaters, which will be fitted with the most up-to-date appliances pertaining to making motion picture houses a pleasing and safe place of amusement and education.

Three of these theaters have been taken. The General Film Co., The Mutual Film Corp., and the Universal Film Co., will each have a theater of their own in which pre-release pictures will be shown. The other theater will be rented to the feature photoplay manufacturers, so that everyone will have an opportunity of being represented. These theaters will be fully equipped by manufacturers of different articles who have taken space on the main floor.

Several scenarios have been received at the offices of the Exposition Committee, but none of them quite hit the point. The idea is to have a five minute play that will be suitable for either a man or a woman. A prize of $25 will be given for the one selected and no doubt there are many working on this scenario now. They are all to be sent to the Secretary of the Exposition Committee, German Bank Building, 4th Ave., & 14th Street, New York City.

President Trigger's Convention Committee has been very busy during the past week making arrangements for the entertaining of the large number of out of town exhibitors who will attend the First International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art. It is getting busier every day at the exposition offices now that the time is getting nearer for the big show. Ten thousand dollars' worth of floor space has been sold during the past week.

ANOTHER CENSOR BILL KILLED.

Advices from Nebraska are to the effect that a particularly obnoxious bill providing for a State censor board for Nebraska, has been killed. This bill provided a committee of censorship for each incorporated city and town in the state, one member to be appointed by the mayor of the city or town, one by the Board of Education of the school district in which the city or town is located and a third by the superintendent of the school. Some bill, that.

TEXAS STATE CONVENTION.

Arrangements are being made for a convention of Texas exhibitors at Dallas, Texas, on May 28 and 29. National Vice-President T. P. Finnegan has charge of the arrangements and promises a bigger attendance than at any previous meeting in that state.

MAJESTIC STUDIO NOTES.

Another two reel subject will be released by the Majestic on May 6th. It is Forrest Halsey's Creole love story of old Louisiana entitled "The Children of St. Anne," which was produced by the Majestic's Florida Company and promises to be a worthy successor of "Hazel Kirke," which was the Majestic's first two reel production.

Two educational pictures are scheduled for early Majestic release—"The Oyster at Home," which will appear on the reel with "Billy's New Watch," on May 11th, and "Liquid Air" on the same reel with "Rivals Outwitted," released on May 18th.

KENTUCKY STATE CONVENTION—President L. J. Ditmar, Secretary Fred J. Dolle, J. H. Stamper, L. H. Ramsey and other members.

PRESIDENT NEFF'S SUGGESTIONS FOR EXPOSITION.

Although President Neff is a very busy man these days in endeavoring to organize every State in the Union before the first of July, he finds time every now and then to send out helpful suggestions to the committee in charge of the First International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art.

During the months of May and June there will be held conventions at Omaha, Neb.; Des Moines, Iowa; Topeka, Kan.; Springfield, Mo.; Oklahoma City, Okla.; Little Rock, Ark.; Dallas, Texas; New Orleans, La.; Jackson, Miss.; Birmingham, Ala.; Baltimore, Md.; Wilmington, Del., and Pittsburgh, Pa. At Mr. Neff's suggestion copies of the prospectus, floor plan, diagram of booth, etc., will be sent to all these conventions.

Although most of the exhibitors from all over the country have already planned to attend the Third Annual Convention in New York this coming July, it is quite likely that during the enthusiasm of these conventions, when the Third Annual Convention is brought to the exhibitors' notice, that many of them who have not planned to come to New York will make arrangements to do so.

MARYLAND EXHIBITORS' CONVENTION.

Chances for a rousing convention of Motion Picture Exhibitors of the state of Maryland at Baltimore, Md., on June 3 and 4 look particularly good at this writing. J. Howard Bennett, proprietor of the New Pickwick Theater, Baltimore, has the matter of arrangements in charge and is being ably assisted by Marion Pierce and other Baltimore exhibitors. Headquarters will be at the Emerson Hotel.

DELAWARE EXHIBITORS' CONVENTION.

James N. Ginns, of Wilmington, Del., has charge of the arrangements for the convention of exhibitors of the State of Delaware which will be held at Wilmington on Monday, May 26.

WRITE TO PRESIDENT NEFF.

President Neff, of the National Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, wants to hear from a few live exhibitors in the states of Arizona, Georgia, Idaho, Montana, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Carolina,, North Dakota, Oregon, S. Carolina, Vermont and Wyoming.

President Neff's address is 1003 Mercantile Library Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY NOTES.

Mr. F. W. Swett, traveling representative, has secured the approval of Power's 6A with motor and mechanical speed control at Dallas, Texas. A No. 6A has been placed in the Loss Angeles High School through the Los Angeles Motion Picture Supply Company, Los Angeles.

The following installations have been made: One No. 6A complete to O'Melay Amusement Company, Jackson, Michigan, through the Mutual Film Corporation of Detroit; one No. 6A to Casino Theater, New Bedford, Mass., through R. D. Marson Moving Picture Supply Company, Boston; one 6A complete to O. P. Herndon, Sanford, Fla., through Tampa Photo and Art Supply Company, Tampa; one No. 6A to the U. S. Reclamation Service, Washington, through General Film Company, Washington.

A CORRECTION.

Through misinformation it was stated last week that six Power's 6a's had been purchased for "Quo Vadis?" shows. We are advised that Simplex machines were ordered.

THIS PREACHER TALKED TOO MUCH.

Rev. John J. MacDonald, pastor of the South Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., has been made the defendant in a suit for $10,000 upon the complaint of Rudolph Sanders, a Brooklyn exhibitor, who alleges defamation of character. It is reported that the reverend gentleman has since expressed a desire to make a full public apology to Mr. Sanders.

S. S. HUTCHINSON BACK IN CHICAGO.

S. S. Hutchinson and wife rounded out a four months absence from the Chicago office by returning to the city last week. Mr. Hutchinson spent most of his time at the Santa Barbara studio, but found time to make a trip to Honolulu, where he obtained some splendid views of life in the Islands.

Feature Production.

Madame Blache Talks Interestingly of the Difference Between Three-Reel "Features" and "Subjects."

A successful showman, in talking about multiple reels and differentiating the feature from the three-reel subject, is quoted as saying: "A three-reel feature differs from the three-reel subject as much as the Broadway attraction differs from the road show. A three-reel subject is a story drawn out to three thousand feet with nothing noteworthy achieved, either in its staging or general atmosphere. A feature, however, is a production which has every element of attraction and popularity. By elements of attraction and popularity, I mean what a salesman terms 'talking points.' The 'talking points' of a real feature are popular titles, well established in the public mind, casts with well-known actors in the leading role, good support, exceptional locations, artistic interiors, correct in every detail, and a story with the 'proverbial punch'—technically, well developed."

While there are not many productions such as described by the showman quoted above, productions like "Les Miserables," "Quo Vadis," and "Dick Whittington and His Cat," come up very near to the perfect feature of our exacting showmen and meet nearly all of the requirements.

In a talk on this subject with Madame Blache, president and manager of production of the Solax Company, and herself the producer of features like "Fra Diavolo," "Dick Whittington and His Cat," and a few others said: "Besides an expenditure of large sums of money, the production of a feature means weeks of tedious preparation and research. Before a single foot of film was taken, 'Dick Whittington and His Cat' consumed five weeks of my time and the time of my staff. Our coming feature with the famous Barney Gilmore in the leading role, 'Kelly from the Emerald Isle,' was produced after six weeks of preliminary work. There were consultations with the director, with Mr. Gilmore, with the author of the scenario, and with the scenic artists. After the scenario was finally in shape, it was beyond the recognition of the author. Then followed the routine work of sketching costumes for the costumers, of laying out plans and sketches of sets, of going the rounds for props and incidentals, and finishing touches. Mr. Gilmore's friends in the old country were of considerable assistance. They sent over a trunk full of stuff for atmosphere and local color. The sheebeens (country tavern of Ireland), Irish sitting-rooms, and dwellings and furnishings for these sets were secured with considerable difficulty.

"There are several scenes in the production which are genuinely thrilling. In one, Kelly, and his sweetheart clinging to his neck, is seen climbing down a declivity several hundred feet deep. Another scene shows Kelly escaping death by jumping on the cow-catcher of a train going at full speed. There is also a spectacular destruction of a hut by gunpowder and dynamite.

"Throughout the production is preserved an atmosphere characteristically Irish. Humor and pathos mingle. To register the story which teems with human interest, an all-star cast was needed. Selections for the parts were made with the utmost care. Fraunie Fraunholz, the well-known comedian, who has been a member of some of the best stock companies in Baltimore, Philadelphia, Washington, Buffalo, Chicago, Denver and New York, and Joseph Levering, familiar to Biograph, Pathe and Kalem fans, were the specials in the cast, besides Barney Gilmore and the members of the Solax Stock Company.

"If hard work, careful preparation and the expenditure of large sums of money add to the feature definitions of the showman you have been telling me about, then 'Kelly from the Emerald Isle,' with Barney Gilmore, should—well, not to blow my own horn — be awaited with interest. There is a surprise coming."

It would seem that Madame Blache's enthusiastic expressions regarding features are significant. What will be the future policy of the Solax Company and other companies? It had been predicted in The Moving Picture World a long time ago that manufacturers, because of the demands of exhibitors and the public, will gradually wean themselves from the single-reel production and produce the multiple reel. The tendency seems to be in that direction.

RECENT SALES BY MR. SCHNEIDER.

Eberhard Schneider, of 219 Second Avenue, reports that large orders for junior professional motion picture cameras and film finishing outfits have been placed with him by the United States War Department, Columbia University, Ansonion Institute and Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"THE BIG BOSS" (Reliance).

This big two-reel feature deals with the political graft prevalent in most large cities. The "Big Boss" will award the aqueduct contract to Bascom, who is badly in need of it, providing Bascom's daughter becomes his wife. But Muriel is already engaged to Dick, a young reporter, who has been detailed to go after the graft scandals that are alarming the city. Dick overhears a conversation between the boss and one of his men in an East Side saloon. The boss is arranging to open all the bids submitted for the contract that night at 9 o'clock, so that he may make his man's lower than any of the others.

Scene from "The Big Boss" (Reliance).

Dick, with Muriel's help, plants a dictograph, gets the information, and is nearly beaten to death by the boss who discovers the little machine. Bascom saves the boy and gives the boss to understand what honest men think of him. Pondering the matter over, the boss experiences a change of heart, and is content to let the contract go where it honestly belongs — to Bascom.

George Siegman plays the "Big Boss" with telling effect. Irving Cummings as Dick, and Muriel Ostritch as Bascom's daughter, do some clever work. A. Balfour played Bascom. Frederick Sullivan directed this picture, which will be released on May 14th.

"AND THE PHONE BELL RANG!"

About everything that could, to a photoplayer, happened to Fred Mace on his recent stay here, according to the rumor factory. Here are the reports, as spread around:

Monday—A new feature company is what brought Fred Mace New Yorkward.

Tuesday—The genuine reason for Mace's New York visit is to make the Screen Club, headquartered in Manhattan, a branch of the Photoplayers, of Los Angeles, of which Mace is founder and president.

Wednesday—Mr. Mace's doctor advised a temporary change of climate, hence the New York trip.

Thursday—Mace was never better in his life and the real reason for his New York stay is out: He came on to interest New York capital in backing his mayorality race in Los Angeles.

Friday—It's England for him, there to shine at the head of an all-American company of players; he's in Manhattan to recruit these players and the release will be known as Macefilm.

Saturday—It was the vaudeville powers, i. e., the United Booking Offices, that beckoned Mace to come to New York; they want his picture—famous face with a monologue on the "big time." Salary—well, you wouldn't believe it if we told you!

"A GIRL SPY IN MEXICO" (Lubin).

This Lubin picture gives a vivid picture of the temperament of the Mexican senorita. For love, she will dare anything, even death. The military atmosphere is perfect, the picture being taken in Nogales on the Mexican border, half of the town being in Arizona and the other half in Mexico.

The war is on between the insurrectos and federal troops in old Mexico, and the intermittent firing is playing havoc. The Senorita Armaje, not hearing of her lover, Lieut. Blanco, goes to the insurgent camp, and, to assist his cause, dresses as a Red Cross nurse and enters the federal camp as a spy. She is, however, discovered and arrested. Through the aid of Armaje, Blanco captures one of the federal spies, and, using him as a guide, he himself enters the federal camp. There he succeeds in effecting his sweetheart's escape. Col. Ferro declares he will capture them again and accomplishes his wish. Blanco and the senorita are marched onward to what end — we know not.

SELIG TO PRODUCE NEW JUNGLE THRILLER.

On May 28th, the Selig Polyscope Company will release another gripping picture of jungle life, in which realism runs rampant to the very fullest extent. In many respects, "Wamba, A Child of the Jungle," as the latest thriller is known, far excels all previous efforts of the famous "Diamond S" makers, along this line. The entire production was staged on the mammoth Selig Wild Animal Farm in Los Angeles, and no expense was spared to make this feature greater than those which have gone before.

The picture abounds in thrilling scenes. One of the most daring of these shows "Baby" Lillian Wade, the remarkable child actress, in a desperate headlong plunge, over an embankment into the deep waters below, where she has jumped, in order to save herself from being torn to pieces by a huge male lion. At another time, "Baby" Lillian Wade crawls into the hollow trunk of a huge felled tree, just in time to escape the claws and open mouths of a pack of lionesses. Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton, "Baby" Lillian Wade and Frank Clarke are the principal players. The production is in two reels, and will be released as a special on May 28th.

NEW GARDEN THEATER.

The F. & G. Amusement Company has erected a handsome theater in the Bedford Park district, Webster Avenue and 197th Street, New York City. It will be known as the Garden Theater, and is said to have cost $100,000. It is built in compliance with the New York City theater laws, and will have a seating capacity of 800.

"A RUINED LIFE" (Eclectic).

In this offering we have the unusual pleasure of witnessing a genuine Swedish film which was made in Stockholm, acted entirely by Swedish actors, and their work measures very well up to the general run of continental pictures. There are some charming glimpses of landscapes in the vicinity of Stockholm, and the interior settings are altogether satisfactory. The photography is also without fault. The picture tells an entirely domestic story, limited to the immediate members of the family. The unfortunate conditions that occur as the plot unfolds are the results of selfishness on the part of a brother-in-law who desires to keep down the size of the family in order that there shall be no heirs to his father-in-law's estate. The leading male character is that of a young army lieutenant who is very fond of horse racing, and, incidental to the picture, there is a genuine steeplechase that is entirely realistic. The lieutenant is thrown from his horse during the race and is fatally injured by the fall. On his death-bed he makes known to his family that he has been secretly married and is the father of a boy. After his death the lieutenant's wife and pretty boy are taken into the family. This arouses the jealousy of the brother-in-law, who sees in the lieutenant's young son a possible claimant for the fortune of his grandfather. This prompts the brother-in-law to resort to underhanded means to get rid of both mother and son, and through his evil maneuvering he brings about the ruin of the good woman's life by means of a long jail sentence. When she finally comes from the prison there is little left in the way of hope and she lives only long enough to find her son, who is now a military cadet and still a member of her husband's family. The picture is not a problem play, as the title might lead one to suppose. There is no reference to the social evil, drink, or any other vice; it is purely a domestic drama, well told, by a competent company.

Scene from "A Ruined Life" (Eclectic).

CORCORAN IS BUSY.

Although the general impression is that business is slow and quiet, the A. J. Corcoran, Inc., of 11 John Street, New York City, has no complaint to make as it is now working its plant in Jersey City, N. J., to full capacity filling orders for different film manufacturers in all parts of the world who must and will have their developing tanks built by Corcoran. Only last month a large order was consigned to Shanghai, China, for the Asiatic Film Company, and this month will see three large orders go forward, one to the American Film Company, Santa Barbara, Cal., one to Burke & Jaine, Chicago, Ill., and the third to Pathe Freres, Bound Brook, N. J. Those who have not received our new price list No. 6 and discounts should write at once as they will learn something to their advantage.

DRAWS BLOOD FROM LOAN SHARKS.

The Reliance three-reel subject, "The Bawlerout," in which the methods of the "loan shark" are graphically portrayed, has drawn blood from the loan companies doing business in Evansville, Ind. Greatly annoyed by the exposure of the "loan sharks" methods, probably not wholly unknown to them, these companies have taken large advertising space in the local papers to denounce the film in question. Just what the Evansville loan sharks expected to accomplish by thus widely advertising "The Bawlerout" does not appear from a casual reading of their advertisement, but they certainly did advertise the picture.

"THE SAME OLD STORY" (Essanay).

The firmament is illumined with two shining stars in this magnificently beautiful comedy of errors. Beverly Bayne as the alluring and enchanting manicurist, more than demonstrates her remarkable talents in this subject. Augustus Carney, always the same old comedian with his humor and wit, does more than justice to his character. Synopsis: Augustus Carney falls martyr to the enchanting ways of Beverly Bayne, a manicurist. Carney made a date with her for seven o'clock that evening. Returning to his office, Carney informs his private secretary, Billy Mason, about the appointment. To the utter surprise and disappointment of Mr. Carney, his wife enters the office about a quarter of seven, plants herself in a chair and refuses to move. A few moments later Miss Bayne enters, and is introduced to Mrs. Carney as Mason's wife. To make matters worse, Mrs. Mason arrives. When told that Miss Bayne had been introduced as her husband's wife, Mrs. Mason demands an explanation, which is rather clumsily given. The two wives leave in a huff. Miss Bayne, Carney and Mason leave, and to their enjoyment and complete satisfaction, meet Raymond, a world renowned female impersonator. A little later, after the trio had arrived at Mr. Carney's office, Raymond enters with his paraphernalia. Raymond calls Mrs. Mason on the phone and tells her that her husband is entertaining a woman in his office. When Mrs. Mason arrives with Mrs. Carney, they are overjoyed at discovering that the home-wrecker is not a woman after all. Raymond's timely assistance saved Carney and Mason from the divorce courts. In the meantime, Miss Bayne has an enjoyable time in the clothes closet waiting for her wardrobe.

Scene from "The Same Old Story" (Essanay).

This production is booked for release Wednesday, May 14.

EASTERN DISTRIBUTION OF THE MOTIOGRAPH MACHINE.

An item of considerable interest to Eastern exhibitors, and to the motion picture machine trade in general, centers around the arrangement just made by Mr. H. T. Edwards, President of the Picture Theater Equipment Co., of 21 East 14th Street, New York City, to take over the eastern distribuiton of the Motiograph Motion Picture Machine.

This change in the policy of the Motiograph makers comes as a surprise because of the recent advance in favor among Eastern exhibitors of this well known machine. The change should be of particular interest to Eastern exhibitors, and Motiograph users, because of the fact that Mr. Edwards' Company will not only be fully equipped to handle Motiograph business, but will in addition enable the exhibitor to concentrate his purchases of all supplies with the one supply house. The Picture Theater Equipment Co., are also authorized distributors of the Nicholas Power, the Simplex, the Edison and Standard machines, and you need not leave their show room and offices to purchase anything pertaining to the motion picture theater. They carry in stock, ready for the exhibitors' inspection, everything that is necessary for the equipment of a modern and up-to-date motion picture theater. A call at their offices, and show room will more than convince you and out-of-town customers will find their mail orders receive equal attention.

"THE PROFESSOR'S TRAVELING ADVENTURES"

(Great Northern).

In this delightful comedy Professor Miller affords no end of amusement by reason of his adventures while traveling in search of health. He has been a bookworm for many years and when his physician orders him into the country, the old gentleman is somewhat bewildered and gets into all sorts of perplexing situations. His first adventure is in the railway coach when he unwittingly throws an old ladies' shoes out of the window, mistaking them for the overshoes of a traveler who had left them on the floor. Next we find him in collision with a bicycle while attempting to capture a pet dog belonging to a fellow traveler. In the stage coach he again becomes an innocent offender and finally arrives at an old inn for a night's lodging. He has been accustomed to home comforts and the hard bed is not to his liking, but he is about to fall into slumher when a sound under the bed attracts his attention. He finds a dog and ejects it, but the animal finds its way back through a hole in the wall. Three times the offender is ejected and finally fhe professor arrives at the conclusion that he is sleeping over a kennel, and makes ready to return to his home. When he arrives, he finds his faithful old housekeeper entertaining a number of her female friends, but instead of being angry, the old gentleman is so overjoyed at being home once again that he bids them all welcome. The principal funmaker is Fred Buch and in this role he appears to the best advantage. The trained dog is another source of merriment when he appears on the screen.

Another notable Gene Gauntier production in three reels will be released shortly. It is entitled, "On the Firing Line." Miss Gauntier has also written and enacted a powerful Klu Klux Klan story. This film is going to make history.

The second issue of "Warner's Feature News" will be out tbe fifteenth of this month. Exhibitors desiring to receive copies gratis should forward their names at once to the New York office.

A new office is now open in Denver, with J. C. Butts as resident manager. Address, 1229 16th Street.

LARRY McGILL'S HUNT FOR HOUNDS.

The Reliance company, a week or two ago, decided to do "London Assurance," the well-known English comedy-drama, in pictures. Somebody wished the script onto Lawrence McGill and told him to go to it. To produce this play properly it calls for some scenes of fox hunting, with a pack of hounds. On a Monday morning, Mr. McGill started out in a motor car to find a pack of fox hounds. He spent three days visiting every hunt club within twenty miles of New York and found that there was not a pack of dogs anywhere. In the depths of his despair he was telling a friend his troubles, and the friend asked, "Why don't you go over to the Manhattan Opera House where 'The Whip' is playing; they have a fine pack of foxhounds there?"

And Larry did. All winter long this fine pack of English hounds had been within five minutes' ride of the Reliance studio, unbeknownst to him. Larry got the dogs and took the scenes. The dogs did their work like professionals and the scenes are great. We have a film hound that we would have loaned him if we had known about it.

THE MEINHARDT CLOCK SLIDE.

Fred A. Apfelbaum, president of the Levi Company, Inc., 1560 Broadway, New York, slidemakers, announces the purchase of the exclusive manufacturing rights of the Meinhardt Clock Slide from H. A. Meinhardt and Thomas J. Urell, owners of the basic patent.

Some years ago, when the patent was issued, Messrs. Meinhardt and Urell started a company for the promotion and manufacture of the new slide, but through inexperience and the small demand at the time, the project was not a success, and the invention remained under cover.

Out of touch entirely with the industry, the inventor was not aware of the fact that certain manufacturers were producing and selling his patented slide without his permission, and immediate action will be taken against those concerns for damages. Exhibitors are cautioned not to use any clock slides not made by the Levi Company, Inc., inasmuch as the showing of the same makes them a party to the infringement, and, therefore, liable.

"CALAMITY ANNE" PICTURE MADE AT VENICE.

Director Hale of the American Film Mfg Co., in company with Jack Kerrigan, Jack Richardson, Louise Lester, "Calamity Anne," a number of cowboys and, last but not least, the famous American burro which plays such star parts in all the "Calamity Anne" pictures, left Santa Barbara last week for Venice, Cal., to finish some scenes in a new picture. The journey is 125 miles from Santa Barbara, a distance traveled for the sake of six scenes. Much difficulty was found in inducing the burro to travel alone in the freight out of Santa Barbara. He refused to mount of his own accord and in an effort to drag him on he fell from the platform of the freight station and everyone thought a dead burro would be found. But Woodrow was unscathed, and by dint of ropes was finally pushed and hauled into the car, rending the suburban atmosphere with burro calls for help.

ESSANAY NOTES.

Harry McRae Webster, General Director for the Essanay Film Mfg. Company is in New York for the purpose of securing new talent for photoplays. If you see a little, short, red haired gentleman lurking around the Times Square Bldg., at Broadway and 42nd Street, just tap him on the shoulder and impress him gently but firmly that you are desirous of appearing in motion pictures.

"Toothless Ted," commonly known as Theodore W. Wharton, the producer of par excellent merit with the Essanay Film Mfg. Company, earned his title as "Toothless Ted" in a rather painful manner. Last Thursday, April 24th, Mr. Wharton had fifteen teeth extracted and had nine nerves taken out without an anaesthetic. This was all done in less than an hour and before another hour had elapsed, Mr. Wharton was on the floor of the studio directing a photoplay. One would think Mr. Wharton should have lost all his nerve.

A novel advertising scheme has developed into the Essanay Film Mfg Company ordering several thousand "Alkali" Ike dolls on hobby horses. The above company has made arrangements with Louis Amberg & Son to distribute these novelties throughout the entire United States and Canada to the department stores. The dolls are non-breakable. A mold was made which cost considerable, so that the dolls' faces would be the exact likeness of Augustus Carney. The dolls will sell for $1.50.

CORRESPONDENCE

ILLINOIS.

G. W. Gebhardt, proprietor of the American, the North End picture house in Decatur, is making preparations to turn his house into a vaudeville theater. However, he announces the change in policy will not become effective for a year or two. The first steps were to increase the capacity from 400 to 500, put in a new steel front and make many needed improvements in the interior. Next fall the second floor of the building will be torn out and a balcony seating 500 persons added, which will give a total capacity of 1,000.

Walker & Woodyatt, of the Bio, at Moline, have installed a new $5,000 Wurlitzer orchestrion.

O. E. Kepner, manager and proprietor of the Bijou and Grand theaters at Mattoon, has begun matinee performances from 2 to 5 o'clock each afternoon. The management has announced that no children will be admitted at either theater during school hours, but special educational and travel pictures will be offered on Saturdays, when the youngsters will be given especial attention. New ventilating systems have been installed.

Marcus Heiman, of Madison, Wis., has recently been in Champaign, and is reported to have options on four sites for a theater.

Miss Marie Clark, who has been managing the Lyric Theater on Grove avenue, at Elgin, has resigned her position and the place was closed by W. J. Meehan, owner of the building. It was announced at first that Meehan would operate the place, but later reports came that he had several proposals from would-be lessees.

George L. Murphy has purchased a Main Street site in Woodstock and will erect upon it a modern theater building, which will be used as a picture house by Wittenberg & Bodensxchatz. It is reported that the lessees will have the privilege of purchasing the theater.

A new home is being erected at Paxton for the Crystal. The building, which will be of concrete, brick and steel, will have a modern appearance, especial attention being given to the decoration of the interior and the lobby. It will seat about 400 persons.

The Industrial Moving Picture Company, of Chicago, recently took a series of pictures of the fire department at Joliet. There is nothing unusual in such a statement, for the Industrial Company has taken pictures of most of the fire departments in Illinois. This picture, however, will be exhibited by the Phoenix Horse Shoe Company, because the animals which made the demonstration runs were Phoenix-shod.

L. Dalton will erect -a new building at Elmwood, to be used as a moving picture theater.

Miss Bessie Miller, pianist at the Star Theater, in Aurora, and an unusually accomplished manuscript sight reader, was awarded the gold medal at the annual contest recently held in the Chicago Conservatory of Music.

Gallagher Brothers have sold the Royal Theater at Litchfield to R. L. McComas, of Pontiac, Ill., who has already assumed the management of the photoplay house. The Gallaghers will continue to operate their theater in Bloomington, which is being managed by J. P. Gallagher. They started in the Litchfield house in October, 1911.

The Banner Theater Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $17,500, to operate theaters. The incorporators are: Menlo E. Moore, James C. Matthews and Samuel A. Bristow.

Milo Phares, of Elmwood, is opening a new picture show at Henry.

The Photo-Drama Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated, with a capital stock of $1,000, to operate moving picture shows. The incorporators are: John A. Verhoeven, Matthew Dynewicz and Richard J. Cooney.

Charles Vance, monager of Dawn Theater, at Streator, was at Ottawa and La Salle, looking over the films recently made of those two cities, with a view to exhibiting them in Streator.

The Igoe bill, re-establishing boxing in Illinois, was attacked by Rev. Philip W. Yarrow, president of the Young People's Civic League at Chicago, because it would open the door to the exhibition of moving pictures of boxing matches, and these would demoralize the younger generation.

Vernon C. Seavers will equip his new Hippodrome at Peoria, with a moving staircase.

An ordinance creating an examining board for operators has been introduced before the Galesburg City Council by Alderman McFarland. This board is to consist of the chief of the fire department, the city electrician and a practical operator. A slide must be exhibited at each performance showing that the operator has been licensed. Smoking within twenty feet of the machine will be prohibited.

Work is being rushed on the construction of the new Gerrib Theater at Westville. The structure will be fireproof, and will have a handsome front.

Carl Rademacher, manager of the Orpheum Theater at Freeport, was sponsor for a set of films of the show places of that city. The matinee crowd at the Orpheum was one of the pictures.

The Argmore Theater Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated, with a capital stock of $7,000, to operate theaters. The incorporators are: David R. Levy, Douglass C. Gregg and Ethel W. Downes.

John Eilts, of Minonk, has leased the Grand Opera House, at El Paso. The deal includes the picture show now in operation.

The Moore Feature Films, of Chicago, have been incorporated, with a capital stock of $3,000, to operate moving pictures. The incorporators are: M. E. Moorem, W. W. Willis and M. J. Boyer.

It is reported that owing to a dissention between the owners, Paul Kohl and Charles Garrett, the moving picture show in the Schlitz Opera House at Minook was closed.

The Main Street Theater, in Edwardsville, has taken on a bit of vaudeville in addition to its picture program.

Hillsboro and her suburbs, soon will have seven theaters. Dr. Fred Rogers has entered the field, and has let the contract for the erection of the Grand Central Theater on South Main Street, in Hillsboro. In addition, he has leased a site in Schram City, the factory addition, and will erect an airdome 120 x 50 feet.

The Majestic, Dawn, Dreamland and the Lyric theaters at Streator, each gave benefit performances on April 15 for the baseball team of the Illinois-Missouri league.

Harry Aldrich has sold his interest in the Main Street Theater at Mason City, to his partner, Truman Hardin.

Pictures of Evanston will be one of the opening attractions of the new Star Theater, which is being erected on Davis street in that city, by Bodkin & Keane.

Moving picture houses at Cairo which had closed down during the flood scare, were not allowed to reopen as soon after the excitement subsided as they wished. Health officers feared an epidemic, as contagious diseases were numerous, and postponed the resumption of business.

Rockford recently enjoyed the novelty of two religious bodies debating the Sunday moving picture show question. The team from the Adelphic Society of the Emmanuel Lutheran Church upheld the Sunday picture and defeated the debaters from the Luther League. Another debate was held in the Swedish Free Church on the subject, "Which Would, Under Existing Conditions, Be Considered the Most Dangerous, the Saloon or the Moving Picture Show?" "It was decided that the two could not be compared. After thirty had discussed the question, a majority of the 300 persons present unqualifiedly condemned both the saloon and the "moving picture shows as the latter are now constituted."

Judge Paul McWilliams, of Pana City Court, has sustained the decision of Judge Morgan that O. M. Otloe violated the law by opening his picture show on Sunday. Since this case originated the Supreme Court has decided that ordinances of this class are valid and, as a new measure has been enacted in Pana, the city will be without Sunday shows.

The advisory vote taken at the regular city election in Freeport showed that a majority of 1633 favored the opening of moving picture theaters on Sunday. The question is still up to the city council if it wishes to disregard the voice of the people. That this vote cannot be construed as the opening wedge for a lawless Sabbath is shown by the fact that a proposition to allow pool rooms and billiard halls to remain open was defeated by a majority of 172. Even the majority in favor of allowing regular theatrical attractions on Sunday was about six hundred less than that of the photoplay advocates.

Hacker & Krapp are now operating the moving picture show at Mokena.

Phil Wade has opened a moving picture show in the Central Opera house at Fairbury.

Manager Rademacher of the Orpheum, at Freeport, will install a $5,000 pipe organ and a $400 set of cathedral chimes in his house.

Moving pictures prepared by the Chicago Tuberculosis Institute were shown at the Princess in Danville by the Danville Physicians Club.

Moving picture houses in Illinois will have an open amusement field earlier than usual this year because the theatrical houses are beginning to shut up shop. The theatrical business has been none too good in the state. Half of the smaller one-night stands have been booking pictures on open dates and found that it paid just as well, was less trouble, and consequently the road shows have not found easy sledding. Many of the road companies were hard hit by the floods in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, and are glad to get out of the way.

The Coles Syndicate, of St. Louis, is seeking a site in Elgin for an airdome. A $25,000 enterprise is planned. The concern operates seven houses and four airdomes in St. Louis, and is said to have had an envious eye on Elgin for some time. Elgin now has one picture house less, the Lyric, which was closed recently, having been leased as a home for the Woolworth five and ten cent store.

The Idle Hour Theater, at Huntley, plans to give three shows a week this summer.

The Sunday moving picture show proposition won in Rockford by a small majority.

Ira Thorpe, manager of the Gem, at Clinton, is rejoicing over a new Power's 6-A in his operating room.

Illinois Negroes are taking hold of the picture proposition. There is a house in Springfield which caters to the Negroes exclusively, and is said to be a money-making venture. Joseph During has been playing some African Methodist Episcopal Churches in Southern Illinois with the "Passion Play," and has been very successful.

Earl Smith has sold the Dreamland Theater at Farmington to Theodore Bass, and will go west. The new owner is connected with the electric light company and has a reputation for progressiveness.

The Bijou, at Wilmington, has been closed for redecorating and remodeling.

A school children's bucket brigade fighting a fire was one of the pictures which the cameramen of the Industrial Motion Picture Company stumbled upon at Freeport. The buggy factories of that city played a very important part in the reels.

Mrs. Musa Reese, proprietor of the Aero and Airdome at Charleston, is contemplating a summer season of vaudeville at the Airdome, or a mixed bill of vaudeville and stock companies. She also plans to place new chairs in the Aero and make it one of the most up-to-date picture houses in the State.

The robbery of the Bio Theater, in Moline, is reported by newspapers of that city. The thief evidently hid himself in the orchestra pit as the last crowd was leaving, and then forced in the door of the box office and took a sack containing between $75 and $100 in money.

J. C. Lyons is having a new opera house erected in Oregon. The building will be of brick and the auditorium will seat 400 persons.

Presbyterians of Hillsboro are going to build a new church, and S. E. Hurst, proprietor of the Gem, is going to help them along by turning over to The Young Ladies' Aid Society the matinee performances for five Saturdays. An endeavor was made to book as many Biblical films as possible, including the "Passion Play."

Women of Evanston have asked Bodkin & Keane, who are building the new Star Theater in that city, to install an indirect lighting system and protect the young people.

Business and professional men of Madison are opposed to moving pictures if one can believe the reports eminating from that city. So awakened to the evil of the film have they become, according to the story, that they have named a lyceum board of two members to regulate entertainments and lectures that are designed to draw the citizens away from the photoplay and attract them to "another form of educative amusement." R. V. Studebaker, cashier of the Tri-city State Bank, of Madison, and Henry Connole, police magistrate, have been named to guide the amusement destiny of Madisonians.

Hayne & Hoff, of Terre Haute, Ind., have leased the Princess Theater Building at Marshall, from Seymour Hurst, and will open a moving picture and vaudeville house. They take with them four years of experience in the photoplay business at West Terre Haute.

The Colonial Amusement Company, of Harrisburg, has increased its capital stock from $40,000 to $75,000.

Dreamland Theater, at Farmington, has been sold again. Theodore Bass, head of the electric light plant, was but temporarily in possession of the place. He has sold it to L. J. Anderson, of Fairview, who will manage the house.

The Airdome on North Main street, Canton, has been leased by Woodruff & Miller, managers of the Varietie Theater in that city, who will operate it as a picture show. It was planned to open about May 1. The place was given some remodeling and repainting.

It is reported that the library board of the public schools at Wood River, contemplates the use of pictures in the school, either slides or films. The members recently made a trip to St. Louis to investigate the matter.

Miss Marjorie Inman, who has been singing for several months at the Crystal Theater in Cuba, has gone to Mathersville, where she will sing in the picture show operated by John Boulden, formerly of Cuba.

Plans have been submitted to the building inspector at Peoria, for a new picture house in the 1200 block, on South Adams street. It is said Pekin capital is interested. The plans call for a house which will seat about 350 persons, and will cost about $12,000 or $15,000.

The Trades and Labor Assembly of Bellville, is given credit for a vigorous Sunday closing movement now under way in that city.

Emil Seng has added a reel to his show at Roberts, and is now running a four-reel show.

George Hagamann, Tarry Carpenter, and the Misses Emma and Cora Goeppinger, have purchased the Majestic Theater at Bushnell. They may remodel the place.

The West End Amusement Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $60,000, to operate theaters. The incorporators are: Harry J. Lurie, James E. Davis, and John L. Anderson.

The Opera House Building, at Litchfield, has been sold by Snell Brothers to the various Masonic lodges of the city, who will remodel it.

The Star Theater, at Aurora, ran a ten-day program of "What Happened to Mary." Photographs of Miss Mary Fuller were given as souvenirs at two matinees.

The Loop Theater Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $15,000, to operate theaters. The incorporators are: Siegmund Ruhstadt, Jacob Kaplan and Nathan Kaplan.

Moving pictures of an unusual job of sewer excavation in Quincy, were recently made for Manager Peter Pinkelman, of the Gem Theater.

Moving pictures will form a part of the program at a roof garden in course of construction at Water and Eldorado streets, Decatur. G. W. Scovil is manager.

The "K" Theater, on Broadway, near Seventeenth street, Mattoon, has been opened, featuring first-run pictures. The first ten ladies to buy tickets for the opening performance were given handsome souvenirs. Matinee and night performances will be given. A five and ten cent admission will be charged.

Tweed & Sherers have rented the theater in the Red Top Inn, at Fox Lake, a summer resort near McHenry, and will run pictures this summer.

Dawn Theater, Streator, recently gave a benefit performance for the Boy Scouts of the city.

Dates for educational pictures at the Lyric, Morrison, have been changed from Saturday to Friday matinee and evening, for the benefit of the school children.

The Lyric, at Freeport, recently gave a benefit performance for the Center street school. More than 4,000 advance tickets were sold, and it was necessary to run two morning shows. Manager Hopper, of the Lyric, who recently acquired a camera, planned to take a series of local pictures and exhibit them at his house May 16 and 17.

The subject of ventilation in moving picture theaters is up for discussion in Illinois and enough opinions have been expressed by health authorities and by the press to warrant the moving picture managers to see that their houses are right. The Orpheum at Elgin has taken the pains to advertise itself "Orpheum—House of Ventilation." Howard L. Rann, who writes for a syndicate of Illinois papers says, "The moving picture show is a great deal better than it was on the start, and will improve just as fast as the public taste will allow it to. It could be improved in the way of ventilation at once, however, without dragging out a protest from anybody." The Joliet News has an editorial upon the subject, and believes that the theaters and churches could stand more airing.

E. C. Lind, of Anna, has purchased a site on Railroad Street in that city and will erect a new vaudeville and picture house at a cost of $7,000. The building will be fireproof throughout, will have a handsome, three-arch front, and will contain a stage and four dressing rooms. Vaudeville bills will be changed twice a week but the picture program will be changed daily. He will continue to operate the old Lyric theater on West Railroad Street until his lease expires in 1914. The new house will also be called the Lyric.

Schroeder is an old newspaper man, having conducted a funny column on the "Joliet News" for some time. He will have active charge of both houses. The places will be overhauled. A three-reel program will be given.

The Olympia Theater at Arcola showed the International Harvester Company's picture "The Romance of the Reaper," May 1, in co-operation with a local implement firm. Despite its advertising tendency this reel is very popular in Illinois because it reaches the rural residents, and it has never had any difficulty getting onto the program of any agricultural meeting.

When "Satan" was shown at the Lyric theater at Greenville it was lectured by J. M. Leaverton, a former resident of the county.

Ellis Jackson has been remodeling the Airdome at Bushnell.

Gallagher Brothers, who recently disposed of their interests in the Royal Theater at Litchfield, have now sold the Castle in Bloomington to William Lyons who has been associated with Joseph Gallagher in the management of the place. Gallagher Brothers are said to contemplate opening a house in Murphysboro, Ill.

W. A. Peterson who has been connected with the picture destinies of Bloomington and Quincy from time to time is again in Quincy. A room formerly occupied by a laundry is being fitted for a picture show, for which Wiley McConnell, manager of the Bijou, the vaudeville house, is sponsor. Peterson will act as manager. Until the new house is ready the pictures will be shown in the vaudeville house.

Harland Anderson and Marion Stults, of Monmouth, have purchased the Idle Hour Theater at White Hall and assumed charge of it May 1.

The proposed new vaudeville house in Rockford has been named the Palace. The promoters have been granted a charter under the name of the Palace Amusement Company with a capital stock of $100,000. The incorporators are Fred S. Sterling, Fred E. Carpenter and Marcus Heiman. Construction work will soon begin.

Mark and eBrt Cooper, of Champaign, have secured a site on Church Street in that city and will erect a new fireproof moving picture house. It is planned to erect a house with a seating capacity of about 750. A pipe organ will be a feature. Special attention will be given to the ventilation which will be by means of invisible ducts set into the ceiling panels. It is hoped to open the theater about September 1.

The celebration of the ninety-fourth anniversary of the founding of the I. O. O. F. was especially happy at the order's Old Folks' Home at Mattoon. Upon that occasion Samuel Baker, grand scribe of the grand encampment, presented to the institution a moving picture machine which had been donated by the grand encampment. Views of eight homes in as many states began the program. Patriotic and sacred films were joyously received by the old people.

The motto used by the Palm, Aurora is puzzling some persons: "Good Pictures! That's All." Nevertheless it also advertises itself as "the theater beautiful."

St. Louis capital is reported to be interested in a $25,000 airdome project in Waukegan.

Evan Wheeler of Kankakee is to build a new brick and concrete, 40 x 115, moving picture theater building on North Market Street in Champaign. He has had experience in the show business.

The people of Vermont have made a real issue of the moving picture—not of its evil influence nor of the question of showing it on Sunday. The town is divided upon the grave subject of how to best entertain the visitors from the countryside roundabout. Some say band concerts, some say moving pictures and some say both.

Improvements costing $15,000 will transform the Tavern theater on Cass Street, Joliet, into the splendid new Drexel. Among the interior changes will be newer and larger ball-bearings seats, woman's rest room, tile floor in lobby, new lighting effects and a new daylight curtain. A new front will be installed. The musical equipment will be complete with the addition of a $10,000 pipe organ and a set of cathedral chimes. Manager W. F. Clark will continue the place as a five-cent picture house.

The city council of Sterling has legislated out of existence the Sunday picture show. The ordinance prohibiting photoplays and theatrical shows on Sunday was passed by the new council and became effective at once. The matter had been at issue in the municipal campaign and while the question was not submitted to the people a canvass was taken of the candidates for aldermen and mayor. Alderman Harmon attempted to have the new ordinance tabled and a vote cast at the next spring election by the citizens but failed. The council tied on his proposition and Mayor Platt voted against it.

An ordinance closing many places of business on Sunday is up in Joliet, but there seems to be a disposition to treat the moving picture men fairly. J. W. D'Arcy, representing the photoplay managers, visited the city council and asked that the moving picture houses be eliminated from the list of businesses which would have to close.

MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

SPRINGFIELD is just a little bit nearer than it ever was before to having a local branch of the Exhibitors' League. Gus Kerasotes, owner of the Savoy and the Royal theaters, is the latest to join the Illinois League, and other managers have announced their intention of forwarding their application fee. A local league is badly needed even if it would ignore the matter of programs entirely. There is enough to do in the way of creating a favorable sentiment toward pictures and fighting the ill-advised campaigns against the photoplay which develop from time to time. At this time it is announced that blank warrants have been asked by the Meat-Cutters' Union for all business houses that opened on Sunday while the butcher shops were, by law, kept closed. It is presumed that this includes the picture houses, for they were given prominence in the plans of the meat-cutters who hoped, by cutting off people from their desired amusements, to force the opening of the butcher shops. Then, too, the musical problem is not settled; the union has taken active steps in the matter. The cry of boycotting the houses that do not employ union men has arisen, and few of them employ union men.

Aside from these things the program question needs settling. There is too much fighting, too many four, five and even six and seven-reel shows for a nickel. Photoplay patrons have been puzzled by seeing licensed pictures in independent houses and independent pictures in licensed houses. When a manager starts out to give a long program for a nickel he has got to do one of two things—he will be forced to use cheap stuff, or he must do a juggling stunt with licensed and independent films. Either course will ultimately prove disastrous for him. It is said that a local branch might be formed if the program question were to be left out. But that is the real problem here.

Rocchiccioli & Buche have sold the Casino Theater on East Washington Street to Simonetta Brothers. Frank Palmisan will continue as manager. Mr. Rocchiccioli is managing a theater which he recently purchased at Auburn.

Isadore Burnstine and Joseph W. Shephard, owners of the Capital, have purchased the property at 613 East Washington Street which has been occupied by the theater for several years.

The floods in southern Illinois made it necessary for the Vaudette Amusement Company of this city to cancel many bookings for the Kalem picture "From the Manger to the Cross." Among the towns which could not be played were Cairo, Mound City, Mounds, Metropolis and Shawneetown. The picture, however, was in demand about that time for playing flood benefits. It was shown at McLeansboro, Flat Rock, and Mt. Vernon to help the sufferers. The Vaudette Company, which has the Illinois rights for the picture, probably will purchase a third set of the films because two sets will hardly meet the demand. One set has been booked for Waukegan and Zion City and early in May will go to the Cort Theater at Chicago, where a long run is expected. There is a big demand for the picture from the towns in Illinois which have a large foreign population and the additional reels will take care of these emergency calls. Word comes from St. Louis that Frank Talbot has been wonderfully successful with this picture at his Hippodrome. When he showed it during Holy Week he could give it but two hours a day, yet had an attendance of almost 60,000 persons. Mr. Hall, of Hall & Lynch, Chicago, who purchased the Wisconsin State rights for this picture, is dead at his home.

J. Bruner, who installed the pipe organ in W. W. Watts' new Chicago house, writes that he is going to open a picture house in Metropolis. At the time he wrote, however, the flood was the principal issue in Metropolis, which is on the Ohio River.

Springfield has been filmed again—this time by the Advance Motion Picture Company of Chicago. The company took the Lincoln Monument, the State capital and the other places of historic interest. Two reels were made.

A big campaign to interest farmers in central Illinois in growing alfalfa will be conducted. The tours and others features will be filmed, it is announced, by the International Harvester Company, which originated the project and which is a great advocate of industrial moving pictures. It is also reported that the Essanay Company will take some pictures.

The Denvir bill, creating the office of State motion picture inspector and providing for the State licensing of all motion picture machine operators, has been pending on its third reading in the Illinois Senate.

W. W. Olinger, of this city, has opened his new picture show at Petersburg.

The Lyric, on South Fifth Street, is again using an orchestra in the evening.

Blue laws have been the chief topic of discussion among Springfield photoplay men. One of them, Adolph Kunz, proprietor of the Grand Theater, 529 East Washington street, was named in a warrant issued with ten others, through the efforts of the Springfield Law Enforcement League, charging them with laboring on the Sabbath. John O'Connor, of the Empire, and Smith & Burton, of the Gaiety, vaudeville houses which run pictures, were also arrested. The Springfield City Commission, was very much worried by the action. Recently, at an election, a referendum vote was taken upon the question of closing the saloons on Sunday. The citizens decided they wanted them open. The present action is locally termed "spite work," because it grew out of the "I'll-get-even" spirit of some butchers whose meat-markets were closed on Sunday. But the law was on the books and has never been repealed. The moving picture men talked of asking for a referendum vote upon the question of Sunday shows, as they were confident that the proposition would carry. Victor Bender, editor of the "News," said: "The most critical rarely have occasion to find fault with the character of the pictures presented, and the wisdom of closing these popular places of amusement may well be questioned." When the cases above mentioned were brought to Police Magistrate Clark B. Shipp, by the Springfield Law Enforcement League, he characterized them as "small town stuff," and dismissed them. His opinion is unique and of interest to the motion picture trade in general. He said: "The present trouble over the enforcement of the ordinance in question had its incipiency in an attempt some time ago on the part of certain union organizations, which had passed rules compelling the shopkeepers in the organization to close their places of business on Sunday, to also compel non-union keepers of similar shops to observe the Sunday closing order. Under that attempt this ordinance was taken up to the Supreme Court of Illinois, and its validity ascertained. The non-union shopkeepers now come back, with the aid of the Law Enforcement League, and are attempting to put out of Sunday business all lines of commercial traffic.

"This situation contains no element of moral uplift except as regards the members of the Law Enforcement League, who are allowing themselves to be used in this matter under the belief that the attainment of the end they seek would justify any means of reaching there.

"This matter has been brought to the attention of the local municipal government, through its legal department, and has been passed up to this office with the suggestion that this court, in turn, pass it on to a jury. So far as this court is concerned, this and other matters based upon this and other similar ordinances, will be passed upon finally.

"No law or ordinance based thereon can possibly be paramount to the desires and wishes of a majority of the people over whom it has jurisdiction.

"Until the adoption of the commission form of government in this city, and the subsequent taking of office thereunder by the commissioners, it was a debatable question whether certain moral ordinances of the city should be enforced.

"There was no question as to the constitutionality of these ordinances, nor is there now, the sole question being: Does a majority of the electors in this community desire such ordinances, termed by the liberalist 'blue laws,' be literally enforced?

"Certain men were elected commissioners upon a strict law enforcement platform, some of whom deemed it a duty to discover if a majority of persons in the community did or did not want these so-called 'blue laws' enforced immediately. A referendum vote of the people was had upon an ordinance which presented the following question: 'Do you want the saloons closed on Sunday in the city of Springfield?'

"This question was answered by a majority vote in no uncertain terms, and it was decreed in very plain language, of which there can be no misinterpretation, that the people in this community want the open Sunday saloon, under certain regulations.

"Here it is sought to enforce a similar ordinance to collect penalty from citizens of Springfield for operating saloons, theaters, bowling alleys, pool rooms, business houses, shoe shining stands, and other business on Sunday, when, by a clear expression of the votes of Springfield it was ascertained that they wanted saloons operated on Sunday.

"It is a clear proposition that if a majority of the citizens of the community are not only willing to tolerate the Sunday saloon, but will affirmatively champion the existence of the same by going to the polls and casting their ballots to that end, they most assuredly are willing and desirous that other places of business or amusement may be operated on Sunday, free from the operation of the ordinance in question.

"I do not wish to be construed as championing the Sunday saloon, for, on the contrary, I am against it. However, I believe that the majority of the voters of Springfield want it, and that it is my business to tolerate the same or move into some community whose views coincide with mine.

"In conclusion, I beg most earnestly to suggest that the time is ripe when the citizens as well as we public officials of Springfield get together and endeavor to do something of importance for Greater Springfield, instead of spending so much time in petty wrangling and lawsuits over a lot of small town stuff. The defendants under the warants now before me will be discharged."

Corporation Counsel Frank Hatch, for the city, immediately gave notice of an appeal to the County Court, which was filed later. Hatch has been identified with reform movements in Springfield, and a local paper says that his attitude in pushing the cases may cause his removal from the city's legal department.

Affairs of the Central Motion Picture Corporation, with headquarters at Springfield, are a puzzle to the public. The company was granted a charter by the State of Illinois, with capital stock of $1,000. Adevrtisements in local papers offered stock in a $100,000 corporation, which was to build a string of motion picture theaters and operate them at a profit. A representative of the Moving Picture World called the other day at the office, 504 Odd Fellows' Building, which bears the sign of the $100,000 corporation. It was locked. Peering through the frosted glass door he saw it was empty. Inquiry at the office of the building manager, revealed the fact that the man who had been in charge had fled. Also that he owed a rent bill. Furthermore, many other claim-holders had appeared, but the local members of the concern had disclaimed all responsibility. W. H. Ogle, one of the incorporators, was given in the ad as president, but his telephone had been disconnected and could not be reached. Herbert Woods, Sangamon county recorder, was an incorporator, and the newspaper ads ranked him as vice-president. To the World representative he disclaimed knowledge of the affairs of the corporation. He was merely the third incorporator he said. He admitted, however, that the man who had been in charge of the office in the Odd Fellows' Building had incurred bills without authority, and he also fixed the responsibility for the advertising upon the missing office man. When asked if he was not an officer in the corporation, he did not know; he was just the third man. He volunteered the information that Ogle and Davidson, the two other incorporators, had under way a house in Danville, which would soon be opened, and were interested in a Chicago project, and also some other sites. He was reminded of the fact that the company had been granted a charter with $1,000 capital stock, and advertised $100,000 capital. Later an increase had been made, he thought, but could not explain why it had not appeared in the list of corporation changes issued daily by the Secretary of State.

I. Davidson and William H. Ogle, incorporators of and said to be officials in the Central Motion Picture Corporation, former proprietors of the Subway saloon, have been made defendants in a $10,000 damage suit, filed in the Sangamon County Circuit Court by Mrs. Maude L. Bush, widow of William C. Bush, who died November 9, 1912, following trouble in the Subway saloon. Bush was injured at the entrance of the place, and Davidson and Ogle were held until released on the finding of a coroner's jury that Bright's disease had caused his death. Mrs. Bush bases her claim on the fact that intoxicating liquors supplied by the defendants caused her husband's death.

The Vaudette Amusement Company, of this city, had two sets of reels of "From the Manger to the Cross," in Chicago April 27. In addition to the show, which is to remain at the Cort Theater, two performances were given at St. Alphonse Catholic church. All the churches of Carterville united in the exhibition of this picture in that city May 4. The dates in Southern Illinois which were cancelled because of floods, probably will be booked again and played, as many managers who have re-opened their houses, have evinced an anxiety to play this attraction.

Roy Elliott, violinist, and Fletcher Trumpy, cornetist, at the Vaudette Theater, have resigned and will play this summer in an orchestra on a Mississippi River steamboat between St. Louis and St. Paul.

Springfield moving picture men were discussing the relation of the saloon and the picture house the other day, when it was recalled that the block in which the Vaudette and Lyric are located formerly had ten saloons, and now has but five. The moral effect upon adjoining property is apparent.

More legislation affecting moving picture houses has developed in the Illinois legislature. Representative Mitchell has introduced into the House of Representatives a bill prohibiting amusement parks or theaters within 1,000 feet of any public hospital, church or cemetery. A fine of from $200 to $1,000 is provided for each offense. Senator Edmond Beall, one of the most advertised introducers of freak legislation in the state, has offered a bill which makes it necessary for all persons conducting places of amusement to provide for persons in attendance reasonable, proper and adequate accommodation, service and facilities for their comfort, convenience and safety. The Senator did not get the seats he paid for at a Chicago ball game, and the measure, which will keep every photoplay manager on the alert, is the result. Nobody wants to oversell a house when a fine of from $100 to $500 is liable to result.

The Educational Committee of the local Y. M. C. A. is doing great work in seeing that pupils from the public school get to see some good films. "The Coming of Columbus" was recently shown at the association building, and periods were set apart when the pupils from the sixth, seventh and eighth grades of eighteen schools scattered about the city were to attend. The principals of the schools talked on the pictures before their respective pupils.

MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

LOUISVILLE.

THE Orpheum Theater, conducted by the Princess Amusement Company, of Louisville, has reduced admission prices to five cents. This drop leaves the Majestic and Novelty theaters the only moving picture houses in the business section of Louisville, which charge ten cents admission. The Princess several months ago announced that admission to both the Casino and Orpheum theaters would be ten cents. The advance was more or less of an experiment, and it was discovered that even with added attractions, the extra nickel was not a profit-making device. The Casino dropped back to the old rate a couple of months ago, recently being followed by the Orpheum. The latter, while one of the most popular theaters in Louisville, is likely to produce larger profits under the rate of five cents than with double that amount.

The Broadway Amusement Company will shortly open its airdome on Baxter avenue. The "Baxter" will do duty on hot days, while in case of bad weather, the Highland, an orthodox house just across the street, will be utilized. The Highland has been operated throughout the winter. The Broadway is now utilizing vaudeville acts in several mer in having two theaters to run, the state of the weather deciding just which shall be used. The Broadway is now utilizing vaudeville acts in several of its houses. The Royal Theater, recently taken over by the Broadway, is doing a nice volume of business, while the West Broadway Theater, across the street, also is maintaining its customary large following.

Records of the Kentucky Motion Picture Exhibitors' League now are being transferred from Lexington to Louisville, following the election of Fred Dolle, of the Broadway Amusement Company, of Louisville, as secretary, and Louis J. Dittmar as president. Members of the State Association apparently believe in locating the two working executive officers in the same city, that they may the more easily co-operate. This was true last year, when Messrs. Stamper and Ramsey, of Lexington, held the offices of president and secretary. President Dittmar announced that an active membership campaign would be launched at once, this feature having been somewhat neglected up to the present. While most of the large exhibitors of Kentucky are affiliated with the organization, the Association is not alone for the more influential members of the profession. Mr. Dittmar believes that every exhibitor, regardless of any consideration, will be benefited by joining the Kentucky Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and will work along that line.

Members of the Kentucky Motion Picture Exhibitors' League were non-committal after attending a performance at B. F. Keith's Theater, where the Edison "talking pictures" are shown. The members of the organization attended the performance specifically for the purpose of studying the pictures. It is not probable that the pictures will be installed in many Kentucky houses in the near future, owing to the somewhat complex operation and the necessity of skilled operators. The pictures at Keith's are working much more smoothly than when first installed, but still get out of gear once in a while.

The Hippodrome Amusement Company, of Lexington, Ky., took moving pictures of the "Society Race Meeting" recently given at the country home of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence LeBus, of Lexington. One reel of film was made of the meet, showing every feature of interest. The race film is expected to be a business-puller throughout the Bluegrass State, where racing pictures are always warmly greeted.

The Colle Carnival, an annual event with the students at Central University, Danville, Ky., is to be photographed, according to a recent announcement. The carnival is the most brilliant event of the season in the college town, everyone participating. The streets of Danville are turned over to the merry-makers, and in enthusiasm, at least, New Orleans has nothing on the Kentucky town during the annual event.

J. E. Stivers, who has been connected with a moving picture house at Lexington, Ky., has returned to his old stand at Jackson, Ky., and has taken charge of the Hipp. Mr. Stivers plans to install a couple of vaudeville acts with the moving pictures now being shown, believing the addition would be popular with Jackson residents.

Conventions have helped Louisville exhibitors recently, though bad weather has about evened the score. The Kentucky Printers' Cost Congress gathered in Louisville recently, and many of the printers took advantage of the opportunity to inspect the handsome moving picture theaters of the metropolis. Many expressions of admiration were heard over the equipment of the Majestic, Ideal and other beautiful houses. The Kentucky State Optical Association also gathered in Louisville for its annual convention. The opticians paid particular attention to the moving picture theaters, attempting to figure whether or not the films are responsible for eye troubles. It was the general opinion that under present conditions, and with modern equipment, patrons of the animated pictures are in no danger, and may gratify their taste as often as they wish without taking chances of hurting their optics.

The Novelty Theater secured the contract for handling the moving pictures shown at the plant of the Louisville Paper Company in conjunction with the annual convention of the Kentucky Printers' Cost Congress. The Novelty staff was forced to work under a severe handicap. Facilities were poor, but unusually good results were attained, considering the conditions. Both stereopticon slides and moving pictures were used to illustrate a lecture on paper-making. In addition, "The Cactus County Lawyer," which was a favorite a couple of years ago, was shown and proved as effective as of yore.

The West End Amusement Company, of which E. W. Clay is manager, has reopened its airdome at Twenty-sixth and Alford streets. The theater has been extended to seat 3,000 people. A feature will be an illustrated song each week. This section of the program has been eliminated by many Louisville exhibitors, but Mr. Clay believes there are many who enjoy it. Four reels of Universal service and two vaudeville acts will complete the bill at the airdome.

A. F. Mayer, manager of the Louisville branch of the Central Film Service Company, celebrated a momentous occasion in fitting style recently. All exhibitors who encountered Mr. Mayer on April 28 were entitled to one drink. Mr. Mayer is an uncle, a nephew having arrived in Chicago on the date mentioned.

Simplex

motion picture machines have been selected by Mr. George Kleine for the projection of

QUO VADIS

Never has there been such a superb photo-drama.

Never have the New York newspapers been so sincere in their praise of motion pictures as in their comments on Quo Vadis. Never, in the opinion of experts, has there been such perfect projection as at the Astor Theatre.

We wish to call your attention to the statement appearing on page 605, May 10th number of the "Moving Picture World" as follows : .

> "The Quo Vadis pictures have been so successful that six Power's No. 6's have been purchased for other companies of this concern."

This was an error. (See correction on page 711.)

We are pleased to quote the following letter from Mr. George Kleine :

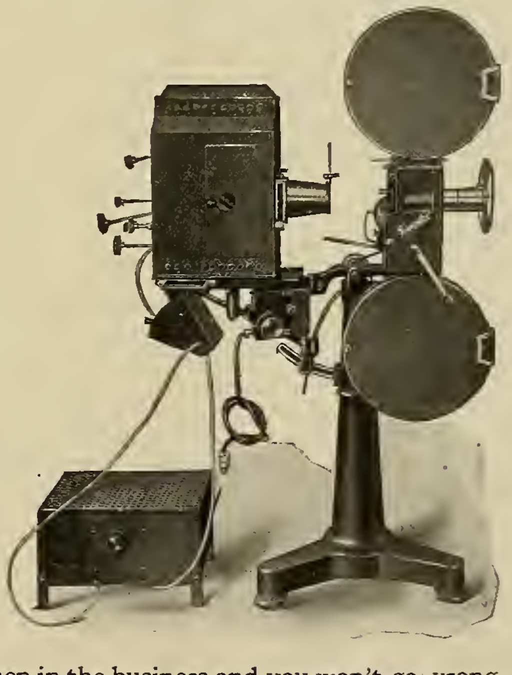
May fifth,
Nineteen Hundred Thirteen.

Mr. H. B. Coles,
Precision Machine Co.,
No. 317 E. 34th Street,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Coles: I wish to thank you and Mr. Cannock for your personal assistance in the installation of the two Simplex machines at the Astor Theatre for the Quo Vadis production. I was particularly solicitous to obtain the best possible projection for this extraordinary photo-drama, and have never seen a better film picture than the Simplex machine is giving at the Astor.

I shall be well satisfied if your machines give us equally good results at the Garrick in Philadelphia and the Academy of Music in Baltimore, to open next Monday, May 12th.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) GEO. KLEINE.



We can prove our statements.

Buy the machine which is selected by the best men in the business and you won't go wrong.

We don't try to pull the wool over your eyes with misleading statements.

Write today for catalogue A describing this wonderful projector.

SELIG.

HIS FATHER'S DEPUTY (May 19).—John Wilson goes to the mountain-town bank to draw out the pay-roll. Sam Marvin and Ed Hanley "pike" this proceeding and ride on ahead, up the road, to await the coming of the superintendent in his auto. Jim Carter, the son of Sheriff Carter, also his deputy, observes their actions, and finds their pictures in prison records. In the interim Sam and Ed, well-muffled in their slickers, capture the coin and hide it at a road-house. The deputy tells his father his suspicions. The latter cannot arrest the men, as the superintendent cannot identify them; but he finds his son, the deputy, drinking in company with them. He raises a commotion, takes away his star, and discharges him for drunkenness. This puts him "strong" in the confidence of the desperadoes, and he rides away with them to their mountain fastness. The deputy takes advantage of Ed's absence to slip the "bracelets" on his partner, but Jim, returning, opens fire. They leave their ex-friend for dead and ride away with the money. When he recovers consciousness, he takes up their trail and locates their quarters in a road-house. Jim has another hand-to-hand fight and bests both men, handcuffing them together. He also secures the bag of coin. When he comes back with his prisoners his father gives him his star, and then explains the joke to Sam and Ed, in the seclusion of their jail cells.

THE TATTLE BATTLE (May 20).—Two little tots have a babyish quarrel in a sandpile, and they toddle home and tell their mamas. These worthy women send children a little older to correct the matter, and they, in turn, get the mothers and fathers involved. Then the neighbors take sides and finally the police are called to suppress a riot. The blue coats cannot arbitrate, so the fire department is called in. They throw cold water on the hot-heads. Next day a wise old magistrate reads them a lecture. Finally, they all make up, and the juvenile disputes are happily adjusted.

THE LEOPARD TAMER (May 20).—A tale of the redoubtable tamer of beasts, who figures so colorfully in the bills and so sensationally in the dens of his animals, but who is not so unflinchingly brave when it comes to facing a hectoring old woman who demonstrates that she is truly his "better-half."

INDIAN SUMMER (May 22).—In the Springtime, Robert leaves his love, Virginia, and goes to fight for Dixie in the War of the Rebellion. In leading his regiment in a desperate charge he is felled by a blow on the head and left in the field as dead. Eventually he is picked up and taken to a hospital. His memory has gone and soon afterwards he loses his identity and is posted as "missing." Thereafter he becomes a wanderer on the face of the earth. Virginia refuses to believe him dead, and waits patiently through the years for his return. He has gone up and down the country as an itinerant peddler, forgetful of his former identity. Now, after years of restless moving about, some irresistible desire seizes him and he returns to his old home, finding it in spite of himself. As he comes upon the scene of his earlier life the faithful Virginia is set upon by a thieving tramp. Robert rushes to her rescue, and the blow he receives in the ensuing fight eventually restores his memory. After all the years the good lovers meet again at the old gate in the glowing twilight of Indian Summer, never now to part until death does them separate.

THE NOISY SIX (May 23).—Dick Carter, aged six, and an orphan, lives with his grandparents. The only resource of the family is the army pension of the old man. Just when the money is needed most, it is lost by the old veteran. The little boy, impressed by the magnitude of the job, writes a letter to Heaven for help; but, as he cannot reach the mail box, puts it into the slot of a hitching post. "The Noisy Six," the chief mischief makers of their college class, on a night raid, drag away the hitching post, and are much sobered when they intercept the letter of the orphan boy to Heaven. They return the post to its original location with a letter of reply enclosed. Then they follow the boy home and surreptitiously slip in the amount of money that was lost. The boy and old Carter are led to believe that the money has come straight from Heaven. "The Noisy Six" stopped their mischief-making for an errand of mercy, and impressed youth in the faith of the higher power.

THE STOLEN MELODY (May 21).—Rudolph Burmeister, an old musician in straightened circumstances, is shown composing at a piano. Suddenly his face lights up, as the inspired melody fills the air. He repeats it and then writes it on music paper. In the room above the old musician, lives Richard Davidge, a keen-eared young man, who is also poor, but whose face is filled with the look of lurking evil. He listens with quickening interest to the music of the old master. The new melody fascinates him and he writes it down as he hears it. Then he rushes out with it. The old musician calls his daughter and she listens to the air, and is at once thrilled with the haunting beauty of the melody. The scene shifts to the office of Henry Richard, a popular publisher, when Richard Davidge appears with his freshly written manuscript. He knows the value of his discovery and plays it in a fashion that wins the publisher, and he gets it on a royalty basis, with $500 in advance. Time passes. The old musician has been seriously ill, but now a change has come and he is convalescent. Davidge has deserted his shabby quarters and is now rolling in luxury as a result of his profits on the stolen "His Dream of Youth." He is the guest of honor at a "turft-hunters" home on the Riverside Drive. Herr Burmeister himself now goes to the music-publisher and proceeds to play his composition. He is informed that it is "The Dream of Youth," already their best seller. He is humiliated and amazed, and returns home crest-fallen. His daughter takes to the matter more seriously. She visits the publisher and recognizes the picture on the title page as that of the man who lived upstairs and moved away so suddenly, immediately after her father composed the piece. Then it transpires that the impudent musical imposter has been convicted of grand larceny in London, and is a fugitive from justice, "wanted at Scotland Yard." Davidge is exposed at a swell reception in his honor, and is taken away by the police; and good old Burmeister gets the reward he deserved for giving the world a new glory in melody.

ESSANAY.

INTO THE NORTH (Special, 2 parts, May 19).—Frank Davis, a notorious crook, enters the Fourth National Bank of Minneapolis, shoots the cashier and robs the vault of several thousands of dollars. Just as he is about to leave the building, he brushes against Fred Wentworth, the book-keeper, who is returning to do some night work. Fear overcomes the thief and he drops the package at Wentworth's feet. Wentworth, not realizing what had happened, picks up the package, enters the bank, and is overcome when he discovers the lifeless form of his fellow workman. The president of the bank enters at this juncture and discovers Wentworth standing over the lifeless body of the cashier with a revolver in his hands. Circumstantial evidence sends Wentworth to prison, to serve an unjust sentence. Fate however lends a hand to Wentworth, and he escapes. A few months later we see the escaped convict across the border line into Northern Canada, weak from the lack of food and sick from exposure. A Canadian mounted policeman discovers Wentworth and takes him to the humble headquarters of the captain, where he is nursed back to his normal condition. In the meantime, Frank Davis, fearing he will be caught sooner or later in the States, makes his getaway into Northern Canada. The straight and narrow path was never meant for Davis, he now occupying his time by smuggling whiskey and distributing the fiery liquid among the Indians. Davis finally persuades an old Buck to sell him his daughter, a beautiful French-Canadian Indian. Wentworth, now fully recovered, joins the Mounted Police and is selected by the Chief to run down the smugglers. The new recruit meets the young and charming Indian girl, who tells him that Davis is the chief of the gang, and that he exports and sells his whiskey, which has been bottled and placed inside of logs, to deceive anyone who might question him. Wentworth examines a log near the grate in Davis' log cabin, and discovers that the Indian girl had told him the truth. Davis enters at this juncture and covers Wentworth with a revolver. Wentworth unhesitatingly knocks the weapon from the murderer's hand and a fierce battle ensues in which Wentworth is overpowered. Davis runs from the cabin only to be shot down by a mounted policeman. In the meantime, the Chief of the mounted police is visited by his brother, who happens to be no other than the President of the bank in Minneapolis. When Wentworth is brought before the captain, the president recognizes him. Davis makes a dying confession to the mounted police, stating that Wentworth was sent to jail for a murder the former had committed. This confession is handed to the president of the bank in the presence of the Chief of the mounted police, who exonerates Wentworth and promotes him for bravery.

BUSTER BROWN, TIGE, AND THEIR CREATOR, R. F. OUTCAULT (May 20).—Buster Brown and Tige in real life enjoy their creator's caricature of them. Having purchased box seats at a theater where R. F. Outcault is appearing, they are given a splendid opportunity to see themselves as others see them. R. F. Outcault enjoys the entertainment as much as his porteges, and delights in giving their secrets away to the public.

THE LETTER'S MISSION (May 21).—Tom Gallagher, a shrewd Irish office boy in the employ of Mr. Carney, plays a terrible trick on his employer, which almost cost the latter his wife's affections. Not only did this letter get Mr. Carney into trouble, but it caused friction between Carney's cook, Bedelia, and Officer O'Brien. The trouble did not stop here. Carney's daughter Gwendolyn, and her fiance, Harold Wheeler, had a terrible spat over it. Gallagher is finally caught and discharged.

A WIDOW OF NEVADA (May 22).—Jim Rider leases an old played out mine. Six months later he strikes gold. Foster, owner of the mine, steals Rider's lease and informs him that the contract has expired. Widow Gale, in love with Rider, secures the lease by a clever ruse. The lease is returned to Jim Rider, who rejoices in it's return and in the acceptance of the widow's hand in marriage.

JEALOUSY (May 23).—Winston Wallace, a traveling man telegraphs his wife that he will be unable to attend the grand opera with her that evening, on account of an importent business engagement, which will keep him in Milwaukee over night. Mrs. Wallace is disappointed. Her son informs her that he is going to Milwaukee to the traveling men's mask ball. Mrs. Wallace becomes suspicious and imagines her husband having a gala time at the ball with other women. Mrs. Wallace's imagination carries her to the extreme. Just as her nerves are about to give way under the strain she has worked herself into, the butler announces her husband's return. Mrs. Wallace is overjoyed. This only goes to prove what your imagination will do if you allow it to get the best of you.

BRONCHO BILLY AND THE EXPRESS RIDER (May 24).—Broncho Billy in love with Bessie Hendricks, the daughter of the ranch owner for whom he is working, discovers to his sorrow that the pretty girl is in love with Ralph Spaulding, the pony express rider. Heartsore, Broncho Billy enters a saloon and proceeds to get intoxicated. During his visit to the saloon, Hal Dawson enters and tells Broncho Billy that the express rider has just received a bag of gold to deliver to the nearby town. He implores the heartsick westerner to help him hold up the express rider. Broncho Billy refuses emphatically. Returning to his bunk house some time later, Broncho Billy discovers that the men have robbed Bessie's sweetheart. Broncho Billy makes the men turn the money over to him, which he returns to the unconscious messenger, who had been left by the roadside for dead.

LUBIN.

MARGARET'S PAINTING (May 19). — Robert Ford, a young artist, with his wife Margaret, and baby are living in comparative poverty. Their only income is derived from her illustrations upon which work he looks down in lofty disdain. His is an art, hers a trade. One day he rescues a Pomoranian dog from some cruel boys to the great relief of Mrs. von Norden, a wealthy society woman. He would leave but she insists on having his card, which he gives her. She tells her husband of the kind artist that rescued "dear Fido" and that they must patronize him. They call at the studio and offer to have his painting exhibited at the Academy. He is thankful. The picture is exhibited and as Mrs. von Norden is a society leader and Ford's patron, he becomes a success and is lionized by society women, and while at one of their parties his baby dies. The critics say his pictures lack soul and feeling, which angers him and he decides this is caused by Margaret's mourning and sadness, and so their studio must be divided. He can work better alone. On her return from the cemetery, Margaret wishes for a study of her baby, and tries to draw him, but black and white is so cold, she tries colors and succeeds. The picture becomes sacred to her. During Robert's absence Mr. and Mrs. von Norden call to see his latest canvas. They see the baby's picture and say that at last Ford has put feeling into his work. Robert is surprised at the baby's picture and denies it is his. Margaret enters and a scene follows, ending in Robert asking assistance in a love scene. Her picture is hung in the Academy and receives the highest award.

KIDNAPPING FATHER (May 20).—John Worth, a rich old banker, disinherits his son, Robert, for marrying against his wishes. The boy gets a position as chauffeur with a taxicab company and the next day the father, finding that his car is out of order, calls a taxi and by chance Robert is sent to answer the call. Robert decides to kidnap his father and hold him for ransom. With the aid of two hired thugs he imprisons the old man in a lonely, deserted shack down by the river. He then slips a note under the door reading, "Write your check for a thousand dollars, or we will blow the place up tonight." The father tries to escape through a window but he is too large for the opening and gets wedged in and can't get either out or back into the room. Robert tells his wife of his plan and arranges for her to rescue his father. She does and the old man rewards her with a thousand dollars. He grows very fond of the girl and questions her. She tells him she is married, opens the door and Robert comes in. The father is thunder struck for a moment, but finally collects himself and starts to denounce the boy. The girl intercedes and through fondness for the girl the old man relents and all ends happily.

THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S CONSCIENCE (special—2 parts—May 21).—Tony Gazeco, one of the workers in the factory, is an anarchist and agitator. Being of excitable nature he is looked upon by the other men as a leader and during the lunch hour makes impassionate speeches. Will and May Mason passing in an auto are witnesses to one of the tirades and going to the office of Fred Jackson, the owner, tell him of the probable strike. The two men become friendly and Jackson is invited to dine with the Mason's that evening. As the auto drives off Jackson goes to meet his men, an altercation ensues and Gazeco is discharged. Gazeco's wife with her child in her arms goes to Jackson and begs that her husband be reinstated. Jackson tells her to send Tony to call at the office. The Italian, three parts drunk, goes and another altercation takes place in which Tony pulls a revolver, which is taken from him by the factory owner. The Italian is kicked out and Jackson puts the gun in his pocket. He then proceeds to keep his dinner engagement with the Mason's. He is cordially received, but at the same time Mason, who is the district attorney receives a 'phone from his assistant, requesting his presence at the office quick. Mason orders his auto and kisses his wife good-bye. Telling Fred to make himself at home, he drives to the depot: Jackson, being left alone with the wife, proceeds to infatuate her and she appears to be interested. Then Jackson tells May of his encounter with the Italian during which he takes out the gun and carelessly lays it on a desk. May appears horrified and Jackson asks her if it would have made any difference to her if he had been killed. Her affirmative answer gives him encouragement. The Italian appears at the window and takes in the scene. By this time Jackson has thoroughly fascinated the woman and she allows herself to be taken in his arms. Mason having missed the train returns to the house and enters just as Jackson is about to kiss his wife. His first impression is to kill Jackson, then feeling that his wife was equally to blame he retires to his room. Presently it dawns on May that she is allowing too much, and she turns on Jackson and strikes him in the face. Mason who is upstairs hears a shot fired and rushing down finds his wife standing over the dead body of Jackson. Tony is seen rushing from the grounds and is caught by the chauffeur. The police are sent for and Mason, seeing a way to clear his wife, accuses the Italian. Gazeco is arrested and tried: he is prosecuted by the district attorney and sentenced to the chair. The morning that Mason reads of the execution he is in agony at the thought that he has permitted an innocent man to be executed, for a crime that he believes to have been done by his wife. A messenger arrives with a note written by the Italian, which reads:

"Dear Lady, Forgive me, I coward. I did not want Rosa know me bad man, so said you bad. When you fight him by window I shoot. My Rosa not know please," Tony. Frantic with joy Mason falls at his wife's feet and sobs out his plea for forgiveness.

A PERILOUS RIDE (May 22).—Nellie Merrill, a telegraph operator and station agent in charge of a small station at Lowery, Arizona, has plighted her troth with Tom, a young foreman, of a nearby ranch, and the couple are looking forward to the time when Nellie can resign her position with the railroad and they can marry. Nellie's beauty, however, has attracted the attention of Senior Gazanga, an unscrupulous Mexican, who owns and manages a large copper mine just outside of Lowery. One day while he is annoying Nellie with his unwelcome attentions, he goes a step too far and her frightened cry for aid is heard by Tom who happens to be outside of the station. The Mexican is quickly put to route in a manner which he regards as humiliating and he determines on revenge. Returning to his mine, he instructs his foreman to round up twenty-five or thirty of his companions whom he can trust and they start out with the determination to abduct the pretty operator. In the meantime, Nellie happens to see one of Gazanga's scouts peering in at her through the window and becoming alarmed, sends a note to Tom, telling him of her fears and requesting him to join her at the station, which he does. Gazanga's men approach the station and begin an attack. A thrilling battle ensues, continuing until the gallant defender's find their ammunition is running short when Nellie, by unexpected means, manages to make her escape from the besieged building and returns with aid in time to save the day.

HIS FIRST EXPERIENCE (May 23).—John Joline, who is old enough to be married and happy, comes home from his office with a headache, to find a new family moving in next door, and his valet, Muggins, already in love with the new maid. Muggins is lectured severely. Joline learns that the new neighbors are Roxanne Cameron, a widow, and Buster, her little boy. Joline detests boys as much as he detests women. As soon as he finds that Buster has slipped through a hole in the fence to make friends with his collie dog, he captures him and takes him home. He is overwhelmed by the charms of Roxanne, and instead of repeating his lecture, he stammers an apology and falls in love with her. Some time later Roxanne goes on a visit, leaving Buster in charge of her maid. Joline takes her to the train and has reason to be encouraged over the progress of his suit. The same afternoon Muggins and Maggie elope, leaving Buster asleep in Mr. Joline's study, with a note beside him. Joline returns and finds the note and then Buster. Joline has grown fond of the boy, but the responsibilities of temporary charge of a five-year-old seem infinite. Muggins gone and nobody home next door, he gets a good supper for Buster, and failing nerve to undress the youngster, rocks him to sleep in his arms. Roxanne is expected back the next day and Joline and the boy watch for her. She arrives and Joline sends Buster to meet her. Buster before going, hands Joline a painfully written letter, which Joline reads as follows:

"I like you because you have a nice dog. I like you too. So does my mama. If you was my papa I guess you would let me play with the dog whenever I wanted to. I wish you was my papa.
Your friend,
Buster Cameron."

This is enough for even an old bachelor to enthuse over, and Joline has grown tired of bachelor life. There was but one way to end it and the way led him into the house next door, and into Roxanne's arms. So Mr. Joline's first experience in love, ended in a honeymoon, and it was Buster who lit the moon.

DETECTIVE DOT (May 23).—Dot Tryon is a stenographer, in a detective bureau, but she wants to be a lady "Sherlock Holmes." She is such a nuisance that to keep her quiet they give her a badge, and send her out to look for a bank burglar, for whom a reward of $5,000 is offered. Dot chases a bearded man, who appeals to a policeman for protection. Then she gets after another man with a beard, but his wife comes to his rescue, and musses up Dot, before hubby can call the policeman. Dot goes back to the office and the typewriter, but that evening as she goes home a man insults her, and she arrests him at the point of her hat pin. He is smooth shaven, but he is the bank thief, all right and Dot wins the reward.

BRIGHTENED SUNSETS (May 24).—Rosemary Sweet is a dear old widow of Blueberry Corners. She lives alone in her cottage, generally neglected by neighbors, and even scandalized by some through the gossip of one of the villagers, Hilda Splugg, because she accepts the advances of Henry Widdle, the physician of the village. Alice, adores Rosemary, and makes frequent visits to the sitting room of the widow. Rosemary reads that a relative has died leaving a fortune to his cousin. She supposing herself to be the cousin, communicates with the lawyers and receives a reply to come to New York and they will adjust matters. She calls on the lawyers only to be told she is not the heir referred to, that the demise was another party and no relative to hers. The dear old soul journeys back to her country home worn out with fatigue. But at Blueberry Corners she had not been forgotten. The old physician longed for her return day after day, and Alice, the little girl, continued to make daily visits to Rosemary's cottage hoping she will return. She arrives at her cottage in a rainstorm, contracts violent illness, and lies alone in her bedroom. The next day little Alice, continuing to make her accustomed call, at last discovers the door to be unlocked, enters and finds Rosemary ill in bed. She summons the old physician, who makes the most hurrier call of his life in his old rattletrap of a buggy and promptly administers medical relief. Rosemary recovers and the repentant neighbors fill her room with gifts and cheer. In her gratefulness towards the physician she finally accepts him and they become engaged, both of their lives being thus brightened in their sunsets.

BIOGRAPH.

THE HICKSVILLE EPICURE (May 22).—It may have been due to the Purity League that there were no prisoners in the town jail and the constable slept on his job. Anyway, a drunken tramp appears as the first criminal in the town. He proves himself an epicure of the cook stove, and a handy prisoner around the jail. Naturally, the constable is loath to let him go. The farce relates how President Purity stepped in and settled the case. She broke up the constable's little game when he would sentence the prisoner for life.

CINDERELLA AND THE BOOB (May 22).—In this film the Biograph comedy players have given their version of the old tale of Cinderella. It must be said it does not strictly follow the old tale, and whether you like the change or not depends on your sense of humor—but it should make you laugh if there is any laugh in you.

Broncho Headliners

"The Sea Dog"

Two Reels, May 21

A Dramatic Subject of Pathetic Tenderness, Showing the Attachment of a Little Boy for an Old Sailor.

The retired sea captain and his grandson become fast friends. The boy's father, a minister, objects to the friendship of the two, owing to the manners and language of the old man. The grandfather is deeply hurt, and goes away "to learn etiquette." During his absence the child pines for his grand-dad, and, becoming violently ill, calls for him in his delirium. To save the child's life the old man is telegraphed for, and a touching scene takes place as the little one has his wandering mind restored.

OLAF—AN ATOM (May 19).—A story of reciprocated kindness in an unkind world. After the death of his wife, Olaf became a wanderer in search of kindness. In his travels he met but one kind person, the homesteader's wife. She gave him food and in return he saved the homesteader and his family from the artful land-grabbers. But in their joy they forgot Olaf and he again became a wanderer.

JUST GOLD (May 24).—The brothers choose between love and gold. The three brothers sought the gold regions. The fourth chose to be a stay-at-home. He sought just love, and love was his reward: in the happiness of two old parents and the heart of a sweet girl. But those in the gold regions, each for himself, seeking just gold, found their ill rewards in the sordid earth of the "Bad Lands."

PATHEPLAY.

PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 20 (May 19).—New York, N. Y.—Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the new ambassador from England, arrives here on his way to take up his duties at Washington.

Cambridge, Mass.—The 'Varsity crews begin their spring training.

Luneville, France.—The latest type of German military dirigible balloon, out for a trial trip, lands in this town, creating an international incident which fortunately does not result seriously.

New York, N. Y.—Twenty-five hundred letter carriers of the New York Letter Carriers' Association march to St. Patrick's Cathedral, where memorial services are held in memory of the deceased members of the Association.

Athens, Greece.—The late King George, assassinated in Salonika, is buried with great pomp and ceremony, the new King, Constantine XII, leaving the widowed Queen at the church and following the bier on foot.

Comic Section.—Mutt expatiates and Jeff reciprocates.

And Many Others.

A JOCKEY FOR LOVE (May 20).—Max meets the Countess Duvienne in a very distressing moment, for she has just learned that her jockey will be unable to ride her horse, the favorite for the owner's stakes. In that irresistible way of his, Max volunteers to ride in the jockey's stead. The countess thanks him but cannot accept his offer, because of his excessive weight. The gallant Max, nothing daunted, decides to reduce. After running a mile with a forty-pound dumbell, he looks like a wet rag, but goes gamely to a Turkish bath. This treatment brings Max down to weight, and mounted on the countess' horse, Max fights every stride of the tight race, but wins, not only the race, but the countess as well.

THE CITY OF ROUEN, FRANCE (May 20).—One of the oldest cities in France, with a quaint charm that is all its own. The beautiful hand-coloring of the film makes it truly a feast for the eye.

THE PRICE OF SILENCE (May 21).—Amy Frazer hears the call of the footlights and deserts her husband and baby daughter to answer. The daughter, Marion, is raised to young womanhood with the understanding that her mother is dead. After her father's death, Marion marries a wealthy young broker. The notice of this marriage first brings the thought of her daughter back to the mother and she attempts to see her, but Marion's husband interferes and bribes Mrs. Frazer to keep the knowledge of her profession from his wife. The frequent visits of the strange woman nearly wreck the happiness of the young lovers and finally precipitate a crisis in which Marion learns the truth. The call of the blood is too much for the young wife to overcome, and forgiving her mother, she opens wide her arms and welcomes her to her new home.

THE RIGHT OF WAY (May 22).—A poverty-stricken laborer scurries from his home to get a physician for his child. On his way to Dr. Huber's office, he sees a child falling from a window above him. Down, down the child drops, but into McCann's strong arms. He bears the baby back to her mother, who, wild with joy, seeks to reward him, but McCann will not wait. The mother pleads for his name and McCann gives it, then hurries on to Dr. Huber's office. The doctor is expected back any moment and McCann waits. A few minutes and there enters the office a man of wealth and power, one Nicholas Preston. He is informed by the maid that the laborer is first. The roll of bills pressed into her hand convinces the girl that Preston shall be first served. The doctor returns. Preston is being ushered into his office when McCann protests. A fight ensues, but justice triumphs, and Dr. Huber accompanies McCann to his home, where he guarantees to bring the girl around. Preston secures another doctor for his sick child and the physician informs him that she owes her life to the man who caught her when she fell from the window. Overjoyed, Preston hurries to the home of the man and there McCann and Preston again meet. Preston begs forgiveness and McCann is touched by his plea. Dr. Huber is told to send the McCann bill to Preston's office for payment.

NIGHT BIRDS (May 23).—Few people have ever seen an owl. They know what they are like, and have perhaps heard them screech, but this film affords an opportunity to study them at close range, and to understand why they are called wise. Forest owls, barn owls, white owls, young owls and wise old owls are shown. Also there is a corking good fight between a forest owl and a rat.

THE AILANTHUS SILKWORM (May 23).—A study of the habits of the little worm that is responsible for the fabric that delights every woman's heart. It is interesting, it is instructive, and it's new.

A WOMAN SCORNED (May 24).—When Phil Barton spurned his old sweetheart over a petty jealousy, he little suspected that she would turn on him so suddenly. She sent him to jail for a crime he did not commit, tortured him after his escape, but she made one mistake when she attempted to notify the police. Barton's friend and prospective father-in-law, Dr. Swain, was present at the time and through him Phil's name was cleared and he married the girl he really loved. Crane Wilbur and Octavia Handworth play the leads, and they are at their best, which means that the characters are perfectly portrayed.

THE OPEN SECRET (Special, 2 parts, May 23).—Gaston Jouvenal, a retired banker, and his wife, are anxious that their son and heir, Henry, shall marry the daughter of a favored neighbor. When Henry is consulted in the matter, he refuses to consider the proposal, but will give no reason. Mr. and Mrs. Jouvenal storm and rage, but the young man is obdurate. By a chance meeting a few days later, the elder Jouvenal finds that his son has been married for quite some time, and is the proud father of a daughter. His curiosity overcomes him and he visits his son's home. He finds the doctor in attendance upon the baby girl, although the illness is not serious, but the sight of the suffering little one plays a strange, pathetic tune on the old man's heartstrings. He begs his charming daughter-in-law not to tell his wife of his visit and leaves the house with a new joy in his life. Mrs. Jouvenal, however, has herself learned of her son's marriage, and, fearing that her husband will disown Henry, she keeps the knowledge secret.

In their surreptitious visits to Henry's home the elderly couple frequently miss meeting each other by only a few seconds, and their efforts to avoid being discovered visiting the house are highly diverting. When the opportunity offers, Henry and his young wife decide to precipitate matters, and accordingly arrange a little scheme which brings Henry's father and mother to the house at the same time. When Mr. and Mrs. Jouvenal arrive their grandchild greets them and they meet each other face to face in their son's home, and it is then they both confess to the happiness they feel.

MELIES

GOLD AND THE GILDED WAY (May 22).—Two young Australian prospectors, Brown and Smith, ride up to a settler's shanty. The settler is an old man, living alone and endeavoring to clear a heavily stumped bit of land. He places before the visitors the best fare he has and moves off toward the creek with bucket in hand. Brown kindly relieves him of the bucket and himself goes to fetch the water. At the creek, Brown discovers indications of gold. That evening, having accepted the old man's hospitality for the night, they steal off to the creek and their beliefs are confirmed. They buy out the settler for 100 pounds.

Two years later a prosperous mine is developed. Brown sticks to the property, but Smith sells out his half interest for 20,000 pounds and goes to the city. Brown becomes rich, and in his prosperity befriends the old settler making him confidential man at the mine.

After ten years, Smith returns, a poor and dissipated tramp, to find his old partner still managing the mine, married, and happy in his home life. Smith is given a job at the mine, and an attempt is made to reform him, but the seeds of envy are sown too deep. He is ungrateful, jealous, and sullen, and tries to rob the mine. The old settler foils the plot. Smith is driven away in disgrace, goes out prospecting for another mine, and dies of thirst in the bush—the end of a career along the gilded way.

CINES.

RED WINS (May 20).—Mr. Carter will not consent to the marriage of his daughter, Bernice, to Fred Warren, a reputable gambler. Marguerite, an adventuress, discovers Bernice's photograph on Fred's person, and immediately her jealousy is aroused.

Mr. Carter receives a letter from the detective agency which he had employed, informing him that Fred had gone to Ravisloe for the purpose of gambling. Mr. Carter takes Bernice to Ravisloe to find Fred gambling, and Marguerite, suspecting that Fred had gone with the Carters, determines to follow them.

Fred immediately tries his fortune at roulette, but, not wishing to be found gambling, he has Ernest, his friend, play for him, whom he instructs to stake everything on "red."

"I am only amusing myself here," is the explanation Mr. Carter gives Fred upon meeting him in the gambling rooms. While the game is in progress Fred wins at almost every turn of the wheel, and his conversation with Mr. Carter is so broken that it is apparent to the latter that Fred is more interested in the game. When at last Fred has won a considerable sum of money, Ernest says.

"Take this money and tell Bernice that you are rich and wish to marry her." He promises her that he will never gamble again, and Bernice, with new faith in him, accepts.

Just as her father comes in, Marguerite tries to create a scene, but her utmost efforts go to naught. As the young couple leave they receive hearty congratulations and a fond farewell from the father.

CURING A WOULD-BE AVIATOR (May 24).—Bloomer, a cadet at a Military Academy, almost disrupts the morning drill, when he rushes through the lines exclaiming, "Look at the balloon!" While the men are in derision for his action, a hazing is planned for Bloomer. He is quickly tied up in a bag and he first experiences a rough ride in a wheelbarrow, after which he is dumped into a hay-mound. He is next suspended in midair at the end of a rope, where he is left to dangle until he is released by his superior officers. After many such painful subjections, he is finally given a note to deliver to the landlady, which upon reading, she begets herself into such a passion that before Bloomer leaves the room, he is a sorrowful looking spectacle.

EXCEEDING THE TIME LIMIT (May 24).—Mr. Henpeck is granted permission by his obstinate wife to enjoy an evening to himself. His only restriction is that he must be home at nine o'clock. Busily engaged in a card game with a number of the boys, the time goes by more rapidly than usual, and when he looks up he is surprised to find he has only five minutes to reach home. His progress home is impeded in various and humorous ways. How he gains entrance to his home after reaching it and being locked out, affords a ludicrous climax.

THE MAID AND THE YARN (May 24).—Bess is busy reading a book when her folks come in and command her to spend more time at work. They give her a ball of yarn, a crochet needle and set her to work. She is left alone and while moving around in her chair she loses track of the ball of yarn. It happens to have been caught in her belt at her back and out of her own view. Being a girl of quick temper and strong in athletics, the home is in so much of a turmoil when her parents return that Bess has not been subjected to work since.

ECLIPSE.

THE CHICKEN INDUSTRY, FRANCE (May 21).—The chicken industry in France has reached the height that hardly no other country can boast. In this picture is shown a model stock farm. Feeding and cramming poultry follow; after which their methods of plucking and sanitary packing are shown. The special method used to whiten and make the flesh tender is also illustrated.

BIG GAME (May 21).—These views were taken at the London Zoo, England, and show many of the largest animals in captivity. The different species of each family are also shown, making it a most educational and interesting picture.

IN THE TYROLESE ALPS, AUSTRIA (May 21).—By the most extraordinary efforts these views were taken along the rivers between snow-capped mountain ranges, which running down to the rivers far below, display by the vegetation along their sides, every season of the year.

THE JAPANESE DAGGER (Special—2 parts—May 12).—Lieutenant Davis of the Asiatic squadron, while in Tokyo, Japan, buys an old dagger as a curio. While showing his curio to a Japanese friend, a quaint inscription is found on the blade, reading as follows: "Never must I leave this country; evil will befall anyone who carries me away." Undisturbed by any foreboding, Davis brings it home and hangs it on the wall in his studio.

The Lieutenant makes the acquaintance of Count Firoenzi and his beautiful sister, Bertha. They become intimate friends and while calling at his studio the Countess finds a photograph of a young woman. Stung with jealousy, she takes it with her, together with an envelope which she suspects contains a love letter.

That evening an ominous thing happens! Without of apparent cause the dagger falls from the wall and breaks the glass of the Countess' portrait. Davis becomes annoyed.

The trio visit the battleship, and in the Commander's room Davis finds that he has overlooked an envelope containing a secret signal code. He immediately rushes home, but the code is nowhere to be found.

The Countess finds that the photograph is that of the Lieutenant's mother when she was a young lady, and in the envelope she finds the secret code. Wanting to atone for her folly without recognition, she attempts to replace the documents. She succeeds in entering the studio under cover of darkness, but Davis has been on the lookout for a person he suspects of robbing him. As Bertha is bending over the table Davis bounds upon her dark form, at the same time drawing the Japanese dagger.

He strikes, and is horrified to see that he has stabbed his beloved, his innocent fiancee.

VITAGRAPH.

TWO SOULS WITH BUT A SINGLE THOUGHT (May 14).—What sad havoc a maid can make with men's hearts; she can turn friends into the most bitter enemies. This is exactly what happens when Jack and Mack happen upon the fair Lillie. The young lady's beau has gone away on a business trip and she is left all by her lonesome. To pass away the lagging hours, she flirts most outrageously with Jim and Mack, two fat men, and gets lots of fun out of their frenzied pursuit of her.

They first meet Lillie at a fashionable entertainment, and once fall head and ears in love with her. Secretly flattered by their attentions, she flirts with them both and fans the flame of their obvious devotion, making them extremely jealous of each other. The next day they all meet at a theater and the men buy seats on each side of the girl, who has slyly let them see the number of her ticket. During the performance they both pester her nearly to death, crowding up near her and both attempting to speak at once, absolutely crushing her between them. In spite of the discomfiture she suffers, Lillie enjoys the fun and eggs them on all manner of extravagances, their enmity growing more bitter all the while. After the day of the theater party, she sees them again and again and finally announces that she is going to Atlantic City for a month's vacation.

Jim and Mack both obtain leave of absence and present themselves to her at the hotel where she is staying. Their huge size makes their billing and cooing very evident to everyone and they become the stock joke of the beach. The greatest laugh of all, however, comes at a masquerade ball, where they make most violent love to the fair damsel. Her real "knight" appears on the scene and triumphantly bears off his lady, to the great discomfiture of Jim and Mack, who are left to console themselves as best they can.

BUNNY'S BIRTHDAY SURPRISE (May 19).—Birthday or no birthday, John Bunny has to go to his city office just the same. On this particular occasion he has an unusually tiring day's work and arrives home completely fagged out. His wife and son, Dave, have prepared a surprise for him in the shape of a dinner-party, to which several guests have been invited. Not knowing of this, Bunny, who is feeling absolutely all in, goes straight to his room and gets into bed, instead of dressing for dinner, as is his usual custom.

In the dining room, his wife and the guests are anxiously awaiting his arrival. Mrs. Bunny turns off the lights and instructs the guests to rise and give him a rousing cheer when he enters the room and switches them on. Then she calls to her husband to hurry, as she wants him. Not expecting company, Bunny descends the stairs in his pajamas, and is seen in that garb by the scandalized guests when he turns on the electric lights. Indignant at what they consider a very poor kind of a joke, they all depart hasily, leaving Bunny to comfort his sorrowing wife and explain matters as best he can.

Before he goes upstairs to don his dress clothes, his son, Dave, arrives with his sweetheart, Ethel, who also sees him in flimsy attire and flees from the room with a horrified shriek. Dave rushes after her and explains things. After a good laugh at her future father-in-law's expense, she consents to stay to dinner.

VITAGRAPHERS AT KAMA KURA (May 19).—A beautiful reproduction of life in the Land of Lotus Flowers, showing the Vitagraph "Globe-Trotters," as they appeared at one of their first stops in the Mikado's Empire. The neighborhood of some of the Vitagraph Japanese plays, the first of their kind ever produced.

THE AMATEUR LION-TAMER (May 20).—Weary and worn, yet with an active, full-sized appetite, Ike, a village character, mooches along the street. He is an out-and-out "bum," with a chronic indisposition to anything in the nature of honest work. An empty stomach, however, will work miracles; Ike is actually looking for a job. He goes to the boss of a large circus that happens along and asks for something to do. The boss turns him over to the tender mercies of the chief animal trainer, who seems to be somewhat less stony-hearted. Ike is offered twenty-five dollars if he will go into the arena with three lions during the afternoon performance, and he accepts the offer. Cringing with fear, but fortified a little by a drink, Ike enters the cage for a preliminary rehearsal, at the end of which he is led off in a fainting condition. When the time comes for the public performance, he cannot be found. A search reveals him hiding behind the tents and he is dragged into the limelight and forced to fulfill his contract. A little more whiskey gives him the necessary courage and he enters the cage in front of a tent full of people. All goes well until he is left alone, when his nerve suddenly evaporates and he is about the most scared man in all creation. In his hasty exit from the cage he lets the lions loose and immediately everything is in an uproar.

Ike rushes at full tilt down a passage, the lions in pursuit of him and two or three keepers in pursuit of the lions. He dashes through the living tents of the circus people and creates a general panic and turmoil, finally taking refuge up a tree, to which he clings for dear life. The keepers come up and take possession of the beasts, dragging them back to their cages. Ike comes down, rubs himself carefully to see if he is all there, and satisfied to get away with a whole skin, beats it as rapidly as his size permits.

otherwise, and would much prefer to marry her own choice, young Dr. Randall. The young lovers hear from Bobby, Jenny's twelve-year-old brother, that Lionel will arrive at the house the next day. Bobby establishes a law office in the dog-house, outside of which he has painted the sign, "Bobby Holliday, Counsellor at Law," and says that he will handle the case of Randall versus Lionel very cheaply. After he has been given a "retainer" by Randall, he makes his preparations for Lionel's arrival. Bringing with him a toy poodle dog, Lionel reaches the house, looking very much of a brainless dude. While he is talking dog to his sister, Bobby manages to fasten some striped material around his trouser legs, making it appear as if Lionel had a coat on over convict clothes. Bobby rushes away and tells the sheriff that there is an escaped criminal at the house and Lionel is forthwith arrested and hauled to the local lock-up. Bobby releases him by a clever ruse and then has him chased again, this time making it appear that he is an escaped lunatic. Lionel cuts such a ridiculous figure that he cannot very well press his suit for Jenny; Bobby therefore has succeeded with his first case, and presents his bill. Randall is somewhat astonished at the amount he has to pay, but digs for it with a good grace. Among other items in the account is figured compensation at the rate of five dollars for injured feelings, from a spanking administered by his father during the course of the case.

A LADY AND HER MAID (No. 4 of "The Belinda Series") (May 22).—The photographer sends Miss Ophelia a dozen photographs of her in different poses. Selecting the best one, she presents it to her favorite boarder, Billy, who does not think much of it and who gets very indignant when it is compared with the photo of his sweetheart. Miss Ophelia goes up to her room in tears and tells her faithful maid, Belinda, that her heart is broken. Belinda goes down and forcibly tells Billy what she thinks of him.

Miss Ophelia resolves on suicide, because no one seems to love her. Belinda gets back in time to prevent this and, to divert her mistress, she suggests that they go together to a beauty specialist. Arriving there, both receive attention. Miss Ophelia gets a new complexion, while Belinda gets new teeth. Both invest in new gowns and dresses and the transformation is complete. At supper time, the boarders are all astounded. Miss Ophelia is really nice-looking and arouses the jealousy of all the ladies, so much attention does she receive from the gentlemen. Receiving no return to their advances to Miss Ophelia, they try to flirt with Belinda, who now appears like a trim French maid. She turns them all down very coldly, very much to their surprise. Billy's heart unaccountably changes and he seeks out Miss Ophelia to propose to her. His offer is indignantly refused and he is still more astonished, when, a few minutes later, he and all the other boarders receive notice to quit the house. A sign, "For Sale," is placed outside the door and Miss Ophelia and her maid, Belinda, drive off in an automobile before everyone, none of whom can account for the sudden transformation of their erstwhile boarding mistress's appearance and habits. Miss Ophelia decides to try the effect of her newly-acquired fascinations in higher spheres and hopes now to be able to make a notable conquest and enter at last the much-longed-for haven of matrimony.

THE MIDGET'S REVENGE (May 23).—Many strange characters may be met in a theatrical boarding house and both friction and jealousy is often rife between them. One such house is filled mainly with circus people, a decidedly motley crowd. Among them is a fat lady, a female living skeleton, a strong man, a seven-foot giant and a two-foot midget woman. Various love affairs are in progress. Both the giant and the strong man love the fat lady, while the living skeleton wants the strong man, who hates her.

One night, the strong man, who is jealous of the Midget, offers her many indignities, such as squashing her under his high hat. Her part is taken by the giant, who has taken quite a fancy to her. Enraged at the treatment she has received, the Midget determines to put a kick in the strong man's freshness and incidentally do a good turn to the giant. Carefully watching the movements of the strong man, the Midget sees him leave notes at the rooms of both the living skeleton and of the fat lady. With the assistance of the giant, she gets over the transom of the fat lady's door and takes the note, which she exchanges with that left under the door of the skeleton's room. The result is that each woman gets the letter intended for the other. When they all meet in the morning, the skeleton falls on the neck of the strong man and warmly embraces him, much to his disgust, while the fat lady seeks consolation in the arms of the love-sick giant. Both the Midget and the giant are satisfied with their night's adventure.

GOING TO MEET PAPA (May 23).—A wet day in "sunny" California, is the occasion of an amusing mixup between two men and one umbrella. After a visit to the police-station and "wife's" intervention, the men learn they are son-in-law and father-in-law. They shake hands and become good friends, all going home to a rapidly cooling dinner.

CUPID THROUGH THE KEYHOLE (May 24).—While making preparations for the entertainment of Aunt Maria, who had announced her arrival by telegram, Lila Lane gets herself shut in the storeroom, which is fitted with a spring lock. Here she is found later by her sweetheart, Harry Eschert, who has returned for some forgotten papers. Harry is a boarder with Mrs. Lane, who at this moment is out for a drive with her husband. Anita, Lila's sister, is also out in an auto with her beau, Fred Brockway.

In the morning Harry and Lila have had a severe tiff. Judge their horror, then, when the door slams on them and they find themselves locked in together. Harry has left the door open on entering the house and this fact is noticed by Jack Wearyfoot, a tramp, who enters the house and helps himself to the dinner. Aunt Maria presently arrives and is surprised at seeing no one about, for the tramp quickly hides himself behind a trunk. Soon she hears the noise made by Harry and Lila, who are pounding the door. Going upstairs, she is still more surprised when she finds her neice shut in a room with a young man. While she is speaking her mind to them, the tramp slams the door on the three of them.

Meanwhile, Fred and Anita have a spat and she tells him to take her home. They investigate the noise in the storeroom and, not heeding quickly enough Harry's warning about the door, get shut in also. The room becomes decidedly cool as there are two couples in it, neither of whom will speak to each other, while Aunt Maria gazes frigidly on all. Presently the young folks realize the humor of the situation and are soon in each other's arms, to the horror of the spinster aunt. They are all released later by Mr. and Mrs. Lane, who take care not to get shut in, and sit down to a big dinner to celebrate the two engagements that are announced.

THE STILL VOICE (Special—2 parts—May 24).—Lindsley Ferris, head of a banking house, unthinkingly places an important paper in his desk at home, and causes the blame for its mysterious disappearance to rest upon the shoulders of the cashier, Steele, who is subsequently discharged. Sometime later, Ferris discovers the paper, and, desiring to reinstate Steele, calls at his home only to learn that through the death of his invalid wife and his fruitless attempts to secure another position, he and his daughter have immigrated to a distant city. Fifteen years later Steele, returning to the city under an assumed name and now master of millions, determines to bring about the ruin of Ferris, now president of the banking house. At a ball, Marjorie, Steele's daughter, meets and falls in love with Arthur Ferris, son of the bank president. When the young people bring the matter to Steele's attention he turns them down flatly and forbids his daughter from further association with young Ferris. The young man appeals to his father to help him further his suit, and Ferris senior goes to Steele to see what he can do in behalf of his son. But when he learns the identity of Steele, he makes no further entreaties, but leaves immediately.

Steele then orders his secretary to buy up the controlling stock of every company with which Ferris is connected. In meditation he hears a voice bidding him to be merciful and at the same time he sees a vision of Christ preaching on the Mount. His strange actions alarm his sister who sends for a doctor, but is told that her brother is only suffering from overwrought nerves. Steele's plans work and a run is precipitated on Ferris' bank. The climax comes when Steele draws a check on Ferris' bank for $25,000. Young Ferris makes frantic appeals to other bankers to come to the aid of his father, but all decline. Under the pretense of desiring solitude the banker sends all persons away, takes a revolver from his desk and shoots himself. As a last resort, Arthur Ferris, ignorant of his father's suicide, goes to Steele, asking him to save his father. Steele, very angry, renounces both father and son. The son is about to throttle Steele, when Marjorie intercedes for her father. Then Steele again hears the mysterious voice, and, calling for a pen and paper, he is about to direct his secretary to deposit enough money in Ferris' bank to tide him over the difficulties, when he hears the voices of newsboys yelling, "Suicide of Lindsley Ferris." His reparation had been too late and he sinks back, dead in his chair.

KALEM

THE ARTIST'S SACRIFICE (May 19).—Joe Stanton, a struggling artist, has been able by careful management to keep his younger brother, Ted, in college. Ted is unappreciative and becomes so extravagant that Joe is sorely pressed for funds. One morning Joe reads the announcement of the Century Art Society that $10,000 in prizes will be given for the best studies of "The American Girl." He desides to compete, but is unable to secure a suitable model.

Nell Winston, employed in a department store, resents the advances of an overbearing floorwalker and is discharged. As she sits in the park she attracts the attention of Joe, who has been strolling aimlessly and gloomily, thinking of the futility of entering the contest. He is struck by the girl's beauty and, introducing himself, induces her to act as his model.

Nell agrees and visits the studio. As the days pass the old story repeats itself and the artist falls deeply in love with the girl.

Holidays arrive and Ted dashes into the studio

State and Territorial Rights for Sale for

Edison's Talking Pictures

In compliance with our contract with the Thomas A. Edison, Incorporated, whereby we were not permitted to place the Talking Pictures in motion picture houses until after June first, nineteen thirteen, we are now prepared for the first time to offer for sale territorial or state rights for the Edison Kinetophone on terms which will meet conditions of the moving picture business.

Parties can now secure for themselves territorial rights for as many machines as they may desire for the smallest or largest city, and machines can be placed in any theatre after June first that can comply with terms and conditions.

The Edison Kinetophone is the only genuine Talking Picture made. The photograph and record are taken at the same time, insuring perfect synchronism and illusion. They are not limited to any particular class of subject or to the number of people or to size of stage.

Unlimited capital and every facility insure constant improvement, which can be noted week by week.

AFTER JUNE FIRST, FOUR SUBJECTS PER WEEK; AFTER OCTOBER FIRST, SIX SUBJECTS PER WEEK.

This is the greatest opportunity for money-making in the history of the motion picture business.

The Edison Talking Picture will rejuvenate the photo-play theatre. It has come to stay.

Write or telegraph at once for printed matter, terms and particulars.

to be confronted by a beautiful stranger. He makes known his identity and learns that Nell is waiting for Joe. Ted prevails upon her to take a stroll and during the walk he discovers that he has found "the one girl."

The days pass and the painting is completed. Joe is summoned before the art committee and awarded the first prize. Hastening home with the glad news, his spirits fall when he learns that Nell has given her promise to Ted.

THE CIRCLE OF FATE (May 21).—The husband has an ungovernable temper. He stormily leaves the house and lighting his pipe, tosses the burning match into a pile of brush. The flames spread and soon the little cabin is ablaze, making a prisoner of the wife. While the man visits at the tavern, the woman bravely fights for her life and finally succeeds in escaping by the window.

Rushing away in terror, the wife falls exhausted and is picked up by a passing stagecoach. In the course of the journey the horses take flight and the coach is wrecked.

The plainsman witnesses the accident and rescues the young woman, whom he tenderly bears to his mother's cottage.

The young man falls in love with the strange woman, but one day he discovers her wedding ring and finds that a barrier stands in the way of his happiness. He hears her story and determines to locate the husband and bring him back.

After a weary search the plainsman finds the husband and prevails upon him to visit his wife. Again the ungovernable temper brings disastrous results and this time the man forfeits his life. Time, the leveller of all things, brings final happiness to the young woman, who finds a devoted helpmate in the plainsman.

THE BLACK HAND (May 23).—Tom vainly endeavors to convince Mr. Montford that he will make a desirable son-in-law. The old gentleman not only refuses to be convinced but prohibits Tom from visiting Clara.

Mr. Montford is very nervous and becomes greatly excited when he reads the newspaper accounts of Black Hand escapades. Just at this time Tom conceives the idea of masquerading as a colored cook and securing employment in the Montford home. Tom gets the position, but his make-up is not of the permanent kind and everything he touches leaves a mark which brings terror to Montford. When Tom and Clara discover father's discomfort, they proceed to make capital of it and as a result Montford witdraws his objections.

THE EGYPTIAN MUMMY (May 23).—Prof. Howe knows more about antiques than he does about love affairs and consequently he declares that Dick, his daughter's sweetheart, is a nuisance. Howe purchases an ancient Egyptian mummy and Dick observes the delivery of the huge case. A daring scheme occurs to him. With Arvilla's assistance he takes the place of the mummp and when Howe opens the case he hears a sepulchral voice exclaim: "Let your daughter marry whom she choses! Ramesis demands it!" Arvilla says she choses Dick, and Howe, grasping his daughter by the hand, hastens to Dick's house to satisfy the mummy. Dick has the time of his life in making a wild dash to his home before the arrival of the professor. Then he is induced (?) to listen.

THE INFAMOUS DON MIGUEL (May 24).—Dixie Hardie receives a letter from an old schoolmate, Juanita Dias, extending an invitation to visit the Dias plantation in Cuba. Rumors of war are in the air, but Dixie insists upon going and her parents finally consent.

The American girl finds a great deal to interest her in Cuba and spends many happy hours at the elegant Dias estate. One day a party of Cuban refugees dash into the house with the alarming news that they are pursued by Spanish soldiers. The pursuers, headed by a tyrant, Don Miquel, arrive and take possession of the Dias home.

Don Miguel begins a series of persecutions and Dias determines upon a daring dash for liberty. He and the two girls disguise themselves as Cuban servants and steal from the house under the cover of darkness, only to be captured and led to prison.

Meanwhile American troops arrive on the island and Dixie's brother, Capt. James Hardie, is a member of the expedition.

Don Miguel taunts his prisoners and offers them liberty if Dixie will consent to become his bride. The girl recoils in dismay and the hot-blooded Dias makes matters worse by attacking the tyrant. That night the three captives succeed in removing the bars from the tower window. Dixie dives into the water below and swims across to the American camp, where she finds her brother. The next day Capt. Hardie's troops attack the prison and capture the infamous Don Miguel.

THE STARS AND STRIPES FOREVER (3 parts—May 20).—Sepulveda leads a double existence. By day he is the trusted clerk to the General, commanding the American forces; by night he is the dreaded and unscrupulous leader of Manila's Secret Order of Filipinos. He has a valuable ally in Madame Revier, with whom he keeps in close touch. Madam has a maid, Mestizo, who is one day approached and insulted by a drunken Filipino. Captain Smalley, of the American army, hears the scuffle and, interfering, rescues the girl and thereby earns her gratitude.

One day General Wilson hands Sepulveda an order to typewrite, which is addressed to Smalley. It tells him to report to Colonel Ketchum, and of the Filipinos' plan to surprise the American trenches on the morrow. After the day's work, Sepulveda sends a note to the Filipino general, telling him that their plans are known and to hasten the attack.

Smalley goes to a dance which is also attended by both Sepulveda and Madame Revier. They watch Smalley, who, in the course of the evening, receives the order from his general. Smalley prepares to go, although he dislikes leaving Madame, who has fascinated him. She feigns a slight sickness and persuades Smalley to at least see her home. He agrees. Sepulveda follows.

Smalley accepts her invitation to enter her home for a few moments; he is recognized by the maid. Sepulveda watches them from a mirror and when Smalley says he must go after he has had a proffered drink, Sepulveda drugs his wine and Smalley would drink it, but for the fact that he sees something peculiar about Madame's attitude with the mirror and takes the opportunity to look into it himself, when he is surprised to see the maid beckoning him not to drink the glass of wine. He feigns being affected by the heat and pretends to drink the wine. He follows this by feigning stupor. Sepulveda enters the room delighted with their ruse and ordering more wine he goes to the window and drops out some instructions to be taken to the Filipino forces. The maid, Mestizo, brings the wine and the man and woman lapse into unconsciousness, for the maid has drugged their wine in turn. She tells Smalley he is now safe, and he, after showing deep gratitude, hastens for the front. He arrives too late to save many of the trenches. He raises the main body of the defenders, however, and after a brisk fight the Filipino army is routed and dispersed.

Sepulveda and Madame recover their senses and he accuses her of trapping him. He will not listen to her and she is dragged to the secret council where the news of the overwhelming defeat is brought to the engaged men. The maid follows her mistress and Sepulveda makes her go for help. She thinks of Smalley and goes to him when he is reporting his victory. He gets permission to take a body of men with him and breaks in upon the meeting as the brutes are branding Madame.

From his prison Sepulveda manages to get a note to Smalley through one of his band. It purports to be from Madame Revier and asks him to call at once when she will give him news of the Filipino plans. Smalley tells the messenger that he will go to her and goes to her residence. As soon as Smalley is in the house, one of the secret society men throws a bomb and Madame is buried in the ruins. The maid manages to protect Smalley from a falling beam, while the girl loses her life.

UNDER FIRE (2 parts—May 24).—Colonel Lewis, an old admirer of the widow Kent, calls with his son, Frank, bringing the latest war news, "the call for volunteers." Frank urges her son, John, to enlist with him and reluctantly the widow consents. The boys leaves for the front—but at their first battle, Frank becomes terror-stricken and but for John's interference, would have deserted. At the next battle John is not near his friend, so the younger man again seized with terror, runs from the field. John sees him and starts in pursuit, but Captain Mead, Frank's cousin, believes that John is deserting. He informs the Colonel and a guard is sent to bring him back. John has, in the meanwhile, overtaken Frank and persuaded him to return, which he does just in time to answer his name at roll call. John is taken prisoner and sent to the guard tent to await court-martial, which results in his being sentenced to be shot, as he refuses to explain his absence. As soon as Frank learns of his friend's troubles he confesses to his father and the Colonel goes to John and offers him a means of escape. John, however, refuses it. At dawn the Confederate forces attack the camp and John is taken prisoner He escapes and after the war is never joins his mother.

John and Frank, who has also come there to live, both become popular candidates for mayor, but this does not interfere with their friendship. At a political meeting, Captain Mead, who is in love with John's fiancee, tells the assembly that John cannot hold public office and is not entitled to a vote, as he is a deserter from the army. But Frank and the Colonel rise up in the meeting and give them the true story, while Frank withdraws in favor of his friend.

HER HERO'S PREDICAMENT (May 19).—Lee rejoices, for has he not a holiday to-morrow? He meets Eddie, who is employed in a large dry goods emporium. He hears of Lee's luck and wants to join him. They plan. The following morning Eddie has sudden and excruciating pains. The boss sees him. He is excused for the day and duly meets Lee as arranged. They go to the beach and see a party of pretty girls.

Lee and Eddie resolve to bathe and get into lovely striped costumes. The girls also make up their minds to take a dip and appear on the beach, not too heavily attired. They coquette with the little wavelets and she is tossed around. She screams. The boys hear the pitiful squeak and Eddie bravely dashes in and rescues the maiden. When they are all dried out, they adjourn for refreshments and the girls invite the boys to accompany them home in their big auto. Arriving at the door Eddie wilts, for the portly gentleman who meets Louise and whom she addresses as pa is none other than his boss. Explanations ensue, and Eddie is forgiven. He is even invited to a dance—a Leap Year ball.

He is delighted, but grows serious when he thinks of the question of a dress suit. Lee suggests hiring one, and this is done. He dons the suit and notes a tear in the pants. Lee mends the rent of the rented pants and Eddie sallies forth and is charmed at the beauty of Louise in her pretty dress. She drops her fan and Eddie stoops to get it. He manages to reach it when words fail to describe his mortification and misery. He backs out, but Louise insists upon knowing what is the matter. He takes a chance and tells her and finds that she is sympathetic and what is more, practical. She hunts up a needle and thread and a shawl. Eddie and she go to a little waiting room and Eddie gets behind a comfortable palm and he takes the shawl while she reaches for the pants and gets to work.

Some interfering women persons come in and will insist upon going behind the palm. Eddie sees a door and backs through it, only to find himself in the ball room. With the shawl wound tightly around him he bolts for it through the hall, down the stairs, through the street and never stops until his own door is closed behind him and he is threatening the cheerful idiot, Lee, for laughing at him.

The next day Eddie has another headache, which is dispelled by a sweet note from Louise, asking him to call and get a bundle. He does. He gets the bundle, but puts it aside until he goes home, for her invitation to stay awhile is very cordial. Papa sees them together, smiles and leaves them by themselves.

A MINE AND A MARATHON (May 23).—W. E. Todd is owner of mining properties in Deerfoot Valley, which are undeveloped and are thought not valuable. The Consolidated Properties Co., which own adjoining properties has secretly had Todd's holdings investigated and found them very valuable. They make Todd a reasonable offer for so-called unvaluable lands, saying they want to increase their holdings. Todd does not accept but sends Gray, a young mining engineer who is in his employ, to test the property. He also invites his nephew, Dean, who is an aspirant for honors in the Marathon at the coming Olympic games, to go out with Gray and get a few months training in the mountains. Gray and Dean arrive on the property where Dean trains and Gray puts a crew of men at work and with one workman goes for a walk to look over the ground. They see likely rock and Gray puts a workman at digging.

Lee, the agent of the Consolidated Co., and the man who made the offer to Todd, arrives on the lands. Gray visits the crew who have found nothing and then visits the lone workman, who has struck it rich. On his way to the office Gray meets Lee, who immediately sees that Gray has discovered that the property is valuable. Lee very smoothly humors Gray and soon makes an offer to Gray to keep mum. Gray is insulted, but when a larger offer is made gradually accepts Lee's terms. A few days later a telegram is received by both men from their New York offices that Todd will accept the terms of the Consolidated Co. on a specified day if he does not hear from Gray to the contrary. At the end of Lee's message his company writes: "Keep the lid on tight," and Lee, while in conversation with Gray, absently tears his message in pieces and drops them in the waste basket.

Just after leaving the office, Dean comes in. His spiked shoe has been hurting him on account of unevenness inside. He goes to the waste basket to find pasteboard from which to cut an insole. From the folded paste-board, pieces of Lee's telegram fall out.

One piece attracts Dean's attention, as it reads, "—e lid on tight." Curiosity prompts him to match the pieces of the telegram together and put them in his pocket. On the day on which Todd will sell, Dean, on his morning run, attired in track suit, rounds a bend and comes upon Lee, Gray and the workman and overhears Lee, who is boasting loudly. Dean now understands the telegram and their scheme. Just then a stone slips and the conspirators turn to see Dean, who feigns just running up. He salutes and goes on. Gray and Lee are suspicuous and wonder if he overheard. The three follow and they talk to Dean, who has just jumped into an auto standing before the office. As Dean drives off he answers Gray's question and they know Dean is going to foil them. Gray and Lee get horses and start in pursuit. Twenty miles to go and two hours to do it in, when after going fifteen miles theauto breaks down. Dean, determined, grits his teeth and starts out fast for the five mile run. He just makes the railroad station ahead of Gray and Lee, and succeeds in getting the operator to send a message to Todd telling him not to sell at any price, before they appear on the scene. After the pursuers are sent back enraged and disconsolate; Dean borrows an overcoat and overalls and catches the next train homeward.

FRONTIER.

THE RANCH STENOGRAPHER (May 17).—Lillian Farly has been somewhat of an invalid all her life and since the death of their father and mother, Dorothy, the sister, has acted the part of the little mother, working as a stenographer. The Y. W. C. A. has been interested in her case and they assist when they find it necessary. One morning after Dorothy has departed for her daily work, Lillian is taken with a bad spell. The Y. W. C. A. nurse is with her and a doctor is called. He orders her to New Mexico for pure air. It is very hard for the sisters to part, but Dorothy has to stay in the city and work hard to furnish the necessities for Lillian.

We next see Lillian on the ranch; her health improves and she falls in love with one of the boys. She wires to Dorothy that she has a serious heart affliction, but tells Dorothy not to worry. Dorothy misunderstands the telegram and feels that Lillian must be very sick. We next see her getting off the train in a little town in New Mexico. She inquires the way to the ranch from two cowboys who are standing at the station; she starts to walk to the ranch and in trying to get through a barbwire fence gets caught. The cowboys decide to have some fun; they scare her almost to death by chasing her over the hills until a manly cowboy comes to her aid. He assists her to mount his horse; she reaches the ranch just in tim eto see her sister coming back from the morning ride with her sweetheart. Explanations follow. Dorothy, seeing she has been tricked, decides to go back to the city.

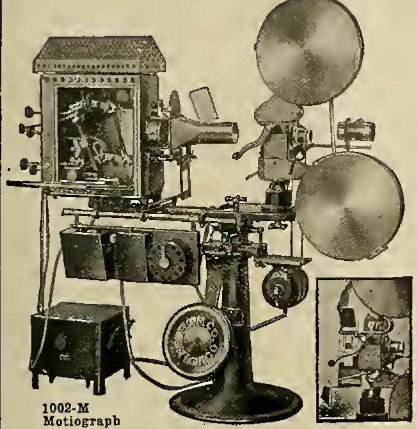
The two cowboys, who have fallen in love with the two sisters, decide to keep her there. One of them goes to the village, gets a typewriter and sets her up in business. All the cowboys of the ranch suddenly remember that they should have written many letters and they crowd around awaiting their chance to dictate to the pretty stenographer. Later Dorothy realizes she loves her hero cowboy. Double elopement to the parson's home is planned.

The cowboys get onto the scheme; they decide to show them a trick or two. Just as the couples are coming out of the minister's home, the boys come up with a carriage, force the newly married couples in. They rush away with them which ends up in riding the couples into a river and leaving them there to get out in the best way they can. This they succeed in doing after getting a thorough ducking.

REASONS for Motiograph Supremacy

YOU KNOW Something Makes the Motiograph Different

What Is It?



1002-M Motiograph

All machine specifications read much alike; yet, YOU KNOW all machines are not alike in the service they give extending over a period of years. There lies the difference, plus—the way the MOTIOGRAPH Makers DO things. IT IS STANDARD. The MOTIOGRAPH standard has always been simply this: make every part of the machine the best, buy only the best material; make it the right way; put it together with skilled labor; test it with utmost care and then sell this product in a standard, high-class way. THIS HIGH MOTIOGRAPH STANDARD IS EXPENSIVE; YET, WE THINK, MERELY GOOD BUSINESS POLICY. It has established the reputation of the MOTIOGRAPH. We are proud of that reputation, and jealous of it, too.

We Intend to Maintain the Motiograph Reputation by Maintaining Our Standard

THE STAGE DRIVER'S CHIVALRY (May 22).—Tim, the stage driver, has a besetting sin and when the boys press him to take a drink before going out on his long trip, he consents. However, he fails to stop with one drink and before he knows it, it is time for the stage to go. Fatty, an ex-stage driver, knows what time it is, and breaks away from the crowd and goes to the stage office. The manager of the line sends a man in search of Tim, and when he cannot be found, gives Fatty the run. Tim comes to the office too late, for Fatty has driven out.

Losing the right to weild the reins is a bitter blow to Tim, for he has been a happy-go-lucky sort of fellow and has little saved. Soon his wife and child are reduced to want. Meanwhile, Fatty has discovered that a government strong box is to be shipped on a certain day. The prospect of easy gain by holding up the stage when the other driver is on it is too much for him. Tim's dire strait is remembered and he writes a note to him, asking him to talk over a plan for a hold-up. In the shadow of great rocks he and Fatty perfect a plan which necessitates Tim's riding on the stage that is to be robbed.

Next morning he is seen getting on the stage at the station next beyond the main office, in fact, at the end of his own former run. In the stage he finds a girl who tells him of a sad circumstance which is calling her home. Her mother is dying and she wants to get there as quickly as possible. This brings about a conflict in Tim. His better nature and his natural chivalry urge that he help the girl, but his own needs protest that he had better carry out the plan made by himself and Fatty.

The best side of him wins, and he climbs through the window to the top of the coach. There he forces the driver and shotgun messenger to dismount, and he drives on. Fatty is waiting for the stage down the road, but Tim drives it another way. Fatty pursues him and a mad race, Tim, driving with one hand and shooting with the other ensues. Tim almost comes to grief, but manages to keep the stage right side up and gets to the town where he and the girl live. He drives past the stage station, the manager sees him on the box, and another pursuit is commenced. Tim stops at the girl's home, and she enters in time to see her mother alive.

Then the manager catches up with him and he goes to jail. A trial frees him, and the manager gives him back his place, his explanation having proven satisfactory and Fatty having been disposed of by a fall sustained in the running battle with Tim.

BLACK JACK'S ATONEMENT (May 23).—A sailor returns home from a voyage and is met by a letter telling him to hurry, for there is a new baby to be seen and a sick wife to be cheered up. His companions insist upon drinking to the newcomer's health and in spite of his protests the sailor is forced to join them. Unused to liquor, the fumes enter his head and the seamen leave the young fellow sleeping. A schooner is short of men and a professional shanghaier sees the sailor, and getting him into an inner room, opens a trap and drops him into the waiting boat and takes him aboard the schooner. In the meantime the poor wife, unable to work, grieves over his non-arrival and worries, while the little lame boy goes out and sells newspapers to hold the home together and get enough to eat.

The shanghaier returns and while fingering the gold earned by his nefarious transaction is asked to buy a paper by a little lame boy. The man's one sensitive spot is children. He asks the boy why he is selling papers and learns all about the sick mother and the new baby. He asks the boy's name and starts as he hears it, and takes the papers from his pocket which he took from the sailor. He reads the pathetic letter and the right chord is touched. He tells the boy to go home and inform his mother that father will be there soon. He also gives the boy some money and sends the little fellow away with a glad heart.

Stirred to action (for the schooner is departing), the man, with new resolutions in his heart, searches for a launch and overtakes the schooner. He gets aboard, and, offering the money back to the captain and making an explanation, he asks for the return of the sailor. The captain laughs at him. The sailor comes up—there is a desperate fight and the two men go overboard, the crook being badly wounded. They are picked up by the launch and the sailor takes the wounded man home with him. Jack leaves the money paid him by the sea-captain on the table, and goes out wounded and alone a better man, determined to give up the nefarious trade forever.

SHE NEVER KNEW (May 22).—Hector Ainscourt was idolized by his old mother. She had not seen him for a long time, but he had never failed to write. His last letter was penned under extraordinary circumstances and although it was dated from a hospital where he informed her he was convalescing after a slight illness. The truth was that he was an inmate of the death cell and the day set for his execution was not far distant.

The immediate members of his family knew of his crime and the sentence, but all had agreed to spare no pains to keep the dear old lady in ignorance. As she fondled the relics of his innocent boyhood, her kind old face glowed with pride as she thought of her noble and handsome son and of how well he was getting along in the world.

She was very feeble and the doctor had warned them that her death was not far distant. As the day of the execution advanced the unfortunate son wept bitter and unavailing tears as he thought of her

The fatal hour arrived and as he was led toward the little green door the spirit of the old mother whose great love knew no bounds passed away. She never knew.

VICTOR.

GOOD FOR EVIL (May 23).—A toymaker engages a young girl to work as a servant, she is little more than a child. The toymaker is very harsh to her and to his son, forbidding them to touch the toys, which they love.

The slavey and the boy are sent to deliver some toys. The boy loses the money he has collected for them. On his return the father beats him, and discharges the slavey.

A kind-hearted woman, a customer of the toymaker, takes the slavey home, and there with her benefactress's little daughter, the girl is very happy.

The toymaker falls ill, and his son comes to the rich home and gets the slavey to return with him and nurse his father. The old man becomes convalescent. The rich woman goes to the shop to take the girl back home. The slavey turns to the father and son and asks them if they wish her to remain. They eagerly say "yes" and the girl decides to stay with her poor friends. Touched by their sacrifice the toymaker's nature changes and he treats the children affectionately and generously.

TOODLEUMS (May 25).—Chester is in love with Pearl. Pearl is very fond of him but spends most of her time fondling and caressing Toodleums, her wee little dog. Chester has absolutely no use for Toodleums and is insanely jealous of him. He visits Pearl and she persists in paying more attention to the dog than she does to him. Chester conspires to get rid of Toodleums and hires a tough to steal him. The tough lies in wait outside of Pearl's home and at the first opportunity he steals Toodleums. He runs away and sells him to a stranger for $1. The stranger afterwards meets Chester and Pearl and Chester claims Toodleums and demands his return. This the stranger refuses until he is paid $30. Pearl compels Chester to pay this amount despite Chester's protestations. Meanwhile the tough who had stolen the dog anxiously awaits his pay and demands payment. Chester refuses and the tought vows vengeance. He decides to tell Pearl that Chester put him up to steal Toodleums and Pearl confronts Chester with this information. Chester, of course, denies it, but the tough appears and he cannot deny it; Pearl orders him from the house and he leaves lamenting his loss of both the girl and the $30.

SUPPER FOR THREE (May 25).—Wilkins loses his pay envelope. He comes home, and his wife, who is a shrew, refuses to believe him. She refuses to give him anything to eat and orders him from the house. Wilkins, disconsolate goes to the home of two of his friends, who are actors, out of work. They suggest a scheme whereby they can all get a meal. The actors get out their trunks and one dresses as a woman, and the other as a prosperous gentleman, and give Wilkins a high hat. They then go to a restaurant and have their fill. The proprietor judges that his patrons are prosperous and never imagines that his bill will not be paid. However, they ask him for their check, the actor who is masquerading as a millionaire pretends to faint, and the proprietor goes out to have a policeman call an ambulance. The plot is to run out while the restraunteur is calling help. However, Wilkins' wife sees her husband with a supposed woman. She rushes in and immediately starts breaking things up. She tears the actors hat off together with his wig and then takes Wilkins home, there to treat with him more dispatch. The proprietor returns with an officer and the two actors are arrested, being unable to make the damage good.

THE BEWITCHED MATCHES (May 4).—There is a little plot to this subject, and the beginning shows how the old fortune-teller took her revenge on the old German, who refused to allow his daughters to have their fortunes told, by bewitching the matches, with which he tries to light his pipe. And then the matches do some unusual things. The matches, when they start their antics, do some very amusing and seemingly quite human tricks. One of them even walks a tight rope and stands on his head on it.

HER INNOCENT MARRIAGE (May 19).—Bessie married Bob Evans with her eyes shut. That is to say Bessie loved an idol, a very perishable clay idol much addicted to the use of liquor. Shortly after their marriage, Bob came home reeling drunk. Bessie tried in vain to break him but, with the further use of the poison, Bob fell into evil ways, returned home but seldom and then only to maltreat and abuse her. A day came when Bessie could no longer stand the strain; so she packed her small belongings and dolefully went forth to seek new joys in new fields. Bob, coming home quite drunk, found the house locked and drifted away with the oddities of Fate.

Tired, Bessie sat down upon a rock. Will Wayne, riding slowly down the road saw her, stopped and hearing her story took her home. Old man Wayne and Will's mother kept her for several weeks and Will grew to love her dearly. But independent Bessie thought the time had come to leave and was only dissuaded by the urgent request of the whole family.

Two years later, Bessie found the morning paper on the stoop. It's first page contained the story of a railroad wreck and among the slain was Bob. A year later Bessie married Will and the young people moved to Will's new home and were happy. Riding through the mountains one day, Will came across Bob Evans, very much alive, quite sick and quite dirty. Not knowing him he took him home. Between Bob and Bessie there was instant trouble. Will started to interfere and a scuffle followed. Will dropped dead with a bullet through him. The cowboys then found the slayer creeping through the hills and ended a career that had wrecked the life and happiness of Bessie.

CALAMITY ANNE PARCEL POST (May 22).—Calamity Anne rose from her bed of straw in the barn and sighed dismally. Then she woke Woodrow, her partner, the burro and both sallied forth in search of adventure.

At the same time the "most important man in town" rose and went to his place of business. He hung out his shingles one after the other. Some of them read "Sheriff," "Justice of the Peace," "General Store," "Physician and Surgeon," "Lawyer" and plain "Merchant" and "Postmaster." That morning the "important one" received official authority to hire a parcels post carrier.

Frightful experiences awaited Calamity. A negro baby, must be delivered without address. Calamity forced it on the unhappy "Important one" who rushed wildly home with it. A rooster formed another barrier to Calamity's happiness, for how can one lead a burro and a rooster too? But better things awaited Calamity. The town had long been terrorized by the Meanest Man until a $1,000 reward was offered for his capture. Now the meanest man was tired and through the influence of Calamity's guardian angel he sought Calamity's own barn to rest. Then the rooster got away from Calamity and with her madly after it, sought refuge in Calamity's hay-mow. Result—Calamity's gun was out and the meanest man in her care directly. With a rope around his leg, a rope around the chicken's leg, and a rope by which she led her burro, Calamity made her appearance before the boys and the sheriff.

And now that the "important one" handed the $1,000 to Calamity it became his fine esthetic sense to hand the poor motherless negro baby to her. This he did and fled rapidly from the range of Calamity's six-shooter.

THE MODERN SNARE (May 24).—When Ralph married pretty Jane Hathaway, all the boys started a commotion to make Ralph sheriff for the present incumbent of the office was growing daily more lax in his duties.

This came to pass and amid the cheers of Ralph's friends and the scowls of Ben Baldwick, the deposed sheriff.

Scarcely had he taken office when Ben put up a job on him. Passing through the hills with the new sheriff was James Hartwell, a well known resident of the little town. The new sheriff could find no trace of the would-be murderer and in the days that followed all the town lost confidence in the new sheriff, but his wife. Jane had an idea and a suspicion. She plotted with Ralph and the result of the plot was the spreading of a report that James had died of the shot and his body would be carried through town. This was done in a rig, the body covered by a blanket lying in the back. Ben Baldwick, ex-sheriff, staggered against the saloon door when he saw the result of his trick to discredit the new sheriff.

A week later at ten a. m., when Ralph with several friends and Ben hung around the office the telephone rang. Ralph answered it and called to Ben that he was wanted at the 'phone. Ben answered wondering. Then he staggered back deathly white as a voice over the wire called to him "Hello, Ben. This is Jim whom you killed two weeks ago."

The effect was paralizing. Ben turned and fled through a window. The sheriff and a posse quickly mounted horses and gave chase. Others headed Ben off and seeing the jig was up, he threw his hands in the air, confessed the deed and the sheriff's honor among men was restored to him.

RELIANCE.

THE ETERNAL SACRIFICE (May 12).—Nan, a girl who has grown up in a den of thieves, runs away to avoid the attentions of the leader, Tony. She seeks the country and falls fainting at the door of a fashionable residence. Its young owner, Margaret Lyle, takes her in and after she is restored to health, makes her a servant in the household. Margaret is engaged to Arthur Ellis, who, day by day, finds his thoughts turning to the pretty little witch of the slums. He is the only man who has ever been kind to her and her heart goes out to him. Then, one day realizing that this is not loyal to her benefactor, she runs away—back to the old life. Tony plans to rob Margaret's house; the girl cannot dissuade him, but she refuses her help. They set out after locking her up. She breaks the window and, jumping into a taxi, rushes to the house with two policemen. They arrive in time to prevent the burglary and Nan, jumping in front of the other girl, receives Tony's bullet and dies.

THE BIG BOSS (2 parts—May 14).—Bascom, very worried about business, decides to apply to Morgan, the big boss, for help. Morgan offers to throw the Aqueduct Contract in his way if he will influence his young daughter, Nell, to marry him. Bascom agrees—but later finds that Nell has engaged herself to Dick, a young reporter, and will have nothing to do with the boss. Morgan, furious, tells Bascom that now he will be ruined, indeed. By accident, Dick wanders into an East Side saloon where in a private room, the boss meets his constituents.

Dick overhears Morgan telling Hart, contractor, to meet him in the saloon at nine sharp as he is going to open all bids submitted so that Hart may make his lower than the others. Dick rushes back to his editor and tells him that he can secure a great graft story—but how. They hit upon the dictagraph. Dick plants it in the saloon and that night at nine is busy in a little upstairs room with the receiver at his ear busily jotting down notes. Nell is with him. The bids are brought to the boss by the commissioner's clerk—one of his henchmen.

Bascom's bid is discovered to be the lowest of all and just as Hart is about to reduce his—the dictagraph wires are discovered and the boss dashes upstairs. Jumping upon Dick, he almost kills him when Bascom enters and saves the young chap's life. He takes the two young folks home and Dick is preparing his article for the press when the boss, who has experienced a change of heart, enters and tells Bascom that his bid will get the contract. Nell thanks him and Dick, for her sake flings his "graft scandal" story into the fire.

BILLY'S NEW WATCH (May 11).—Philip Rand on the way home from a dance, where he has met and fallen in love with Marion Lang, is jostled by an unknown man and upon recovering his balance finds his watch is missing. He immediately gives pursuit and overtaking his assailant grabs him suddenly from the rear and demands the watch. It is handed over to him. He pockets it and continues on to his home. Upon his arrival there he finds to his amazement that his own watch is lying on the dresser where he had left it. He has unconsciously become a highway robber. Luckily the watch he had taken from the stranger bears its owner's name on the case and he realizes that the only thing to do is to return it without delay and explain the unfortunate mistake. In the meantime, the man who has been robbed, has appealed to the first policeman he meets and told his story. Pursuit is started and Philip tracked to his rooms. Hearing the cry from his window and realizing the difficulty of making an explanation during the excitement, Philip escapes by the fire escape as the officers break into his room. They follow him to the roof top—he finally eluding them by ducking down an open sky-light. He goes to the nearest drug store and looks up the address of the owner of the watch and goes there at once to explain his position. To his surprise the door is opened by the girl of the dance and he learns that he has robbed her uncle. Her uncle returns irate and Philip is hidden until she has appeased him—though at first sight he wants to ring for the police. Donaldson's humor is finally aroused and the unfortunate mistake proves to have had a fortunate side, for Marion has revealed her interest in Philip during the mix-up and he parts from her with every indication that wedding bells will soon chime.

MY LADY'S BOOT (May 13).—During the Civil War, young Lieutenant Graham from the North is housed with his men in the Southern home of Virginia Fairmont. She hates him as she does all Yankees, despite his consideration and courtesy. One day a peddler comes to her home. He is her brother Randolph, a Confeedrate spy. He manages to give her a note which must be conveyed to General Lee before sunrise. Virginia, who has been permitted to ride wherever she pleass, starts off. At the turn in the road she manages to slip the message into her boot. Graham sees this, follows and demands to know what it is. She holds out the wrong foot and as he pulls off the boot she rides away. She delivers her message to General Lee safely and the Confederate Army is thus enabled to make an adventageous move. After the war, young Graham calls upon Virginia Fairmont to return her boot, and takes her heart in exchange.

THANHOUSER.

BARRED FROM THE MAILS (May 11).—The young matron lived in the Bronx, did her own housework, had a baby to look after, but still found a way to enjoy a day's uninterrupted shopping. She sent her baby by parcels post to her mother in Jersey City, meaning to drift over there in the evening, have dinner and reclaim the child. It was a very ingenious plan, and because the letter man whom she accosted on the street was a new member of the service, she induced him to take the baby. Then she went cheerily on her way.

The letter carrier had his own troubles with the baby, but he got it to the post office and turned the youngster over to the superior. He found to his sorrow, however, that "live animals" could not be sent through the mails, and the package was restored to him, neatly marked "returned to sender." Under orders he tearfully located the woman's house, but the place was locked, and there was no one in sight to accept the unwelcome package. The postman tried to leave it on the doorstep, but a stern policeman convinced him he was wrong, so again he wandered back to the post office.

By this time the mother had discovered that there was something wrong with the parcels post, for her baby had not arrived in Jersey City. She made frantic search, finally heard the policeman's story and rushes around to the post office just in time to save the little one from a journey to the dead letter office.

Any postal official who religiously lives up to the rules will tell you that this is exactly what would happen when a "live animal" barred from the mails is turned in and the owner thereof cannot be located.

THE MARBLE HEART (2 parts—May 13).—Outside the door of the home of a sculptor and his mother, fell a poor, friendless young girl. They took the girl in and cared for her, and as time went on the mother began to regard her as her daughter. The son regarded the affectionate advances of the girl with only brotherly love. But there came a time when the misgivings of the son changed, for he began to pay scant attentions to a young beauty he met at a reception and who was characterized as a woman with a heart "cold as marble." This piqued the beauty, who was accustomed to abject adulation. She determined to bring him to her feet and in this she succeeded. She offered to pose for him, and, spurred on by such a splendid model and her praises, he produced a figure which was acclaimed by all the critics as a masterpiece. With fame thus attained he neglected his home and spent all his time wooing the beauty, who was cold and impassive as the statue. The sculptor was warned by an editor friend that the beauty did not care for him and that he would meet the fate of her other admirers.

The sculptor, disbelieving his friend's warning, fell asleep and dreamed that he was a sculptor in ancient Athens when Diogenes, the philosopher, lived. He had created a beautiful statue for a rich man, and having fallen in love with his work, he was loathe the part with it when the rich man came to claim it. The rich man then ordered the soldiers to carry the statue away, and they were on the point of doing so when Diogenes appeared and told them that the statue should decide who the owner would be. The sculptor presented his case, pleading great love, which the statue paid no heed to; then the rich man displayed jewels and money, and immediately the statue extended its arms to him. The sculptor then awoke and found that it was only a dream.

He was happy in the beauty's company until

THE MISER (2 parts—May 23).—That he may not have to care for the daughter of his deceased son, Jim Beadles, a wealthy bachelor and ranchman, signs a five-year contract with a neighbor, John Roach, for her services. But great is the surprise of all when she arrives, a little tot, and, unable to break the contract, Mr. and Mrs. Roach take the child. One day, a month or so after, Beadles is taken down with the gout, and the minister tells the Roach family of his neighbor's condition. They give him scant sympathy, but little Mildred's heart is touched and she does many kind acts for the afflicted man, thereby ingratiating herself into his good graces. She likes to stay with Beadles, and a dramatic scene takes place when Roach calls Beadle's attention to the contract. Mildred, however, manages to make secret calls upon Beadles. Bud Sloan, whose father won his bride away from Beadles, and Mildred become friends. These men have several scraps, and Mildred scolds her grandfather. Old Beadles' heart is so far touched by Mildred's good nature that he buys her a new hat and writes her to come for it. But before she arrives he is attacked by the band of Wiggings, an Indian tenant of his, evicted on account of being in arrears in his rent, and is brought to the village in an unconscious condition. In the meantime, Mildred comes to the house and, finding an Indian arrow and horse tracks, she goes to Bud Sloan with her suspicions. Bud informs the ranch hands and they go to the Indian village and fight the redmen. They are in a serious position when the troops come up and turn the tide. During the battle Beadles is hit by a bullet, and just before he dies, writes a will, leaving all to Mildred.

THE SEA DOG (2 parts—May 21).—Old Jabez Blunt, a retired sea captain, has fitted up a house like a ship, and lives with his faithful old mate, Bill Squeers. The rough old men are always quarelling, while holding a deep affection for each other. Blunt's daughter, whom he has not seen for many years, has married a minister, and she has a little boy. The Rev. Clayton has been doing missionary work in China, and secures the pulpit in Blunt's town. Blunt is overjoyed to receive a letter from Alice, telling him she is coming. The minister does not understand the old sailor, and does not approve of his manners and language. The boy, however, falls in love with his granddad, and the two become chums. Clayton tries to persuade Alice to keep the boy away, but seeing that it pains her to think of breaking up the friendship between her father and their son, he does not mention the matter again until one day the child comes running into the house as a church committee is being entertained, carrying a pail of clams, which he triumphantly says: "Are damn good eating, for Grand-dad says so."

There is instant consternation. Alice is humiliated before her guests, and the minister decides to take a firm stand. It is planned to send the boy away to Clayton's mother for a while, so the old man's feelings will not be hurt. The boy, however, hears the talk and rushes to Blunt and tearfully tells him the whole story. Blunt's pride is touched, and he decides to go away and study etiquette. Amusing scenes are shown of Blunt and Squeers. Little Jim worries his head about his grand-dad, and is taken violently ill. In his delirium he keeps calling for the old man, and Clayton is compelled to telegraph Blunt, pleading with him to make all haste home. The crisis in the boy's condition is approaching as Blunt comes into the room and drops at the bedside with tears streaming down his face. The little eyes open slowly and look blankly around till they spy the face of the old man. With a scream of joy the little arms are clasped about Blunt's neck—and the child's life is saved.

HUBBY'S JOB (May 19).—Hubby is out of work, and wifey is working as a stenographer, posing as a single woman, in an employment agency. The boss is in love with the pretty typist. He tells her he wants a man right away, and she telephones her husband to come down. He gets the job, which is that of porter. While hubby sweeps the floors and cleans the cuspidors, the boss is holding wifey's hand in the private office. Another suitor, who, also, does not know the stenographer is married, tries to see her and is kicked out by the boss. He tells his troubles to the porter, and then rushes off to tell the boss's wife, for revenge. Hubby listens at the door and is caught by the boss, who tips him to stop spying. The boss's wife, a two-hundred-pounder, arrives just as hubby has gotten up his courage to beat up the boss, and a lively scrimmage ensues.

TWIXT LOVE AND FIRE (May 19).—A jealous husband tries to lay a trap for his wife. While hiding he sees her embrace her brother, who has returned from abroad, and whom the husband has never met. The wife and brother think him a burglar and lock him up in a room. He throws down a cigarette, which sets the couch on fire and soon the whole room is blazing. He makes frantic efforts to escape, but is held a prisoner until the police and fire department arrive. The firemen turn streams of water onto the fire, and the irate man, and the police take him from the room. Explanations follow.

THE FOREMAN OF THE JURY (May 22).—Jones is broke. His girl is giving a birthday party, and her various suitors give her costly presents. Jones finds a beautiful la vallier, which he gives to Mabel, and wins her heart. He is chosen as the foreman of a jury, and when petty offenders are brought to trial turns a deaf ear to all pleas for mercy, gaining the hatred of the other jurors. Finally a man is brought up who is to be tried for stealing the necklace Jones found. A strong case is shown, and all the other jurors want to find him guilty, but Jones holds out for an acquittal. Mabel comes into the court room and sits alongside of the complainant. The necklace is seen and an uproar takes place. Jones is accused as a thief and in a highly melodramatic manner takes a huge vial from his pocket, drinks the contents and falls back dead.

SAVED FROM THE GRIP OF ALCOHOL (May 9).—In a little out-of-the-way trading station in the heart of the African wilds, Henry Becker lives happily with his young wife and child. As time goes on his wife cannot endure the climate and at last she goes to her grave, leaving her husband bowed under the burden of his grief. A faithful nurse takes charge of the child, and Becker goes on with his daily work as best he can. Gradually he succumbs to the temptation to drown his sorrow in wine, gradually the evil effects of alcohol claim him for their own. He neglects his duty and spends many hours locked in his study in a drunken stupor.

One day the whole of the members of the station go out hunting big game, but they return home later after a fruitless search. When the hunt is over, Becker returns to his study, and spends the rest of the day indulging in one of his usual drunken orgies. Paralyzed by the awful effects of the liquor, he is unable to stir when the nurse's heartrending cry for aid peals through the silent house. The tense moment which follows serves to impress upon the drunkard's deadened senses the fact that some terrible calamity is about to befall. Strive as he will, he cannot get his limbs to obey him, and he sinks helpless to the floor.

Meanwhile, a fierce forest leopard is prowling around the house, seeking to overtake Becker's little child. The leopard has escaped the hunters, and, made bold by hunger, it dares to enter the habitations of men, and seeks the little child for its prey.

The nurse at last bravely places herself between the leopard and the child. The little one escapes, and the noise of the dreadful struggle is borne to the ears of the powerless Becker. Fortunately, assistance from another source arrives in time, and a party of traders drive off the leopard. When they open his study door, Becker rolls out, to find his little one is saved, thanks to the efforts of her faithful nurse. He gives thanks for this providential aid, and the lesson he learns suffices to make him scorn the bottle henceforth, and do his duty to his little child.

A MIGHTY HUNTER (May 16).—A hunter recounts his adventures to his admiring sweetheart. That day a wild beast makes a raid upon a farm and the hunter is called upon to prove what he can do. Discretion overpowers him and he decides that he is safer in bed than waiting for the animal. The wonderful way in which he hunts the lion shows him to be a mighty hunter, but a mightier

PAT MOVES TO DIPLOMATIC CIRCLES (May 16).—This is an amusing comedy showing the alarming results caused by a mistake on the part of some representatives of the French Government, who are sent to meet the new Ambassador of Illyria. The ambassador postpones his departure, and Pat, who is traveling by the train which he should have taken, is mistaken for the illustrious person. His behavior is not becoming to an ambassador, and leads to a serious rupture in the diplomatic relations between France and Illyria.

THE CRUCIBLE OF LOVE (May 8).—Raphael Moore, a dramatist, has written a brilliant play. He submits it to Roth, the manager of a theater, but it meets with no success. Louise Kent, an actress of reputation, working for Roth, meets Moore, and asks him to show her his manuscript. She and her uncle, Mr. Marchand, go over the play very carefully and Louise decides to put the play on, against the wishes of her manager, Roth. It is a failure. As a work of art, it is a triumph, but it lacks the prime quality—heart interest. The boy is a genius, but does not know life. His characters are chiseled from cold marble; he has not yet been awakened to his full capacity. Louise is impressed and resolves to put the theory to the test. Raphael is made to believe that she is false to him—for they have become betrothed—and with his soul in torment, he turns again to his abandoned art for solace, and writes a truly great play.

TONY, THE TENOR (May 15).—On the swaying girders, high above the street, Tony sang at his work, his fellow workers listened in rapture to his sweet tenor, which made the work-day pass rapidly. One day a great impressario, passing along the busy street, heard the voice from above and stopped. He investigated and thus was Antonio Bolino discovered. But Tony would not give up his humble quarters, and his Italian sweetheart, much to the disapproval of the impressario, who was compelled to let him have his way, and Tony and Mercedes talked and sang of sunny Italy and looked forward to the day when they should be able to return. His first appearance was one grand ovation and the papers lauded him to the skies, but Tony was not vain over his prosperity.

The once little bank account now grew rapidly, and when the year came around in which his contract with the impressario ended, he came home to Mercedes, threw off his evening dress and sent for beer, and over the little lunch they laughed and talked and tore up the expired contract. Next day a big ocean liner received on board two Italian passengers. The impressario, with a new contract, and visions of fame and wealth, went to the Italian tenement, and in the window saw a sign "To let." He inquired and learned that his find with the sweetheart had returned to Italy.

THE PROFESSOR'S TRAVELING ADVENTURES (May 17).—Professor Miller is so completely wrapped up in his books that he is threatened with illness, but in spite of the urgings of his friends he refuses to take a needed vacation. It is not until the family doctor appears upon the scene and announces that unless the man of letters takes a rest he will have but a short time to live, that Miller consents to go on a journey. His faithful old housekeeper packs his valise and the professor boards a train for his destination. In the same compartment is a young woman and an elderly matron, and the latter removes her shoes for better comfort. When the young woman alights from the coach, she realizes that she has forgotten her overshoes, and the professor gallantly throws from the window the shoes belonging to the matron. There is an exciting scene, but the professor makes due apologies and supplies the price of a pair of new shoes. A journey in a stage coach is next in order and the professor manages to get mixed up in all sorts of complications in his desire to be helpful to his fellow passengers. Upon arriving at an inn, he collides with a bicycle, and is thrown into a ditch, and is rescued in a sadly battered condition. After signing the register, the professor is shown to a room in which the only furniture is a hard cot and a chair, but as he is weary, he retires, and is about to drop into slumber when a noise under the bed attracts his attention. He investigates and finds a dog. The animal is ejected, but finds his way back to the room by means of a hole leading from the courtyard. Again the intruder is ejected, but when he returns a third time, the professor suspects that he is sleeping over a kennel, and makes a protest to the landlord. On the following morning, thoroughly fatigued, and

THE AMATEUR HIGHWAYMAN (May 21).—Deacon Winkle reads of frequent hold-ups in his neighborhood, arms himself and goes out to a deacon's meeting. A stranger on the street asks directions of him. As he leaves, Winkle finds that his watch and fob are missing. He orders the stranger to halt, holds him up, and, as he supposes, gets back his watch and fob. He vaingloriously recounts his adventure to his brother deacons and his wife at home. She produces his own watch and fob, which he left at home. Consternation.

Winkle reads that the town is aroused over this fresh outrage, and proceeds to try to return the watch to his victim, a Mr. Shivers. After the deacon tries the registered mail, a messenger boy, and the plan of concealing the watch in a loaf of bread, he gives up in despair. Shiver is now thoroughly frightened, believing that someone is trying to kill him with an infernal machine.

Winkle decides to force his way into Shiver's house. He does so and is about to leave the watch, when he collides with and smashes a piece of statuary. He hurriedly and hopelessly leaves. The following night he disguises as a night watchman, and goes to the Shiver's home. Shivers, his wife and his friends are sitting up, variously armed, waiting for a highwayman, a bomb or a burglar. The supposed watchman is welcomed, and when they are all asleep in their chairs, he rigs an ingenious arrangement of pans in the kitchen so that they will fall when filled with running water. When the racket arouses the sleepers, Winkle volunteers to investigate alone.

He does so, and creates a terrible combat with a chair that through the closed door appeals to their imagination. As they finally rush in, he points to the shattered window, and holds forth Shiver's watch and fob; his man has escaped but he has captured the lost booty. Tableau and gratitude of all.

THE MAN WHO FAILED (May 23).—Alicia, the daughter of a poor man, is very ill and needs to be sent away for expensive treatment. The father appeals to his wealthy employer for aid. The rich man, seeing a picture of the girl, becomes infatuated with her and agrees to save her life if the father will give his word of honor that she will marry him when she recovers. The promise is given and when Alicia returns cured, she learns of the pledge. She marries the man without love, but he wants her heart and assures her that he will demand nothing of her until she comes to him of her own free will. He gets about to win her love, but fails even by giving her fine gifts and making her the queen of society. To get honors to lay at her feet, he accepts the nomination for mayor, but he refuses to promise the bosses his support after the election if they help him before, so he is defeated. The wife knows the stand her husband took and begins to honor him. During the campaign, the political bosses incite the employes of his factory to strike and while the strike is on, the men get desperate and blow up the factory. Counting himself a failure, he determines to go away and tells his wife in time she can get a divorce. But Alicia has come to love him and he finds that it is not riches and power that win a woman's heart.

IT'S GREAT TO BE GREAT (May 8).—Kittie likes Willie, but Kittie's papa doesn't like him. Papa is scheduled to go out one evening. Kittie notifies Willie to come around. Papa comes back unexpectedly and throws Willie out of the window. Willie lands on the sidewalk. He goes into a drug store for treatment. When he emerges his head is all bound round with white cloth.

The police department this day have been told of the arrival of a Maharajah, Prince of Kalamazoo.

Every policeman is so notified to watch for him. When one sees a young man with apparently what is a turban, they believe that it is the Maharajah in disguise. They follow him about, much to his dismay.

As Willie strolls through the park he meets Kittie. The police meanwhile are taking it all in with great zest. Who then should come along but Kittie's father. The police believe that papa is an anarchist and they pounce upon him, as he tries to get at Willie. They arrest him and hustle him to the station.

The Chief of Police struggles with papa and whispers to him that Willie, who has followed, is a real live Maharajah and he should induce him to allow him to become one of his fathers-in-law. It is, of course, expedient for father to bow to the Maharajah. At the last moment after papa had given his consent to allow Willie to come into the family, a telegram is received. This reads that the Maharajah left town the day before and that, therefore, a police guard is not necessary. Therefore it is discovered that Willie is only Willie and not a Maharajah.

A MAN OF LETTERS (May 8).—Alphonse Wienerschnitzel is a postoffice clerk. He falls in love with a young woman who calls to collect her mail.

He loves her so much that he neglects his duties. He writes a love poem to the young woman which he slips into her postoffice box. It turns out to be a real slip, as the letters belonged to her husband who conducted a mail order business.

The husband who is a large man reads Schnitzie's poem and straightway goes around to Schnitzie's office and musses him up. Therefore, Schnitzie takes refuge in the pneumatic mail tube.

AN EYE FOR AN EYE (May 8).—The interest of the manager and assistant manager of a large department store for one of their minor employees is of a strong nature. The manager is highest in her affections.

The credit of the store is low and the manager seeks to retrieve fallen fortunes by speculations on the stock market. He uses the company's money, but speculates in his own name.

The assistant manager hears of this and exposes his superior to the directors of the company. The manager's act, although his motive is good, is criminal on the surface. He is sent to jail.

His sweetheart, the store-woman, is heart-broken and determines that the wrong done him by his rival will not be unavenged.

She encourages the courtship of the assistant manager, who has been promoted to the managership. She proves to be very expensive, developing taste for diamonds and other costly things. So wrecked is his fortune by these extravagances that he decides to rob the department store safe.

The girl, believing that this is his intention, notifies the directors of the company and the police. They catch the manager in the act. The girl appears on the scene and tells the manager that she has led him on to his ruin, that she never loved him, and that her heart is with the man who is still in prison and that she has long plotted to put him where he had put her fiance.

THE RAJAH'S CASKET (3 parts, State Rights).—As a token of his esteem for Captain George Cooper's prospective father-in-law, Lord Peters, the Rajah of Palakotta presents the captain with a casket of precious jewels. Cooper writes to his fiancée, telling her of this gift he will give her on his return. The notorious cracksman, Clement Rocca, robs the mail-train and reads the letter. He determines to steal the casket. He goes to the English hotel where the colonel and his daughter are staying. He meets them.

At the same hotel is detective Harry Derwent. His suspicions are stirred by the action of Rocca. A telegram from Captain Cooper tells the time that his father and himself will arrive. The colonel and his daughter accept Rocca's invitation to join him in a shooting trip on an island off the coast. On arriving at the island, the criminal, on a pretext, leaves his guests. He returns to the mainland, knowing when the tide rises the island will be completely submerged. Not all his own way, however, is the criminal going to conduct his nefarious schemes, for Derwent is keen and on the alert. On the previous night he had seen through a hole bored in the floor separating their rooms that Rocca is supplied with disguises. He had also learned of secret meetings with a man in an out-of-the-way cave, which is accessible only by a dangerous footpath.

Capt. Cooper and his father duly arrive and the casket is deposited in the hotel safe. Captain Cooper goes for a walk on the cliffs. Half an hour later he is found insensible. The receipt for the casket has been stolen from the captain's pocketbook. It is Rocca's work.

An accomplice, disguised as an orderly, goes to the hotel and is handed the casket on the strength of having the receipt. Cooper and the detective, arriving at the hotel, find that the box is gone. The captain gives chase to an automobile disappearing down the road. The detective hastens to keep watch over the cave. He hides behind a projecting piece of rock. In the interior Rocca's accomplice hands over the casket. Derwent cautiously proceeds to the mouth of the cave, revolver in hand. He encounters Rocca. Before the latter recovers from the surprise Derwent snatches the precious package from him. There is a struggle. The thief loses his hold on the slippery rocks and staggers back over the edge into the sea, disappearing forever.

The colonel and his daughter, marooned on Bird's Island, have to swim for it when the tide rises. They keep afloat until they are picked up by a fishing smack. They don dry clothes loaned them by sailors and are soon back at the hotel. Captain Cooper returns from the unsuccessful pursuit of the casket. A happy reunion takes place when Detective Derwent enters with the jewels.

UNION FEATURES.

BALAOO, THE DEMON BABOON (Feature Release—3 parts).—Dr. Coriolis, an eminent scientist, transformed an enormous baboon into a being, half human and half ape. Balaoo, the name given the hideous creature by the doctor, was caught one day in the wolf trap laid by Hubert, a notorious poacher. When he was rescued by Hubert, the poor creature demonstrated by gestures that he would be his devoted slave. At last Dr. Cariolis discovered that Balaoo was the cause of all the outrages that had been perpetrated in the village, and reprimanded him so severely that he ran away. This was the last the doctor had seen of his protege until one day he read of an elusive creature terrorizing Lagana, Switzerland, and he knew it must be Balaoo. After a consultation with the mayor of that city, a searching party was formed. At last the creature was discovered swinging from tree top to tree top and instinctively noting that he was being cornered, he threw himself into a lake. The pursuing party went after him in a launch, but this was soon capsized by the powerful arms of Balaoo and he escaped. Some time later, Balaoo turned up in the vicinity of the doctor's home, but no one knew of his whereabouts with the exception of Hubert, who instructed the beast to enter the village inn and strangle a traveler with whom he had an altercation. The faithful Balaoo did as he was told and the next morning the crime was discovered, but no one could ascribe its perpetration to anyone. Hubert was suspected, but he easily proved an alibi. The next malevolent act that Hubert instructed Balaoo to perform was the abduction of Madeline, the daughter of Dr. Cariolis, with whom he was in love. By clinging to the leafy foliage of a tree under which Madeline passed, Balaoo seized the girl and brought her to Hubert's cabin, where he perceived the poacher's wicked intentions. Picking up an empty cask, Balaoo hurled it at the poacher who dodged it and fired a shot into the body of Balaoo. The animal then laid a trap in the nature of a pit for the poacher who unsuspectingly walked right into it and broke both legs. The poacher told Balaoo by gestures where he had hidden Madeline. Balaoo then brought Dr. Cariolis to the place where his daughter was hidden. The police were notified, the poacher was taken from the pit and placed under arrest, and, after telling by gestures who was the instigator of the murder, Balaoo passed away.

ECLECTIC.

A RUINED LIFE (2,500 feet—Special).—Lieutenant Muller, secretly married, lives with his parents and his married sister, but chafes under the conditions and wishes they could all live together, which is impossible owing to his wife's lack of social standing. Muller is fond of horses and rides his own horse in the steeplechase, a big society event. His horse falls and Muller is fatally injured. On his death bed he tells his secret and implores his parents to care for his wife and little boy. They are taken into the family, but incur the displeasure of Muller's brother-in-law, who sees in the lad a possible claimant for his grandfather's fortune, which the brother-in-law hopes to inherit. He offers Muller's widow some money if she will go away with the boy. She spurns this but leaves with her son and tries to make a living by sewing. She does not succeed and finally yields to the proposal of her son's grandmother that she will adopt the boy, but cannot receive his mother. Some time afterward seeing her son in the park with his nurse, she seizes him and jumps in the lake, intending to end both their lives, but they are rescued by some men. For this act the mother is sentenced to a long term in prison. When she gets out she is old, and her son, now grown up, is a military cadet, still living with his grandparents who are very proud of him. His old mother gets employment as a scrub woman, but is soon discharged for incompetency and she wanders about in search of work. Her son comes across her as she lays fainting in the road, while some boys are ridiculing her. He drives them off and carries her home, where he finds out that she is his mother.

KINEMACOLOR.

REEDHAM DRILL.—Reedham Orphanage is at a little town called Purley, not far from London. It is for the children of soldiers, and is managed under the direct patronage and interest of the King and Queen. Children are taught there the duties they will have to perform when they become members of the British Army, and one of the features of the school is the annual display of their fancy marching. To the sound of their instructor's whistle they go through many interesting evolutions.

MUMPS.—Jack, a young millionaire, see Mary and falls in love with her. For a long time he follows her, but can not learn her name, until she writes an advertisement for a chauffeur. Jack buys a chauffeur suit and a book, "How to run an Automobile in one lesson" and gets the position. Of course, when he takes out his employer, he has an accident. A passing machine takes the party home. Through nursing her little sister Mary contracts the mumps. Jack gets them too. Both are confined to their rooms. Mary hears burglars and calls Jack. Then she sends for the police. The burglars escape, but the two invalids are arrested. Before matters are straightened out the entire police force is on its way to Mumpsville. When Jack gets away from the station he makes arrangements to leave his "job," but Mary detains him. She gets Jack; the police get the mumps.

MIXED SIGNALS.—A retired sea captain buys a sail-boat and engages an old shipmate for "crew." the "crew" falls in love with the captain's daughter. The old man is opposed to the match. Jack gets employment as a lighthouse keeper, marries the daughter and takes her with him to the light. When the bride arrives at her new home she discovers that instead of clothes in her trunk there are only two signal flags, which, flown together, mean "Am attacked, need help." Many months pass; the old captain is lonely, but still stubborn and unreconciled. Jack has written his mother announcing an impending event, telling her that one flag will mean a boy, two a girl. Two are flown on the great day. The captain discovers the signals and blows the bugle to arouse the village. The "enemy" is delivered to the arms of the grandfather; all is forgiven.

POWER OF PRAYER.—Busy with work till late at his office John realizes his stenographer is tired and sends her home determined to finish the work himself. He telephones his wife he will not be home to dinner, not alone on account of the work, but he does not care to meet the clergymen she has invited. The wife is bitterly disappointed, and is compelled to make excuses for her husband's absence. John has a stroke of paralysis and falls helpless over his desk. The guests having gone, and unable to get any answer from her husband over the 'phone, the wife sends the butler to the office. There he finds John unconscious, telephones for a doctor and together they take the stricken man home. He recovers but is not able to walk, is compelled to spend his time in a rolling chair unable even to move that about. Still he scoffs at all sacred subjects and refuses to see the minister when he calls.

At last we see him seated in his chair reading. The baby has been put to bed and his wife and maid go to a prayer meeting. He dismisses the butler and reads. In the bedroom a newspaper on a table near the crib blows and flutters, finally catches fire in the candle. The paper finally blows onto the crib, and soon the bed is on fire. The smoke wakes John, he rings, calls, endeavors to move his chair—all in vain. In desperation he prays for power, for help, to reach his child. Slowly he makes the chair move. Finally the frantic man gets his chair to the door, it sticks and he cannot move it. Sitting helpless in sight of the flames crawling towards his baby, he once more prays for help, and with a tremendous effort of will, staggers out of the chair to the bed, gets the baby, but his power is gone, he sinks helpless into a chair amid smoke and flame. Meantime the wife has left the prayer-meeting, the butler opens the door. The minister is with her. The men get a blanket and wrap the now fiercely burning bedclothes in it, throwing all out of the window. The picture closes with the husband repentant.

LOVE AND LAUNDRY.—It starts when George writes two letters—one to his sweetheart—calling for an answer to a very important question when he calls later—the other to his laundress—who has been casting sheep's-eyes at George while she ironed his shirts—calling her down for neglecting her duty. By mistake of the messenger the letters get mixed and are delivered to the wrong parties. Not hearing from either, George decides to call on Bridget while on his way to get his sweetheart's answer. Bridget assumes that he is on altogether a different errand, and when he insists on talking about the shirt, she casts it aside, saying there are more important matters to take up. With this she throws her arms above his neck. George demands an explanation—when she flashes the miscarried letter. George tries to explain that it was not intended for her, but she will not release him. Bolting out with Bridget still hanging about his neck, the two run into a policeman, who is appealed to by both. He has been casting sheep-eyes at Bridget, and of course, decides in George's favor, so George is allowed to go his way, a little worse for the conflict.

Enter George in the presence of Mazie. Here more explanations are needed. However, George convinces Mazie that it was all an error, and is about to take her in his arms, when she pushes him back, saying "Oh, no, I may soil your white shirt front," but George says "I don't care." As you may imagine there is but one finish.

THE SAND MAN.—The opening scene shows a student pouring over his books as the day closes. Enter the Sand Man, woh says: "The day is done, the time for rest is here." The student replies, "No; I mustwork," whereupon the sand man scatters the dust in his eyes, and as he dozes off, the Sand Man says: "Come with me, and I will show you why I make my rounds so early."

The first place they enter is the kitchen of a workman's house. There sits a frail woman, as her husband, a working man, enters drunk. The wife prepares the meal for her husband and child, but her solicitation is met with poor reward, for the brute of the man asserts itself, and as he is about to strike the defenseless woman, the Sand Man scatters the dust, and sleep comes to their rescue.

From here they go to the sick bed of a child where the Sand Man induces sleep—a panacea better than all.

Next they visit the attic of a poor, struggling artist, who is about to seek sleep with drugs, when the Sand Man scatters his dust.

Thus the Sand Man guides the student through the night, bringing him back to his study, and when the night is gone, he reviews himself awakening from a refreshing sleep, the window open, the morning light shining in on his face, and he realizes that the night's experience was all a dream—but what a lesson was that dream!

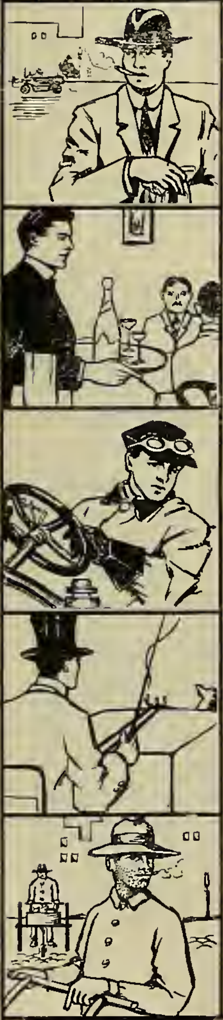
QUEEN OF CRIMINALS VERSUS KING OF DETECTIVES

— MEANS A LINE AT THE BOX OFFICE WINDOW —

15 CENTS PER-FOOT – FIRST COME – FIRST SERVED – PROTECTED TERRITORY



"The Female Raffles" Means Standing Room Only Crowds

You are no doubt among the many State right operators appreciating the value of the picture with a punch. The road to prosperity leads to the box-office window, and the wide-awake manager is always on the lookout for a feature that means a line at the box office. The American public demands the play of adventure—the drama abounding with thrills—the story with a punch. All the reigning stage successes of the hour are crook plays—viz.: "Within the Law," "The Conspiracy," "Are You a Crook?" "The Argyle Case," "Stop Thief," and "The Master Mind." Therefore, we beg to call your undivided and special attention to the long-looked-for drama of the underworld, "THE FEMALE RAFFLES," which is the most sensational and absorbing crook play ever offered the lovers of motion pictures.

"THE FEMALE RAFFLES" is a thrilling story depicting the startling adventures of an American detective in Paris, and is a picture that holds the audience spellbound, as stirring scene after scene is vividly portrayed with machine-like rapidity.

STATE RIGHT OPERATORS: We have the picture that the public wants—the picture that means a line at the box office window—the picture that furnishes a thrill a second—the picture that will make the most blase sit up and take notice—the picture that sends an audience away from the theatre talking—AND A PICTURE THAT WILL PASS ANY CENSORSHIP BOARD.

We are offering "THE FEMALE RAFFLES" at a bargain—selling the films at fifteen cents per foot, which will include territorial rights fully protected. Unsurpassed line of pictorial printing at Otis Lithograph Company, Cleveland, Ohio. One 24-Sheet—One 16-Sheet—One 6-Sheet—Two kinds of 3-Sheets—Two kinds of 1-Sheets—Heralds, photos, cuts, literature, and everything necessary for publicity.

DON'T LET ANYBODY ELSE BEAT YOU TO IT. DON'T LET THIS WONDERFUL MONEY-MAKER GET AWAY FROM YOU. DON'T LOSE TIME BY WRITING—WIRE.

Will Ship Film On Receipt of Order; WIRE NOW.

This Slide Thrown On Your Screen

would catch the eye of everyone in your house. We make it for all multiple reel releases and it sells for the ridiculously low price of 25c. It isn't of the ordinary kind, but an artistically colored slide made by people who know how. The exhibitor who won't pay 25c for the purpose of advertising his next feature practically admits his lack of faith in publicity.

And Beyond That, We Carry in Stock the Finest Line of Regular Announcement Slides You Ever Saw

Here's Something Swell For Your Lobby

A three-sheet muslin banner with an artistic border printed in colors and just enough white space in the center to take a regular stock one-sheet poster. This we sell at 50c and it's good indefinitely.

"We Have What You Want When You Want It!"

If it isn't in stock it won't take our big force long to make it up for you. Every exhibitor should be in touch with our thousand and one advertising specialties. Let's hear from you.

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:
24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

Here is Your Library, Mr. Exhibitor.

The Motion Picture Annual, published by the Chalmers Publishing Company, is a small encyclopedia. The exhibitor can always turn to it with confidence. It has been prepared by practical moving picture men, who know and understand the needs of the exhibitor. Add this to your library forthwith, for it costs but one dollar and twenty-five cents in paper covers or $1.50 in cloth boards. It is fully worth it. The best writers in the motion picture field have provided the literary matter in it. The complete list of releases for 1912 (Licensed and Independent) and the classified trade directory are worth something to you, many times the price perhaps.

Gundlach Projection Lenses

The Only Lenses Which Guarantee You The Best Pictures
The Only Lenses Giving The Greatest Possible Illumination
The Only Lenses Exact in Focal Length To Within 1-100 of an Inch

There were no high grade Lenses on the market until GUNDLACH LENSES were made and none now that equal them in optical quality and illuminating power.

The GUNDLACH NO. 2 PROJECTION LENSES made the long throw possible and already hundreds of theater owners have taken advantage of this opportunity to increase their theaters in length and seating capacity adding to their profits at the same time.

The superior quality of GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES is recognized by the leading makers of machines and they will be supplied to order in place of the ordinary lens equipment at very little increase in price.

No matter how well satisfied you are with your picture we invite you to order a GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENS for trial to see the difference. Nearly all our lenses are sold to exhibitors who have ordinary lenses, but are looking for something better. In many cases a customer orders one lens for trial and then re-equips all his machines, sometimes the machines of several theaters.

GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES are used by the Kinemacolor Company of America because they must have the best.

THE BLACK TRACKERS

PRODUCED IN AUSTRALIA at YARRABAH, a remote mission station in a wild part of Northern Queensland. ENACTED BY THE BLACK ABORIGINALS OF THAT COUNTRY.

A white trader narrowly escapes a treacherous death at the hands of another white, by the prompt action of black aboriginals whom he had befriended. Suspicion is at first on the blacks, but they track and bring the real culprit to justice.

Get On Your Exchange's Waiting List for the PLAYER-POSTER!

There's a long waiting list at every exchange for the Thanhouser PLAYER-POSTER. That demonstrates what a fine thing for the business the smart exhibitor thinks the PLAYERPOSTER really is. Just think of hundreds of exhibitors imploring their exchange to let them spend their money for PLAYER-POSTERS! Most exchanges already have orders in for the total amount of their first shipment of PLAYERPOSTERS. If you want to be supplied at any decently early date at all, get on your exchange's waiting list. If you want to be reminded what this wonderful PLAYERPOSTER is, it's a striking one-sheet portrait, in colors, of each of the most popular Thanhouser artists and your exchange will tell you all about the trifling price.

THE THANHOUSER 3-A-WEEK

SUNDAY, MAY 18: "Why Babe Left Home;" telling also why he came back.—TUESDAY, MAY 20: "A Business Woman;" she arranges her children's business affairs, and cleverly.—FRIDAY, MAY 23: "In Their Hour of Need;" the old minister goes back to the flock that rejected him.

COMING! Sunday, May 25: "A Pullman Nightmare," a burlesque Western thriller," and Tuesday, May 27: "Carmen," in three reels.

The Applause of the Universe
Greets The Universal on Its

First Anniversary

The Universal is just one year old.

One year old—yet it is by far the largest and livest film manufacturing concern in the universe!

In twelve months it has built up an organization that was not even dreamed of one short year ago.

In twelve months it has gained a world-wide success after overcoming obstacles that seemed well-nigh insurmountable!

In spite of hot, hard fighting from within and without—keen competition—bitter picture politics — hundreds of problems that had to be met and solved —in spite of all these things we have accomplished the impossible in twelve short months.

The Universal is but one year old, yet it is making the best program in the wide world!

And the only reason why it can make the best pictures in the world is because—

It has the greatest and highest-salaried aggregation of star performers in the business.

It has the stage directors who are the master minds of their profession.

It has the most expert staff of camera operators that money can employ.

It has a highly efficient staff of experts in every department of the business, whether in offices, studios or factories.

It has shattered all precedent and paid record prices for scenarios in order to secure ideas from the cream of the world's best writers.

Every dollar of profit made by the Universal has been turned right back into the business, with the result that a most marvelous improvement has shown in every negative made by the Universal's various companies. We told you we did not intend to take any profit out of the business the first year, and we have lived up to the letter and spirit of our promise.

To those thousands of exhibitors who have loyally stuck to us through the formative period of the Universal's career—who have overlooked our mistakes and excused our blunders—who have given us encouragement when we needed it, we extend sincere thanks from the very bottom of our hearts. At the threshold of our second year, we promise you greater things than ever, and assure you that the Universal will continue to outstrip all competition and produce the cleanest, strongest and finest film program the world has ever known.

So, again and again and again—

"We Thank You"

"THE LARGEST FILM MANUFACTURING CONCERN IN THE UNIVERSE"

IT'S FAMOUS AUTHORS' WEEK

Stewart Edward White and Richard Washburn Child, Both Well Known to You, Have Written Two Splendid Yarns for the Present Week's Output

Commencing Monday, May 26th, we give you a wonderfully clever two-reel by Stewart Edward White, entitled "Ashes of Three." White is long noted for his delightful tales of the Primitive North and West.

Thursday, May 29th, we offer "On the Border," a Mexican or Spanish Western. No famous name attaches to this mid-week picture, but for quality of story it is quite the equal of any Western we have seen in a long time. It's GOOD, GENUINELY, HONESTLY GOOD, and will delight and amuse any audience.

Saturday, May 31st, we offer you Richard Washburn Child's "Her Big Story," a yarn of a clever newspaper girl and a corrupt political boss. Richard Washburn Child is known to all lovers of good fiction. "Her Big Story" is published synonymously in the "Popular Magazine"—so, many of your patrons will READ and SEE the story.

Release Monday, May 26 "Ashes of Three" By Stewart Edward White

Warren Kerrigan as a derelict, a stupid creature with dulled brain, is a revelation, quite the opposite from the handsome Jack you are familiar with. A rejuvenation takes place, fostered by the giant mother love of a woman made insane by grief over her own lost boy. A powerful, well-told story. From the Ashes of Three a Man was Made!

Release Thursday, May 29 "On the Border"

The pretty dancer and the casual cowboy visitor at the cabaret fell in love. A Mexican waiter loved Chiquita with the passionate ardor of his race. A Gringo get this dainty bundle of Spanish nerves and beauty? Never. He planned to destroy the cowboy lover by a drop of poison in his cup. What happened makes a thrilling and entirely satisfying Western.

Release Saturday, May 31 "Her Big Story" By Richard Washburn Child

She loved the managing editor, but she also loved the joy of the big, exclusive story. A corrupt political boss and the Mayor of the town got her job, but couldn't keep the story from an opposition paper. How she landed it, in the Mayor's private library, laid him out with a statuette when he grabbed her and finally found consolation in her lover-managing-editor, makes a charming story.

BLOOD AND WATER

On the Mutual program and others.
One and three sheets.

The story concerns two old persons who have raised their son's child, because his wife was of the child-hating kind. After having cared for the child for ten years, the mother comes to take it away. The child is reluctant to go, having grown attached to her grandparents. Numerous complications ensue, and it is finally determined which is thicker, blood or water, when the grandfather saves the child from the hands of a gang of crooks who had planned to teach the little girl the art of picking pockets.

Dramatic War Story, Featuring a Wonderful Boy Actor

Little Billy runs away and enlists as a drummer boy. His big brother is also a soldier in the Union Army, and both are seen in sensational battles. Billy has used an assumed name, and his brother is unable to find any trace of him. Billy is captured by the confederates, and while making his escape hides in a house where the officers are formulating plans for the following day's battle. He carries the information to the Union general, but the confederates suspect their plans have been overheard and change them, resulting in a different plan of attack which nearly annihilates the entire Union Army. Billy is badly wounded, and writes to his mother that he is coming home. There is great rejoicing in his home, and preparations are made to receive the little hero. He arrives, but in a casket, carried by sorrowful soldiers, for little Billy dies before he can see his folks again.

Sensational Dramatic and Military Production, in Which a Little Girl Saves the Life of Her Father, Who Deserted His Post To Save Her

In a series of thrilling scenes, during an attack by the confederate forces, little Mary becomes lost and is caught between the lines. She hides, trembling with fear while the shot and shell whistle over her head. That night her father, a Union sentry, hears her moving and challenges the unknown person, and receiving no reply fires. With a shriek, the child drops to the ground, shot through the arm. To save his child he deserts his post and carries her to the village, where she is taken care of by his wife. He is arrested and sentenced to be shot. His wife fails to reach the Colonel, but the little girl manages to gain his presence, and her eloquent plea saves her father's life.

Love and War in Mexico.

The Human Vulture.

Wednesday, May 28th, 1913

"Love and War in Mexico"

As its title implies, a Mexican war drama of more than usual interest. Two reels, produced by LUBIN.

A young American, a civil engineer, makes the fatal mistake of marrying the daughter of a Mexican farmer. They quarrel and he strikes her, leaving her for dead. Years later, he does penance for his crime, by giving his life for his son, who has been captured as a spy.

Friday, May 30th, 1913

"The Human Vulture"

An absorbing and intensely dramatic story dealing with the destiny of a criminal who is prevented time and time again from committing a crime by entirely unexpected, but perfect plausible circumstances.

A production in two reels, faultlessly staged by the PATHE directors. A splendid cast portrays the various characters in unusually good style.

"IT'S THE LITTLE THINGS THAT COUNT"

IN EVERY office of the General Film Company is a department of inspectors whose principal duty it is to keep our reels in exhibitive condition. Every film shown by a theatre is carefully inspected when it comes back for exchange. Hastily-made patches are repaired and bad spots of any description are eliminated. In short, the function of this department is to reduce to a minimum the possibility of a film breaking in the middle of your show, just when your audience is all keyed up. It is easy to see that this inspection is of great benefit to all exhibitors, particularly those who are using the older ages of service.

Facts and Comments

ADVOCATES of official political censor boards for pictures will find food for thought in the attitude of the exhibitors of the District of Columbia and the State of Minnesota toward that subject. At a meeting held in Washington, D. C., the other day the District League adopted resolutions indorsing the work of the National Board of Censorship and agreeing to exhibit in their theaters only such pictures as bear the stamp of approval placed on them by the board. Up in Minnesota the exhibitors are congratulating themselves that they were successful in defeating a state censorship measure introduced in the legislature of their state along with other proposed legislation for the regulation of pictures and picture theaters. To this information the president of the Minnesota League adds that the Minnesota lawmakers took a very favorable view of the work of the National Board and were inclined to the belief that it was sufficient for the needs of the public for censorship. Learning this friendly feeling to the National Board the exhibitors have pledged themselves to make the rulings of the National Board effective in that state.

This is the most hopeful word that has come to us in all the season's controversy over the censorship question. All that is needed is that the several state branches of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League shall back up the work of the National Board to give the public the kind of censorship it wants, and all that the business requires. With the Exhibitors' League lined up strongly behind the National Board its rulings would have greater force and would command the increased respect of both the public and the purveyors of pictures. No greater authority is required than the resolution of the exhibitors of the land to insist that all pictures to be shown in their houses must first have obtained the approval of the Board of Censorship as now constituted. There is no demand for political supervision; no necessity for the distribution of political pap to insure clean picture shows.

KEEP THE PICTURES OUT OF POLITICS!

IT has been discovered that Mayor Gaynor's efforts to secure proper regulation of the public taxicab service for New York City have been balked by the distribution of graft to certain members of the Board of Aldermen, who were not required to pay for their taxi service. Wish someone would discover what peculiar form of graft is preventing Mayor Gaynor's recommendations for the proper regulation of picture theaters in Greater New York from becoming a law. Commenting upon the situation Mayor Gaynor is reported to have exclaimed: "What good is the Board of Aldermen? Why, I can't get them to pass a Christian ordinance to regulate moving picture houses." It is to be hoped that some investigator will be able to locate the Senegambian in the woodpile before long.

MOST encouraging to the advocates of the motion picture for educational purposes is the word that the American Philosophical Society has found a place for pictures in its scheme of things. On another page is told the story of a meeting at the historic home of the society in Philadelphia recently when scientific motion pictures were shown to an audience which crowded the hall and was composed of the most learned. The representative of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, whose presence at this notable gathering was invited, draws some inferences and points to some conclusions which should direct the attention of American picture makers to the insistent demands of educators for suitable subjects and convenient service. Everywhere educators are asking the question: What pictures are available and where can we get them? Thus far the manufacturers have been too busy catering to the demand for the amusing to study the demand for the instructive. Possibly, as is hinted, it will become necessary for those interested to provide means for the manufacture of such educational subjects as are needed, but it does seem that much valuable time might be saved if the existing manufacturers would lend some of their experience for the development of the new field.

UP in Vermont the State Board of Health has found a way to use motion pictures to advantage in the fight against "the white plague." As noted elsewhere the board has purchased a picture machine and a portable lighting plant with which it visits even the smallest towns where such pictures as "The Awakening of John Bond" and "The Man Who Learned" with their forceful lessons regarding the prevention of tuberculosis and the protection of the milk supply are being shown to people who seldom see pictures. In this work the Vermont Board of Health is surely a pioneer, for no similar undertaking has been reported.

Americans Win on Quality

The "Projection Room" a Characteristic British Institution—The Work of "Viewers"—Value of Frank Criticism.

By W. Stephen Bush

London, April 29th, 1913.

IF there are any changes impending in our market and we are about to pass through a period of either evolution or revolution it is quite probable that conditions will eventually adjust themselves to the British state of things. The American exhibitor and film buyer no less than the producers may therefore profit by taking a look at conditions here. In the early days of the industry in our own country the buyer was the dominant figure, but when leasing succeeded buying and organization took the place of competition, the buyer took a very modest seat away up in the gallery.

Here in England the buyer and exhibitor occupy the private boxes. The comparison is not inept, for the study of the comforts and conveniences of the projection rooms in London tells the story of the buyer's power. The producers and the importing agents vie with each other in providing attractive projection rooms. There are few moving picture theaters in New York City that in point of comfort, elegance and in the matter of projection can be compared to the London projection rooms of even the smaller American agencies. Take for example such projection rooms as Urban's, the M. P. Sales Co. and Essanay's. There's music, there are luxurious chairs with facilities to make notes and experts only are permitted to be in the operating rooms. By the way, the operating chambers yield nothing in thoroughness and equipment to those in the very best theaters. Then there are refreshments for the buyer and exhibitor and "viewer." If an intending buyer for instance comes to the M. P. Sales Agency he is bound to forget any possible "grouch" he may have acquired in the daily toil and struggle. An air of quiet contentment and of unboastful efficiency surrounds him once he enters the building. If he is a man in a hurry he is accommodated accordingly and if he wants to take his time he is just as welcome. The refreshments by the way are substantial and there is a variety to suit most tastes. Nor does the buyer or exhibitor have to wait. Performances are practically continuous for the current output of each agency and there are reserve projection rooms, where releases of older date are shown to those who ask for them.

I have mentioned B. Nichols' agency, the M. P. S. Co., as a leading example, but the conditions are similar everywhere. The "viewers" or "selectors" of film are important factors here. Every big exhibitor and renter has his "viewers." In plain English these men are film critics of experience and judgment. Their system of judging a film has great merit, they grade each product on civil service principles. Out-of-town renters and buyers have a corps of "viewers" in London and are largely guided by their reports in the selection and purchase of films.

Room for a little thought here: What of the critical reviews of our esteemed British contemporaries, in most respects so ably and conscientiously managed and conducted? I have touched the question and I am told that the producer and his agent are dreadfully "touchy." They yearn for criticism, they cry insistently for honest, even if adverse criticism, but it is general criticism they want or criticism of the rival product, but when the criticism touches them directly they dance about like a man who has just left the dentist's chair after a particularly painful operation. At least a score of renters and buyers here have told me how eagerly they wait for The Moving Picture World every week because they know its reviews are candid and far removed from the "puff" variety of article. There are no "viewers and selectors" in our own country simply because the buyer and exhibitor has the free benefit of the services of a large and capable body of "viewers" on the staff of The Moving Picture World. In England and on the continent the advertiser thinks he is entitled to a "complimentary write-up" as a matter of law and wholly regardless of the true merits of his film.

I paid a visit both to the Bioscope and the Kinematograph, and in both offices I found men of decided ability with a large outlook on the film world and inspired by the highest ideals. Both papers are a credit to the industry the world over. All the editors thoroughly believe in the future of Kinematography and all encourage the educational picture. They realize how far in the rear the British manufacturer is and I believe they are anxious to bring about better conditions. What the British manufacturer needs just now is the plain, blunt truth about his work. It is bad. With golden opportunities all about him he keeps on turning out poor stuff. After all, we have no cause to worry. Some day in the not distant future these golden opportunities will bear a golden harvest and Americans are likely to gather in the sheaves. This talk about poor light in England is far more of an excuse than a justification for inferior work. Good British films, dealing with big British subjects of either history or literature and made on British soil, whether by Englishmen or Americans, will be among the best possible film investments of the immediate future.

Of course a film man's visit to London would be incomplete without "looking up" Frank Brockliss, agent for Imp, Rex and Solax. Brockliss is doing well with the Solax films and assures me that his other brands are "coming up." He has a strong Yankee touch about him and is constantly "on the go." His only regret is the small size of Europe which he knows "like a book." His agencies are like a network of railways in Europe, where the name of Brockliss is one to conjure with. He is a thorough believer in the American-made film.

It would be interesting to see a statement of the profits made by American producers and their agents in this market. The British market distributes for the continent. On the continent the American picture is not a whit less popular than in Great Britain. The statement would be especially interesting in view of the fact that all this enormous amount of money was made under trade conditions radically different from our own. I do not believe that there is any American agent here who would want to change conditions. The open market has developed a high class of exhibitors here with plenty of initiative and enterprise. Splendid theaters are everywhere and next to no vaudeville, while the producer and his agent have been doing equally well. Of course there is no millennium. It is said that some of the bigger agents want to eliminate the renter and do business directly with the exhibitor. One prominent producer, indeed, has adopted this policy, but he is having an up-hill fight. He may eventually win, although few persons can believe it, but even a victory would be very costly indeed. There is some dissatisfaction, too, with the Board of Censors. The principle of the thing, i. e., self-imposed censorship, is concurred in by all, but some believe that the charges of the office are too high, while a great number would like to know the identity of the four or five assistants who go about their work so mysteriously, masked as it were like the executioners of medieval times. On the whole, however, conditions here are highly satisfactory and quality wins every time. Quality commands fancy prices and it must be added that the British buyer and "viewer" know-quality when they see it.

The causes of the popularity of the American-made film deserve careful consideration. Some kinds of pictures are more popular than others, but there is an excellent market for all of them. I have studied to some purpose, I hope, the character and conduct of the average British audience and an analysis of their tastes and predilections may be of some possible benefit to some of our native producers. One or two of the bigger agents are sending critical opinions and suggestions to their producers and the latter have greatly profited thereby.

BRITISH NOTES.

By Our Own Correspondent.

A collective exhibit has now been organized by leading British firms for the forthcoming International Exposition at Ghent, Belgium. This will be displayed in the British section. American manufacturers partaking in the Exposition are, I am given to understand, to be accommodated in an equally representative American section.

"When and where were the first moving pictures shown to the public by means of the kinematograph?" Even in this age of advanced commercialism these little historical reflections on the industry can scarcely fail to be of some interest. Mr. Freise-Greene is generally credited as being the inventor, and there is no doubt that the perfection of the machine owed much to his experiments. But the actual inventor of motion pictures was one Edward Muybridge, of Kingston-on-Thames, who made his first animated picture in 1872. This statement is made by a London scientist, and is endorsed by Messrs. Gaumont, while further evidence of its authenticity could be furnished by the records of the Patent Office, which show that two deposits were made on "chronophotograph" apparatus (the name by which moving pictures were first known), in April, 1889. The first public exhibition of moving pictures, however, was given by Mr. Robert Paul and Sir Augustus Harris in 1896 in Olympia, the building where the recent trade exhibition was held. The claims of Olympia on the industry are now doubly interesting.

Dr. Len G. Broughton, one of the leading luminaries in American theology and who took up a pastorate here last year, has apparently some novel, if not really feasible ideas. His latest crusade consists of an attempt to close the Sunday theaters, to the realization of which he is trying to induce other denominations to co-operate with him. "I do not object to the kinema, or even the Sunday kinema," says Dr. Broughton, "if it is conducted on proper lines. What I am against is the stuffy atmosphere of many of these places, which does not benefit the worker. I also object to Sunday entertainment run for profit." Dr. Broughton's Utopian ideal is free shows in the open air in the London parks, provided for by the municipal authorities. Unfortunately for Dr. Broughton, the authorities do not seem to see the suggestion in the same light, with the rates of London as they are at present.

A practice of film dealers which sooner or later must be officially condemned is that of supplying small strips of positive film to shopkeepers to retail out to children for the modest return of a penny or a halfpenny, according to the length supplied. Only his week my attention has been drawn to the action of a firm of well-known film dealers in the north, who are supplying disused junk, put up in packets, to shopkeepers. Even a small quantity of celluloid, when alight, is sufficient to cause serious consequences amongst children, and were these brought to the notice of magistrates, they would obviously infer that the films had been obtained from a picture theater.

The religious section of the recent Kinematograph Conference, comprising many leading clerics, has formed itself into a committee which will meet the trade shortly and discuss the various aspects of their allied interests.

J. B. SUTCLIFFE.

The Triangle of Filmdom

By Leslie J. Wilson.

WHERE there is smoke, science has taught us that there shall we find fire. Film manufacturers have long sat in near-idleness and watched smoke arise, but in their hurry to garner the waiting dollars and nickels they overlooked their chance to discover the fire which now faces them in the shape of a triangle, namely: politics, censorship, and high salaries for state censors.

Slowly but surely have the politicians been closing in on the film makers and film exchanges with their cry of "Make the motion picture business clean." The slogan has sounded attractive to the ordinary citizen, and he, too, in many cases has joined the chase and echoed the cry of the politician.

From the politician's point of view, motion picture censorship will cost the public nothing. The admission price of five cents charged by the exhibitors will hardly ever be raised, as the price has had much to do with making motion pictures popular. Therefore the theater-goer or the voter is satisfied when the politician declares censorship will cost the state nothing, but that the charges will revert to the manufacturer or film exchanges.

In several states bills have been offered, carrying fancy salaries for censors, or rather a censorship board who would have the say when it came to film service. Several of these bills have already been defeated, and several others are hiding away from the axe sharpened by film exchange men and the exhibitors.

In Ohio a state censorship bill has been offered by those who favor state censorship. Cleveland has just passed through a three months' stage of censorship, during which time an attorney dance-hall inspector and his assistant viewed films as legal representatives of the mayor, but paid by the film exchanges.

During the censors' tenure of office they had but little recourse to the shears, and their report was striking for the small amount of film ordered cut out. In fact their work was a most telling argument against city or state censorship.

However, Ohio is in for state censorship, if all is to be believed which comes from political camps. It is proposed to have a board of three or four censors, costing about $12,000 yearly (which the film exchanges would pay), who would pass upon all films before their release.

A long newspaper experience would lead me to say the censorship party's slogan should be, "Make the motion picture business pay," rather than "Make the motion picture business clean."

To the politician figures always look good. Connected with film censorship they look extremely well. Just suppose censorship is established in forty states of the union. The cost will easily average 10,000 yearly per state. According to all rules of arithmetic, forty times 10,000 silver dollars reaches an amount something like $400,000, or nearly a half million dollars for the politician elevated to the job of film censor.

I could almost favor state censorship myself, but the proposed jobs in Ohio already have twenty candidates in waiting.

There is to my mind no need for municipal or state censorship. An attempt to foist it upon the public and film men savors of the "spoils" system. The National Board of Censorship has in the past done its work well, and public opinion quickly puts the lax exhibitor out of business should his films get below par.

The motion picture business is fast growing out of the amusement stage. Every day it is turning into the industrial, historical, and educational channel. The comedies and film dramas are but an adjunct for the moment's entertainment, the real features being instructive and liked by patrons. Day in and day out do I receive telephone calls, postcards and letters from bankers, brokers, professional men, and the like, asking where such and such a film can be seen. The standard of intelligence of the motion picture show patron has been wonderfully raised during the past five years—but the standard of the politician seeking a job has ever remained on the same level from whence it had its source.

Public opinion has in the past year (1912) become the greatest censorship force the motion picture world has ever known. The triangle and its efforts are puny beside public opinion.

Presidents, kings, actors of renown, and what not, figure in the film of to-day. Millions of dollars are invested in the management and production of film. No event of consequence can take place without the cameraman is on the job. Flood, fire, or warfare form a basis for his activities. The newspaper records the events transpiring to-day, and to-morrow along comes the "movie" man with his pictures of the same event.

Classes are taught natural history by the use of botanical pictures; physicians are studying diseases and insanity with the aid of films; the explorer penetrates a foreign land, only to return with real, active scenes of the regions entered, and churches throw biblical stories on the screen as the Sabbath school teacher instructs his class.

Are the acts on the Keith circuit censored in each state? Are those of Sullivan and Considine? Are those of any other playhouse censored? No. Public opinion is all the censorship needed to keep the owners of circuit or theater from booking unworthy acts. Therefore we might well let public opinion do its own censoring when it comes to the film drama.

Or, if we must have film censorship, let the same rulings advocated by the film censors be applied to the legitimate theatrical business. If we did, many theaters would be dark, and many "stars" would not shine to-night.

The film business is a goose—the same bird that lays the golden eggs. If the politicians will leave well enough alone, I believe the manufacturer and the film exchanges can be trusted not to kill the goose that lays their golden eggs, by foisting unworthy films upon the theater patrons.

Yet I fear the goose will get some of its tail feathers plucked if the manufacturer, exchanges, and exhibitors do not do their utmost to down impending legislation.

The eleventh commandment of the film business should be:

"Feed not the hungry politician."

Changes at Lubinville

Hereafter Script Department is to Take Its Proper Place in the Scheme of Things—Four Noted Star Writers.

SIEGMUND LUBIN has been making important changes in production matters at his great plant in Philadelphia and stands in advance of most manufacturers of photoplays in that he leads the new movement toward assigning the Script Department to its proper place in the production scheme. For several years the Edison company has followed the system of having a manager of production to direct the efforts of the producers, and at the Vitagraph either Mr. Blackton or Mr. Smith has directed the selection and reconstruction of scripts, but in most studios a more or less chaotic condition has existed. In some studios the directors have produced their own scripts without consultation with any responsible head or have selected scripts from those sent in without reference to the Script Department. Mr. Lubin, through his son-in-law and General Manager, Ira M. Lowery, has decided to reorganize the production methods on more modern lines, and hereafter the Script Department and the directors will collaborate on all productions instead of following the haphazard methods that have obtained.

The Manuscript Department at the Lubin plant is now a double organization. The existing script room will be maintained for the purpose of handling the incoming scripts, as has always been done, but a new section has been established to handle those scripts accepted and put them in perfect technical shape before they are handed to the director for production, permitting the latter to give his full attention to production without requiring him to handle the editorial and revision work that he has hitherto performed, this work now being done by the trained staff writers whose literary qualifications and technical training in combination better fit them for the work. In future Lubin scripts will be given the director in such form that he has only to follow the script in order to get a properly proportioned production.

Lawrence S. McCloskey and Edwin Barbour, who have been with the company for some time, now have the assistance of George Terwilliger and Emmett Campbell Hall. Mr. McCloskey will remain in editorial charge of both departments. He is a former newspaper man and has been with the Lubin company nearly three years. He has written most of the recent Arthur Johnson plays and many of the "Pete" comedies, as well as contributing to the other directors. Some of the best of the recent Lubin productions have been written by him and produced from the script without alteration. Edwin Barbour has also been with the company for some time as assistant to Mr. McCloskey. He is a veteran dramatist and the author of a score of melodramatic successes when melodrama was successful, one of his best known works being "The White Squadron." He is thoroughly well versed in dramatic literature and can "spot" the adaptation of a standard play as far as he can see the type.

George W. Terwilliger is a former Dramatic Mirror man and a script writer of years' standing. He was editor for the Reliance company for a long time and wrote many notable productions for them. Since last November he has been doing most of his work for the Lubin company. Emmett Campbell Hall was one of the earliest of the Lubin contributors, but he has written many notable successes for the Biograph and Selig companies. Among the former may be mentioned "The House with the Closed Shutters," "His Trust" and "His Trust Fulfilled." He is the only one of the four who has not had constant studio experience, but he has barely escaped being photoplay editor for at least three companies, only his disinclination for moving from his home near Washington preventing him from accepting the offers made. He has already removed to Philadelphia and plans to make his home in the Fairmount Park district.

In the new scheme of affairs, these experts will prepare perfect working scripts of every story accepted. These will be cast and the script and cast presented to Mr. Lowery for approval. This gained, the script and cast will be given a director who will make the production without departing from the lines laid down, though any suggestions from the director will be welcomed by the Script Department.

The scheme of casting the plays to fit the story instead of buying stories to fit each director's cast will do away with the special company system, making for variety of production and permitting a much wider scope of plays to be selected than where a script must be made to fit particular leads. There will be but a single big company instead of small sections, and there will be greater variety not only in the stories but in the acting.

It is announced that the retention of a staff of expert writers will not result in closing the market to the outside writer. To the contrary, emphasis is laid upon the fact that there will be a better market than ever for the really good story and that prices will be commensurate with the merit of the story. But it will be well to note that only the best is wanted. The mediocre will stand no chance—it never did, for that matter—under the McCloskey editorship.

Mr. Lubin's action is notable, but he has only anticipated the others by a few months, at best. It was inevitable that to get the best in production the editors should edit and the producers produce, neither assuming the functions of the other department.

AMERICAN HAS TWO HEADLINE STORIES FOR WEEK OF MAY 26.

The week of May 26th will see the release of two splendid stories by famous authors now writing for the American Film Manufacturing Company. The Monday release is "Ashes of Three," by Stewart Edward White, a two-reel subject. The Saturday release is a delightful newspaper story by Richard Washburn Child. Thus theaters and exchanges using "Flying A" stories are assured an unusually good week.

"Mercy Merrick."

An Edison Photodrama from "The New Magdalene."

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

WILKIE COLLINS had penetrated the profoundest depths of the human heart or was gifted with a spirit of prophecy when he wrote the novel from which the photoplay was taken. The situation is one of the most interesting ever devised by a maker of plots, but its merit lies in what has been long slumbering, wholly unexpressed, in the hearts of sympathetic natures, recognition of the superiority of individual morality over that of society. It is a subject so deep, so pregnant with meaning, that it can be handled in a thousand ways without losing interest, gaining in significance rather than losing by repetition.

Mercy Merrick has in her the vital things that make an individual of high importance to society, but they are unrecognized by society because she lacks opportunity. Chance enables her to exchange her lowly position for that of a woman who has inherited a high one, and she makes swift use of it. She proves conclusively that character-building is as important as the inheritance of capacity. She rises superior to a social status that the woman she impersonates could barely maintain. The story presents a fascinating sociological problem and solves it with deep sympathy.

Miss Fuller in the title role grasps the essentials that make her part interesting to an audience. The novelist and the dramatist is forced to select and utilize the exceptional traits of a character to make it visible, swiftly sketch what nature takes plenty of time to portray—acute moments, fleeting thoughts, vital signs of character, so that those who run may read and understand. The intelligent young actress visualizes the essentials with a rare combination of force and delicacy. What her expressive eyes do not telegraph, she manages to express by a hundred little arts she has learned in hard experience. It is not an easy matter to portray character in the photoplay. Stand before the mirror and attempt to portray what you believe to be your own if you would realize how inadequate are the ordinary means at the disposal of an individual. To isolate a character from those with which it is compared and contrasted is enormously difficult besides being what might be called a transplanted art, conveyed by dramatist to actor.

Mary Fuller's impersonation of Mercy Merrick is such an exquisite interpretation that the photoplay itself would have been four times as strong if it had been twice as long. It it a pity that such a realistic delineation was narrowed down to the limitations of one reel. Two reels would have enabled the accomplished young artiste to make the impression of her own personality as revealed in the character still more intense. There was enough material in the novel to have extended this photoplay over greater space with no loss of tension and decided gain in other dramatic values. Brevity is about the only fault I can find in it. It is so good that one wants more.

DIPLOMATIC CORPS ENTERTAINED BY T. M. EASTWOOD.

A short while ago, T. M. Eastwood, manager of the Dixie Amusement Company, Washington, D. C., sent out invitations to members of the Diplomatic Corps to visit the Dixie Theater and see themselves in moving pictures taken during the Inaugural ceremonies. A special program was presented, including Pathe's Inaugural Supplement, together with a fine musical accompaniment. Their Excellencies thoroughly enjoyed themselves and a few days after the entertainment Mr. Eastwood received letters of thanks and praise from the Legation. Among those present were the Italian Ambassador, the Russian Ambassador, the Costa Rican, the Venezuelian, the Nicaraguan, the Cuban, the Chilian, the Gautemalian and Peruvian ministers with their wives, attaches and Charges d'Affaires of the Legations.

"A Regiment of Two"

Two-Reel Vitagraph Farce-Comedy.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THIS amusing pastel is really a regiment of nine. Nearly every one of the principals becomes by force of circumstances a comedian or a comedienne, consciously or unconsciously, willingly or unwillingly, before the two reels reach a definite conclusion, and some of them will be surprised at themselves when they come to see the play in a theater. There is such an abundance of comedy opportunity that a laugh trots all the way round and back again.

Scene from "A Regiment of Two" (Vitagraph).

The honors are supposed to go to Sidney Drew, brother of the much adored John, and first of the "legits" to enter vaudeville, who impersonates in this particular instance a character for which nature seems to have qualified him in advance, that of a sporty old husband who gets his second wind at fifty and manifests a "Silk-Hat-Harry" tendency to go gunning for squabs and wrens. This incarnation of a ranging-sex-tendency-to-take-a-night-off hears of a place where the Tango is on and finds a willing confederate in his son-in-law as represented by Harry Morey. The antics of these two constitute the main line of interest in the story, but the limelight is not all theirs.

Scene from "A Regiment of Two" (Vitagraph).

In order to deceive their wives, fashioned respectively by Rose Tapley and Anna Stewart, they pretend that they have joined the 13th Regiment and furnish drills at the armory as an excuse for absence from home. The regiment, however, is suddenly called upon to suppress an outbreak at Panama and they are compelled to live their lie out to the end. They procure uniforms from a dealer in the main attraction of a costume play and tearfully part from their families only to sneak away on a fishing orgie after arranging to have letters forwarded from the front, describing their deeds of heroism.

This is an old farce motive, but every possible drop of amusement is wrung from it by the actors, while another well-worn plot is interwoven, the eternal ting-a-ling, Edith Story and E. K. Lincoln forming the right angle, with Ralph Ince as the hypotenuse. Edith, as the marriageable daughter of the old buck who has gone off fishing under pretense of departing with the 13th Regiment, enters a crying match with Miss Tapley and Miss Stewart on the occasion of her father's leave-taking, and she wins. The charming former Melies star lets out a "how-wow" that might have induced the author of the farce-comedy to change the name of his piece if he had seen her to "When Edith Wept," though it can be seen with one eye shut that neither of the other ladies is troubled with tonsilitis.

When Ralph Ince gets into action—he is the ill-starred suitor in this photoplay, whatever his status in real life—the limelight turns pale with envy. James Young, authority on makeup, will turn green with envy if he happens to see this play somewhere on his trip around the world. Ince, who was Lincoln in the immortal Gettysburg photodrama, has accomplished another transformation of note, and he astonishes himself as a comedian. His struggle with the water pipe that has burst and is overflowing the house in the first reel will keep every moving picture audience fortunate enough to see it in a roar of laughter. His characterization in its delicious solemnity is far above that ordinarily seen in farce-comedy of any kind.

It takes some acting to carry a photoplay of this kind through two reels, but it looks to me like a success.

"THE DREAD OF DOOM" (Itala).

"THE DREAD OF DOOM" is a three-part offering and deals with a subject not without great interest; but hardly suited to the average audience which comes to an exhibition to be amused and not primarily to be instructed. As a picture of acting it ranks extremely high. Senor Zacconi, the famous Italian actor, plays the lead, a doctor dying of consumption who, in his last moments, takes a dose of strychnine. Now, the strychnine death is convulsive and painful and, because of the muscular contractions and peculiar spasms that it sets up, it gives a chance to a great actor to show things that are real enough but not beautiful. Senor Zacconi shows them to us vividly.

The story was fabricated to give a setting to this strychnine death; it is fair; but, finely acted, staged and all that, lacks real distinction. The doctor's ailment comes, as is shown, from the bite of a consumptive monkey. The doctor had known enough to disinfect the wound, but this didn't avail to save him from the germ. It happens that he is engaged to a girl whose brother is engaged to his sister and he fears, when he knows that the disease has clutched him, that his prospective mother-in-law will think it hereditary in his family and forbid his sister's marriage to her son. For this reason, he hides that they may not know the real trouble. As soon as the other wedding is consummated he, being in the last stages, takes the poison and then we have the terrible death scenes. They are truly done with wonderful power, but high as they must rank as art, they are not of the best as entertainment.

Scene from "The Dread of Doom" (Itala).

The photography and the sets are full of interest and merit. The picture is full of pretty scenes showing home life among Italian people of social prominence and wealth. There is much that is good also in small incidents naturally and humanly acted.

"Mary's Romance" (Crystal)

OFTTIMES people have been heard to remark that "There is nothing new under the sun," but when an old theme is taken as the subject for a film story and the action so well laid, and the scenes so well portrayed that the entire plot seems different by the clever work of the players and the subtle mind of the director, it seems that the old adage does not seem to hold good.

The idea of a pretty country miss becoming infatuated with a smooth, oily city chap, has been done time and time again, but it can be truthfully said that never before has a story been welded together and made so full of heart throbs and interest as the forthcoming Crystal release, "Mary's Romance."

Scene from "Mary's Romance" (Crystal).

Mary is a pretty country miss. She is full of romance, having read numerous books of that type. John, the farm hand, gains Mary's promise to marry him, he having been her constant companion for years. Mary is out one day, enjoying the company of a very soulful novel when Donald Belmar, who is on a hunting trip, comes across her. He engages her in conversation and she is fascinated by his smooth manner and clever tongue. She makes an appointment to meet him the next day, and is happy in the thought that at last there is a romance in her life. She meets Belmar the next day and a small boy who is watching them tells John.

Scene from "Mary's Romance" (Crystal).

John hurries to the trysting place and comes upon them just as Belmar is crushing the willing Mary to his heart. John thrashes the intruder and compels Mary to go home. This she does, but refuses to talk to John, she imagining that John has destroyed the few happy moments of her life. Mary continues to be angry for a few days, when later Mary receives a note from the city. It is from Belmar and he writes that his few days in the country were the happiest in his life, because he was with her, and inviting the innocent girl to visit him in the city.

Mary decides to accept his invitation and late at night, she leaves her home and journeys to town. The next day she visits the Belmar abode and is received by Belmar's wife. Mary confronts her deceiver and is astounded to learn that he is really married and that all his protestations of love were sham and that she was but a plaything for him. She staggers blindly from the house and wanders homeward. Upon her return her father orders her from the house, her actions in leaving home spelling disgrace to the honest farmer and his wife.

Mary determines to end her life and journeys to the river shore seeking a watery grave. A youngster sees the pathetic scene between father and daughter and runs off and informs John. He hurries to the home and it requires all his will to restrain him from a wild desire to choke her father to death. He hurries to the river and is just in time to prevent the poor girl from throwing herself in. He comforts her and assures her that he has forgiven her and Mary awakens to the depths of her own as well as to John's love and realizes that life's real romance had indeed started for her. The happy couple hasten to the minister and are married. Returning home, they are welcomed back to the fold.

The story is so well done, the scenes so pretty, showing farm life in all its rural beauty, and the action so continuous, combined with matchless photography that this film is sure to please all classes and uphold the Crystal's well-known policy of "The Best At All Times."

Miss Pearl White is Mary and the entire thousand feet inspires one to the thought that any role in this young woman's hands is sure of proper interpretation. Mr. Chester Barnett is John, which insures a strong characterization.

AMERICAN USES FAMOUS ARLINGTON IN PICTURES.

The American forces at Santa Barbara were particularly lucky in obtaining the use of the beautiful Arlington Hotel for the making of a negative entitled "A Husband's Mistake." Owing to the wonderful lighting facilities of this beautiful hotel, some magnificent interiors were obtained. In fact, practically all the action concentrates in these delightful interiors. Lovers of pretty pictures will be charmed with the remarkable results obtained. Jack Kerrigan was never better than in his part of the husband. It is the first picture in which Miss Vivian Rich plays opposite Kerrigan since her promotion to the first company.

THE EDUCATIONAL PICTURE.

Memorial Day.

IN accordance with our promise of several weeks ago, we give below a list of pictures suitable for a special exhibition appropriate to Memorial Day. The list includes the releases for 1911 and 1912 and some of the releases for 1913. We should have been glad to have included the complete list for 1913, but the manufacturers are apparently averse to or indifferent about giving advance information and for suitable pictures released during this and last month those interested are referred to the pages of the World. The list does NOT include the five reel, States' rights "Battle of Gettysburg" of the New York Motion Picture Company, now being handled by the Mutual Film Corporation; nor does it include the long list of so-called "Civil War dramas" that have appeared during the past two years. The last named class has very little if any pretense to historical accuracy and any exhibitor who wishes can easily make his own selection from the back files of the World. It also seemed needless to put in the list of pictures dealing with the American Revolution as they are really more appropriate to Independence Day, but if one of this sort is desired we should advise one of Edison's series on the American Revolution, Rex's "Heroine of '76" (8:437; 484; sp. rev. 8:373), or Thanhouser's "For Washington" (8:436; 486), the last two released respectively 16 and 21 February, 1911.

HOW NATURAL HISTORY PICTURES ARE TAKEN.

Rev. W. H. Jackson.

During the last few months quite a large number of Natural History pictures have been reviewed on this page. To a large number of people the extraordinary details of a number of these subjects must have seemed very perplexing; it will be of interest to such to know something of the time and patience required, and also to know something of the methods used to procure these valuable living examples. The photographers of a series of pictures such as "Wild Birds in Their Haunts" have told us of the long hours of tedious secretiveness and patient silence it was necessary to undergo. In a recent issue of the London "Kinematograph Weekly" Mr. Frank Newman gives some interesting details of the methods he used for many of his natural history pictures.

Writing of the Wild Fox series, he says: "The first thing I find is the permanent home of the animal, then an observation chamber is built, and from it notes are made of its habits; the time of his walks in the morning or evening, and the kind of prey he brings home. A hiding-place must now be constructed which must not be in too striking a contrast to the surroundings, and must be in such a position that will secure best lighting results. With the fox I noticed that he brought home rabbits and fowls. I therefore decided rabbits would make the most interesting pictures. I procured some wild rabbits trapped alive, and a box made to contain them with a trap-door fitted with an electric release. This, with the rabbits, was placed inside an old rabbit-warren at 4:30 A. M., when the fox was away. He generally returned about an hour after daybreak, thus allowing plenty of time for the human scent to disappear, an essential factor in this kind of work.

"On the reappearance of the fox I immediately released the rabbits by my electrical connection; they, of course, came to the surface and began feeding. The fox spotted them and killed two. Thus I had the incident. Perhaps it is well to mention that success did not always attend the first attempt, as, of course, the animals did not work automatically.

"Some of my most successful pictures were taken from my 'cow.' This is, of course, a representation of a cow, constructed with cardboard, covered with red cork lino, with the entrance door at the back; this particular 'cow' is mounted on a middle leg, on which the structure turns at will from the inside. Several spy-holes are used, each fitted with a ruby glass shutter. Another successful device is the imitation trunk of a tree, from which I was able to take the nest and habits of a wasp within a distance of four feet.

"For some reptile and insect subjects I found it necessary to use my devices all the year round. It takes twelve months—sometimes longer—to complete a subject, because of the necessity of following the development from the egg, through the various stages to the full-grown life in its natural surroundings.

"Insect life, no matter how small, to be photographed successfully, requires the aid of a microscopic attachment, as many minute forms are invisible to the naked eye. For many pictures I have the run of an estate in Surrey, about one hundred acres in extent. I also keep a number of animals in captivity suitable for kinematography, my strangest combination being a Persian rat which adopted a wild rabbit when a day old, and which has now outgrown its foster-parent. I have also a lion cub brought up with a pet lamb. It is at times necessary to go out of England for special subjects. Last year I visited the Upper Nile and secured the life of the crocodile from the egg upwards, getting some excellent under-water pictures. Great patience is required here on account of the dull and wet days, when nothing can be accomplished." The knowledge which Mr. Newman here gives is very valuable, as, besides showing how the pictures are taken, it also gives truth and authenticity to these natural history pictures, so that the users of the films may be assured that they can safely be used for educational purposes.

EDUCATED INSECTS.

Reviews of natural history films would be incomplete if any which portrayed that which is of more than usual interest were omitted. From time to time men of great patience have been able to produce in the insect world what others have accomplished in the animal world; and trained specimens of special kinds have occasionally been brought to the attention of an appreciative public. A valuable addition to the films which are classed as educationals is one showing marvelous success in the education of beetles along various lines; such a film is here described by Mr. J. B. Sutcliffe, British correspondent of the Moving Picture World, with careful detail.

Training Beetles.

"Habit and not intelligence is the great secret of a successful animal actor," said Mr. Paul Bourgeois, the talented young Frenchman who has supplied numerous American film manufacturing concerns with the animal members of their stock companies, when asked how he trained his subjects. But does this apply to beetles and other insects who have recently invaded the picture theater via the screen (not the floor)? The training of animals for the photoplay cannot, after all, be much more than a glorified circus training which is easily conceivable by any one, but the preparation of the beetle is vastly different, for in the first place it is so minute, while psychologists would further say that in equal ratio to the physique of the beetle, is its intellect.

Beetle training therefore must be something like a game of patience, and so far as I know there is only one trainer in existence who attends solely to the beetle and his few companions. His name is Loyshki, a Russian. How he first came to be professionally introduced to the beetle would provide a better plot for a scenario than a simple treatise on his business. In 1881, Loyshki, then a young Russian student, was arrested for complicity in a Nihilist outrage. After some months' confinement he was acquitted and released, but not until he had tasted Russian prison life to the full. During the long weeks he was confined in his lonely cell, he made friends with the beetles which swarmed the building. To his surprise, they quickly learned to come at his call, to obey his voice, even to perform simple little tricks at his bidding, so when out of gaol he turned his attention to training these insects, experimenting with different kinds, and eventually choosing the large and exceedingly strong stag beetle as being the kind best adapted for his purpose. Thus Loyshki was a eugenist. He bred his beetles as poultry breeders breed chickens, or dog-fanciers dogs, carefully selecting the strains, sterilizing the unfit, pairing the most clever. The life of a beetle is short. This helped him greatly, and to-day after years of patient practice the beetles he is experimenting with represent the 453rd generation in the direct line of descent from the original ones he started to teach in 1881.

Respecting the actual training of the beetle Loyshki, with his assistant, now spent his time in instructing his insectile pupils in the diverse arts of play-acting, dancing, warfare, house-building, and love-making. Music takes a prominent part, for like human beings, beetles have their emotions. "Indeed," says their trainer referring to the effects of rag-time, "one of them danced so wildly and fiercely when he heard the strains of 'Everybody's Doing It' played on a flute, that he ultimately fell dead from exhaustion."

When he had effectually trained his beetles, M. Loyshki exhibited them up and down the country, but the advent of the moving picture opened up new possibilities. The trainer first carefully examined the various poses and movements of his beetles, then studied them at leisure and more closely. From this to filming a drama in which beetles should take the place of human beings as actors and actresses was but a step. Taking advantage of the stag beetle's natural pugnacity, Loyshki marshalled his troops in regiments like soldiers, dressed them in uniforms and marched them forth to battle against one another. The effect, as seen on the screen is most weird and wonderful. The rival beetle armies march and counter march in the most perfectly natural manner, with drums beating and banners flying. To further describe the film would be almost superfluous. Every American showman must be familiar with, "A Drama of the Middle Ages," enacted by beetles and in which the theatrical ability shown by many of the principals is really almost uncanny. They fence, fight, make love, and crave mercy with all the skill of human actors and the peculiar movements of their horns and the attitudes they adopt convey as clearly as human beings their thoughts and feelings. Fear, anger, craftiness, and courage, are all displayed by gestures which no one can mistake.

Although strictly insectile, Loyshki's efforts have not been solitarily confined to beetles and now, I understand, he is producing films in which mosquitoes, dragon-flies, and Daddy-Longlegs take part. A new film called "The Beetle's Deception," a love drama, is at the moment being exhibited in London. Beetle films take about a year to produce, the insects having to be constantly rehearsed and each single movement separately photographed. Incidentally, it was found that the grasshoppers were far harder to train than the beetles, the little fellow who takes so prominent a part in "The Deception" being the best choice of over 200 of his kind.

J. B. SUTCLIFFE.

Mr. Arthur Roberts, the comedian, is advocating the formation of a society for the collection and preservation of kinematograph records of dramatic art. "What would we not give," he asks, "for such records as David Garrick in 'Hamlet' or Henry Irving in 'Faust'?"

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

A CONFERENCE of all the stockholders of the Independent Exchange Co., will be held in the Hotel Sherman Monday, May 19. The opening session will be held at 2 P. M. Every exchange included in the Independent Exchange Co., will have one or more representatives.

It is understood that the main purpose of the meeting will be to examine and discuss a contract drawn up, and submitted, by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. I understand that definite action will be positively taken at this conference to make an equitable arrangement for weekly programs. The rights of exhibitors and exchange men as well as those of the manufacturers will be carefully kept in view during the conference, so that a satisfactory and equitable contract for all concerned can be made.

It is sincerely hoped that the difference between the Universal and the members of the Independent Exchange Co., will be settled at this meeting. There is no good reason why this cannot be done, as further bickering will only serve to injure the business in this especial field.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer Acquire McVicker's and the Colonial

McVicker's theater, known to thousands of patrons of the drama in Chicago and throughout the country, has been sold to the firm of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, known as the "jitney kings," owners of a string of moving picture houses and neighborhood theaters in the city. The deal is said to have involved an amount exceeding $500,000.

The Jones, Linick & Schaefer combination got title to the entire property, and it is rumored that it will be turned into a 10, 15 and 25 cent vaudeville, with Kinemacolor pictures. The deal was transacted through Litt & Dingwall, the agents representing the heirs to the McVicker estate.

McVicker's has had a historic career. It passed through five fires and was often remodeled. Of late it has been devoted chiefly to spectacular plays. Numerous efforts had been made in the past to purchase it. Several syndicates desired to buy it for use as a vaudeville theater. It was the only large theater in the Loop with $1 as its maximum price.

"Quo Vadis?" at present having a triumphant run at this house, will be permitted to fill out the term contracted for.

The Colonial Theater, originally named the Iroquois, on Randolph street, also passed to the control of this firm, the week of May 5. A lease for 10 years was given. The terms have not been made public. Negotiations were completed by the firm and Wm. B. Harris, president of the Metropolis Theater Co., of New York.

Vaudeville performances will begin Monday, May 26, at 10, 15 and 25 cents. The Colonial had been a $2 house up to the time of the transfer.

Moving Pictures Valuable in "Safety First" System.

"Safety first," as the system is employed in many of the large factories of the United States, was shown by moving pictures and explained to the labor commissioners and factory inspectors of the various states Wednesday, May 7, at their annual joint convention in the Hotel Sherman.

Ferdinand C. Schwedtman, general manager of the Racine-Sattley company of Springfield, Ill., and vice-president of the National Manufacturers' Association, said that more than $50,000 had been spent by his association in the last three years in spreading the "safety first" gospel.

He said that in all probability a museum to show the benefits of "safety first" appliances would be fitted up at Washington, D. C., soon. Three reels of motion pictures were presented at the session, showing how accidents occur in factories, how to prevent fires, and the education of the employees by the employer.

Fine Quarters for G. F. Co.'s Branch.

The General Film Company's branch office at 117 N. Dearborn street has been transferred to magnificent quarters in the City Hall Square Building, N. Clark street, near Randolph, where the entire fifth floor has been occupied by the office force. W. R. Scates, the manager, has been highly complimented on the arrangement of the various departments by C. W. Hejda, chief inspector of the bureau of fire prevention and public safety, of the Chicago fire department. Inspector Hejda pronounces the offices the best in the city for exchange purposes, and has recommended other exchange men in the city to take them as a model.

An excellent feature of the plans is that any department can be entered by a visitor, on business, without passing through another department. The arrangement has proved a great time saver for the office force, as they cannot now be distracted from their work by the needless entrance of customers.

"From the Manger to the Cross" at Saxe's Lyric.

S. L. Rothapfel, director of presentations of the Lyric Theater, Minneapolis, while here specially to see "Quo Vadis?" informed me that "From the Manger to the Cross" had created remarkable interest and aroused great enthusiasm among the picture lovers of Minnesota's metropolis. So impressive were the presentations during the first run of this production, requests poured in from all sides for its re-presentation after the lapse of a week. These requests were complied with, and overflowing houses again marked the appearance of the great biblical drama.

Mr. Rothapfel introduced a new rule for the government of his patrons during the presentations of this drama. He issued the following special notice, which appeared on all the programs: "During the De Luxe presentations, immediately upon commencing the performance, the doors will be closed and no one will be allowed to enter until the following performance. This is imperative for the success of the presentation, and it is to be hoped that our patrons will assist us in this effort."

Mr. Rothapfel was highly pleased at the way in which the audiences complied with this request, and many present congratulated him on the great benefits resulting therefrom, there being nothing to distract the attention of those present from the pictures and the accompanying music.

The presentations were given daily as follows: With pipe organ at 12:00, 1:15, 5:00 and 6:15. With pipe organ, concert orchestra and choir, 2:30, 3:45, 7:15, 8:30 and 9:45.

I have before me seven large sheets on which are pasted the notices given these presentations by the local press. These notices are both advance and critical, the advance work being of excellent character.

For the benefit of exhibitors who have not yet presented "From the Manger to the Cross," the following musical numbers were offered during the presentation:

Prelude - - - - -	Arranged by Julius K. Johnson
Adeste Fideles - - - - - - - -	Entire ensemble
Holy Night - - - - - - -	Miss Williams and choir
The Palms - - - - -	Mr. Kenyon, assisted by choir
Calvary - - - - - - - - -	Miss Brown and choir

Following is an extract from the criticism which appeared in the Minneapolis Tribune: "Manager Rothapfel, who is not infrequently called 'The Belasco of Moving Picture Presentations,' has outdone his own record in the production of the Kalem film 'From the Manger to the Cross,' at the local picture de luxe house this week. The notable film is given a reverent and deeply appreciative mounting by Mr. Rothapfel—a flower-strewn stage, choir boys, low lights and appropriate music securing atmosphere for 'the sweetest story that e'er was told.'

"Here is a new passion play for the moving picture public, as reverent as Oberammergau and more beautifully and accurately imagined. This film should not be missed. It marks the top notch of moving picturedom."

Chicago Film Brevities.

Mrs. William H. Bell, wife of William H. Bell, the well known manager of the Greater J. D. Williams Co., Sydney, Australia, is visiting relatives in this city, after an absence of over a year in the Antipodes. Mrs. Bell will remain in this country several weeks and will visit friends and relatives both in the east and the west.

I have just received a handsome watch fob from my old friend Bill Wright, of Kalem fame. The face represents the Kalem trade mark, in old Roman gold, with the firm name in the same color in the center, in blue enamel setting. The souvenir is quite artistic and nobby.

The Union Film Co., an Independent feature film concern, was launched in this city Friday, May 9, under the laws of the state of Illinois. It is said to have solid backing and is already operating in its offices in Chicago, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Indianapolis, Des Moines, Cleveland and Philadelphia. It is the intention to open offices in other important cities.

The regular meetings of Chicago Local No. 2, M. P. E. L. of America, will henceforth be held in Arcanum Hall, Masonic Temple, Schiller Hall, in the Schiller Building, having been given up. Suite 1422, in the Masonic Temple, has also been rented by the local organization for the benefit of its members. The members of the consecutive committee will take turns in keeping the suite open daily, so that members can call and discuss matters of importance at any time. The regular meetings of Local No. 2 will be held, as formerly, on the first and the third Monday of every month.

J. A. Maddox, manager of the Colonial Theater, Columbus, O., and president of the local exhibitors' league, put over a new one on his patrons last week. It appears that the Olentangy stock company, about to open their season at the Southern theater, in the Ohio city, were all taken in moving pictures by Mr. Maddox. The object of it was not seen until the following day, when every member of the company was introduced on the screen to the patrons of the Colonial. As it is the largest picture theater in Columbus and extremely well patronized, many theater goers had the pleasure of getting acquainted with the players before seeing them on their first appearance, on the local stage.

GEORGE NICHOLLS' NEW AUTO.

George O. Nicholls, of the Lubin Company, has a new automobile and he pessimistically says, "It's running fine—but they all do at first," which is a line of talk that would discourage any high grade car from trying to do its best.

It is getting now so that his private automobile is as essential to a director as a script or a leading lady. It is not his leading lady in the car, for Mr. Nicholls has Miss Ormi Hawley for a leading woman. You've heard of the man who felt like thirty cents, but here's a whole family that only looks like fifteen for the three passengers in the car are Mr. Nicholls, Mrs. Nicholls and George O. Nicholls, Jr. Add them up.

A Real Supply House

Picture Theater Equipment Company Has Built Up a Splendid Business and Is a Safe Place to Trade.

It has taken the motion picture supply business a long time to rise to a plane of commercial importance. Heretofore the selling of motion picture supplies has been carried on as a side line or adjunct to some other branch of the business. On this account it will be a matter of pride for exhibitors, and others in the trade, to point to a real moving picture store where anything pertaining to the mechanics of projection may be had, over a fine, clean counter. With all due respect to film exchanges that carry a line of supplies in a show case resembling a cigar stand, for the accommodation of their patrons, such a line of supplies is but a picayune business as compared with an establishment that has every appearance of a high class modern store, but which is stocked exclusively with every size of every kind of motion picture appliances and supplies, ready to fill any order on the instant.

We refer to the Picture Theater Equipment Company, of 21 East Fourteenth Street, New York. It is a moving picture emporium in every sense of the word, doing business as a legitimate mercantile house that prides itself upon its reputation for honest dealing and reliability. Its president and guiding spirit is Mr. H. T. Edwards, a man who is noted for his integrity and courtesy. His knowledge of the motion picture business is extensive and thorough. During our recent interview with him we expressed a desire to have a photograph of himself for publication with this review, but he cavailed with genuine modesty. Instead of a portrait he produced a copy of the United States Trade Reports, dated November 1, 1912, which contains an unsolicited report of his business. "This is something," said Mr. Edwards, "that money cannot buy. I am far more proud of it than I am of my portrait, and I'd much rather you would use it instead." The report is as follows:

> Lately we have been investigating the subject of supplies for motion picture theaters, so that we could name to interested proprietors of such establishments some concern or firm that is the best prepared to supply them with the highest grade supplies and furnishings of all kinds (excepting films) and at best prices.
> As the result of our research we find that the Picture Theater Equipment Company, office at 21 East Fourteenth Street, New York City, is highly recommended by prominent moving picture theater proprietors and managers in all parts of the country as being exceptionally well prepared to furnish everything used in such theaters excepting films, and at correct prices.
> We are thoroughly convinced that these supplies will answer all purposes admirably, and that their quality, value and merits will surprise and please all purchasers, as has been the case with hundreds of moving picture theater men who have bought their house equipment from this leading and enterprising company.
> The Picture Theater Equipment Company is well and widely known for its business tact and progressiveness, as well as sterling integrity, and its standing commercially is of the highest order. It conducts a large business, having a patronage that extends to all parts of the country, which is steadily increasing.
> Mr. H. T. Edwards, who is president of the above-named company, is well and widely known to the moving picture world, and his ability and progressiveness have been important factors to the great success attained by the company.

This is truly a remarkable establishment and Mr. Edwards is justified in taking the pride he does in it. It occupies a full store and it looks like a store. In the show cases are all conceivable kinds of machine parts for every machine that is used in projection. A fully equipped repair department is in charge of experts. Fully assembled machines of every standard make also stand upon the floor, ready for immediate delivery. One of the principal claims of this company is that it has what you want when you want it. It does not make a practice of selling out of a catalogue and making the customer wait until the article can be obtained from the manufacturer, as is so often done by many supply concerns; the goods are there. Another policy of this company is that it positively guarantees everything it sells. "If it isn't right," said Mr. Edwards, "we will make it right, and I don't care how strong you put it." That surely sounds like business and good business at that.

There are no spurious parts handled by this concern, nor does it carry any of the cheaper grades of anything. Only the best, is the rule, and this applies to machines, rheostats, economizers, motor generators, rectifiers, arc lamps, carbons, condensers, rewinders, slides, lenses, opera chairs, reels and cases, lobby frames, signs, dissolving stereopticons, screens, connectors, novelties, indirect light chandeliers, tickets and ticket venders, flaming arc carbons, film cleaners, spot-lights, and, in fact, everything for the theater except the film. The Picture Theater Equipment Company has recently taken over the Eastern distribution of the Motio-graph machines, selling wholesale and retail to points east of Pittsburgh. This concern is also a jobber and dealer in Power's, Simplex, Edison, Standard and other projecting machines.

Doings at Los Angeles

Selig Announces Plans for Largest Studio—Lubin Locates Permanently—Actor Murray Injured—Notes.

A MILLION DOLLAR motion picture studio and the greatest zoo in the world are provided for in plans which William N. Selig, head of the Selig Polyscope Co. made public this week. Within the last ten days Mr. Selig has been negotiating with local attorneys, real estate agents and landscape gardeners and has set the big project in motion. He has also decided to buy a home in Los Angeles and will live here at least four months of every year.

The zoo, already a large one, adjoins Eastlake park, which is to Los Angeles what Central Park is to New York. His holdings have been more than doubled by the purchase of tracts of land adjoining the Wild Animal Farm. These land purchases alone represent an outlay of approximately $200,000, and when he closes additional options which he has secured, his realty purchases will have reached the sum of half a million dollars. This includes the ground upon which the Edendale plant is located in another portion of the city.

Already animals which cost upwards of $50,000 are on hand at the Animal Farm and another shipment of animals costing $50,000 is en route from Hagenbeck and from Mr. Selig's traveling purchaser, who is now abroad. By August, 1914, there will be $200,000 worth of wild animals housed at the Animal Farm.

"My plans are fully laid for the greater studio here," Mr. Selig told the local newspapers, "but it will require time and much work to put my Eastlake grounds in the form I desire.

"Dr. A. McDonald, naturalist and scientist, is making a tour of the world gathering rare animals, tropical plants and vegetation peculiar to India, Japan, South America, Africa and Australia for the Animal Farm, in order to have the effect called for in our animal pictures.

"Already I have a large zoo, some tropical and jungle growth and a heavy investment in Los Angeles, but my new plans call for many times as much wild growth and a great many more animals.

"My Los Angeles studio will be increased by several more companies. In order to attend to the increase of business here I am arranging to purchase a home in Los Angeles and pass at least four months a year here."

The first shipment of the new animals is expected to arrive from Europe within a week and preparations are now being made for their accommodation. Landscape gardeners will begin work at the zoo within thirty days.

Permanent Lubin Studio.

The Lubin company is not only to maintain a permanent organization in Southern California, but new signs which appeared in front of the studio at 4550 Pasadena Avenue in this city a few days after the return of Producer Wilbert Melville from Philadelphia last week, indicated that the place is now headquarters of the company's Western branch. Mr. Melville, who is in full charge of the new branch, returned with a big campaign mapped out. It is said that another complete company is to be organized and that there will be a number of big and costly two-reel pictures made within the next six months. Military, Western and Mexican dramas will predominate among the subjects, although there will probably be several big pictures showing navel scenes. D. L. Davis, head cameraman from headquarters, came with Mr. Melville on his return and, it is said, will direct important improvements in the technical department. E. E. Blackwell, who has been cameraman with the company ever since its arrival in Los Angeles last December, has left. Ray Gallagher joined the organization this week to play juvenile parts, succeeding Carl Von Schiller.

Actor Murray Injured.

Charles Murray, formerly a member of the world-famous comedy team of Murray and Mack and now the star of the Biograph company's comedy section, was seriously injured this week when a keg of gunpowder exploded in his hands. Fortunately the powder was not tightly confined and consequently there was not much concussion when it caught fire, but he was badly burned about the hands, arms, chest and face. The flame nearly removed the cloth from his arms. The accident occurred while he was working in a burlesque of a melodrama under the direction of Dell Henderson. One of the scenes called for Murray to deposit a keg of gunpowder and light a fuse leading into it. Henderson's instructions were that the fuse was not to be lighted until the subsequent scene, but there was a misunderstanding, which resulted in a premature explosion. Murray is now in the hospital, but it is believed that he will be out in a month and that he will not suffer permanent injury. The Biograph company is now closing its season's work and will probably return east about June 1, although the exact date will depend upon the completion of a big Western picture which Director David N. Griffith now has in hand.

News Briefs.

This is written on the eve of the big First Annual Universal Picnic of all the employees of the Pacific Coast branch of the Universal company, which is to be held on the company's Oak Crest ranch, Sunday, May 11, beginning at 10 o'clock in the morning and continuing until dark. Preparations have been made to entertain about 1,500 men and women. There will be such a feed as never was served at a picnic before, and afterwards there will be "games and sports," but not the usual "old fashioned" ones. The entire program is made up of novelties. There will be a directors' race, in which each of the fifteen directors will push his leading lady in a wheelbarrow covering a distance of 100 yards. Another directors' contest will involve each man drawing a scene at random from a bag and then setting up and finishing his scene on the spot. The man who makes the best scene in the shortest time will get the prize. Afterward the fifteen scenes when properly joined will make a complete reel which will probably be released as a curiosity to amuse the Universal patrons. Another interesting contest will be a battle with bombs between the Hollywood and Oak Crest sections of the company.

Carl Van Schiller, a well-known motion picture actor, and Miss Ethel Brayton, an ingenue who has worked with several of the local companies, surprised all their friends and acquaintances, including their respective and respected parents by eloping to a nearby town one day last week and having a wedding ceremony performed when there was no camera working.

Without any announcement of any kind concerning his plans and purposes, J. A. Crosby, formerly head of the technical department of the Selig Polyscope Co., at Chicago, has opened a big and fully equipped studio in the downtown district. Before more than a dozen or so of persons knew that he had a project on foot he was making his first picture. Frank E. Woods, formerly a Kinemacolor director and later director of the Imp company at the Hollywood Universal studios, is making the pictures, but will remain with the organization only until such time as regular routine is established. In fact Woods had left the Imp for the purpose of returning to New York City and was persuaded by Crosby to remain after he had made all preparations to leave.

P. A. Horne, general manager of the Seltagraph Company, which was organized to feature the most conspicuous, if not the most noted Biograph star, went to Bakersfield last week as official photographer of the Bakersfield automobile road races. Mr. Horne is the son of "Billy" Horne, proprietor of "Horne's World Famous Spring Street Palace Amusement Emporium" otherwise a picture theater, whose rotund features and expansive smile just nicely fill up the screen in those Biograph scenes which show crowds and "audiences."

CLEVELAND BUILDS BIGGER THAN BEFORE.

W. S. Cleveland, who has just re-entered the vaudeville agency field after a two years, absence, announces that his first week's endeavors have been even more fruitful than he had hooed for. Cleveland announces that he has re-organized the Cleveland circuit and has assumed management of the Fidelity Booking Offices, and in addition has absorbed the the Central Booking Agency, which controls a big club and cabaret business. He states that before another week rolls around he will announce the absorption of two other large "small time agencies," which will make the new "Ceveland-Fidelity Circuit" the biggest of them all, and that it will take the place of pre-eminence in the field that the Prudential Vaudeville Exchange held while under his control.

The Prudential was the original Cleveland agency and under the guiding hand of "Big Bill" it grew from two or three picture houses until it was the booking representative of more theaters, large and small, than any other agency in the world. Over-work in accomplishing this result caused Cleveland's health to break down about two years ago. He sold the Prudential and took a much needed rest. Since that time he has been accused of owning almost every "small time" agency in the field.

"AND THE PHONE BELL RANG."

The World last week had a story appropos the various film connections Fred Mace was reported as making each day of his New York stay, and the heading was "And the Phone Bell Rang"—the story was written at press time. The call was from the Majestic office and the information was that, notwithstanding the daily reports, they had signed Mace for their California productions.

Pictures In Learned Society.

The American Philosophical Society Has Endorsed the Educational Picture.

By the Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton, S. T. B.

ON Friday, May 2, the American Philosophical Society, founded by Benjamin Franklin, in 1744, and one of the most famous and exclusive of the learned societies in the country, gave a moving picture exhibition in its rooms on South Fifth Street, Philadelphia, and discussed the application and value of the kinematograph to biological and medical investigations. The demonstrators were professor Arthur W. Goodspeed, of the University of Pennsylvania; Dr. W. M. Late Coplin, Dr. A. P. Brubaker and Dr. Alexander C. Abbott. Through the courtesy of Mr. Sigmund Lubin the society obtained from Dr. T. H. Weisenburg, of Philadelphia, the loan of six of the eight films shown, the other two coming from Columbia University, one obtained through the courtesy of Professor F. S. Lee, of Columbia, and the other being loaned by and exhibited through the courtesy of Dr. J. W. McWhorter and Dr. F. Prime, of Columbia.

The meeting room of the society was filled to overflowing with the members themselves and their invited guests and several late comers were obliged to stand on the radiators and window sills in order to obtain a view of the pictures. A list of those present would include the best known names in Philadelphia scholastic and social life, and while it is not necessary to enumerate them it ought to be borne in mind that such a gathering, seriously considering the application of the moving picture to scientific investigation and education is a distinct step in advance that every manufacturer and exhibitor should not only weigh well, but also spend time and pains and even money in advertising and making known. The mere fact that one of the greatest of the learned societies in the United States should have seriously considered the moving picture as an element in education will be a powerful argument in their favor to many who are still antagonistic or holding aloof, while the fact that such a society should give public endorsement of the pictures for serious educational work will not only greatly increase the already existing demand for pictures that can be used in this way, but is also a call on the manufacturers and exchanges to supply the goods that will meet it.

Incidentally it is a veiled warning that if the manufacturers and exchanges do not meet the demand, it is only a question of time before the educators find the means of manufacturing for themselves the kind of pictures that they need. It is a fact, although it is probably not generally known, that the experiments of Muybridge were made possible by the financial and other assistance rendered to him by the American Philosophical Society and the University of Pennsylvania and Mr. William Pepper, and that the process patented by Smith and Urban, and now used by the Kinemacolor Company, was first invented and discovered by a member of the same society, the only difference being that he used three instead of two color screens, and that his work was done too early for him to reap the benefit of the flexible celluloid film. At the business meeting which preceded the demonstration Friday night, the secretary read a letter from Mr. B. P. Findlay, of Washington, D. C., in which he asked the co-operation of the society in demonstrating a new method of transmitting photographs by telegraph which he had invented as he did not have sufficient funds to do so by himself. This kind of co-operation is one of the objects for which the American Philosophical Society exists, and while the educational value of the moving picture has been already demonstrated, the fact that such a society stamps its approval upon the application of kinematography to education will go very far indeed towards procuring the aid of other institutions and individuals in financing the means of giving the educators what they need, unless the manufacturers and exchanges rise to the opportunity which is knocking at their door and make such financing unnecessary by meeting the demand themselves.

The Edison company in this country and Pathe Freres in Europe have for some time been making tentative efforts to supply the needs of educators and the six films procured for the society by Mr. Lubin were all of them the microphotographic work of the French company. One film showed the blood of a mouse inoculated with the germs of N'gana, the African horse sickness, by the tse-tse fly, a parasite belonging to the same group as that producing the sleeping sickness in man. Another film showed the leucocytes or white corpuscles in the blood of a newt fighting the disease germs and demonstrated how the corpuscles destroy the germs and the patient gets well or how the germs destroy the corpuscles and the patient dies. A third film illustrated how relapsing fever was transmitted to the blood by ticks, and a fourth showed the effect of a current of electricity on typhoid germs in the blood of a fowl. The fifth film showed how germs acted in cuts and injuries and the sixth film depicted the circulation of the blood in the tail of a tadpole. The seventh film, which was loaned by Professor Lee, of Columbia University, showed how the beating of the heart was recorded and was affected by different drugs. After a series of pictures explaining the method and apparatus used in recording, came views of a normally beating heart. Then the action of chloroform in arresting the heart action was shown and the recovery of the heart from the effects of the drug, and lastly came views of the heart accelerated and stimulated by the action of such drugs as adrenalin and strychnine. The eighth film, also from Columbia University, demonstrated the growth of tissues, the movements of cell granules and the beating of the heart of the chick embryo. In plain English, the spectator saw how the white and yolk of an egg turned into a chicken inside the shell. In speaking of the use of the picture in medical work, Dr. Abbott said that Dr. Weisenburg told him that he had "twelve hundred feet of epileptic fits," which were not only of incalculable value for comparative study, but also of inestimable worth in his class work as heretofore he had frequently found it impossible to obtain a patient in a fit when he needed one for his clinic, while now "he could throw a fit on the screen any time he wished."

The French pictures described above are all of them listed in the C. G. P. C. "Nature and Science Series," of which several have already been released in the United States by Pathe, who could do nothing better for himself or for education than to make the entire series available in this country. Of course the microphotographic reproduction of the revelations of the ultra-microscope will be mainly useful in the higher educational work of the colleges and universities, although any of the films mentioned above could very easily be made both popular and interesting to the ordinary audience by a competent lecturer; but the characteristics of these pictures must be copied by educational films of all kinds, and apart from their subjects the films are noteworthy for their accuracy of detail, their direct, simple treatment of the subject handled and their definite adherence to and emphasizing of the lesson conveyed by the facts presented.

At present, aside from the work of Edison and Pathe, there are few, if any, pictures of this kind and it is quite true that the exchanges as a rule are unwilling to handle educational stuff, but the demand for this class of picture is steadily increasing, the attention of those who will be able and willing to provide the means of supplying this demand is being aroused, and unless the manufacturers begin to do something they are going to lose what is eventually going to be one of the most lucrative sources of profit in the business. If it is not deemed advisable just now to put such pictures out as general releases, why can't they be made available through an educational exchange or through the educational departments of already existing exchanges? One manufacturer thinks that they can and is willing to make the experiment. How many others will follow suit?

KINEMACOLOR FOR LADIES ONLY.

The Kinemacolor Company of America has arranged with Gimbel Brothers to photograph in natural colors "La Parisienne Elegance in Her Boudoir"—the demonstration, for ladies only, of the correct manner of wearing the latest styles of French lingerie. For this fashion display Paris has sent her loveliest and most novel specimens of under-apparel. Naturally such intimate displays are not for the general public, but these pictures will be supplied to theaters having the Kinemacolor fashion service with the understanding that they are to be shown only at special morning matinee performances for ladies only. The popularity of the "Fashion Parade" in Kinemacolor proved to exhibitors that style shows are something new in filmdom, and such a decided innovation has already resulted in renewed demand for the Kinemacolor Fashion Service.

"ROBERT GRAY AND 'BILLY' WEST NEW LEADS FOR AMERICAN."

Robert Gray and "Billy" West joined the American forces at Santa Barbara last week. Mr. Gray comes from fresh honors with Kalem, Edison and Pathe. Miss West is a charming ingenue in whom much confidence is expressed. They will play opposite each other in the second company. Miss Vivian Rich, who has been playing leads in the second company, has been transferred and hereafter will play opposite Warren Kerrigan.

"Alkali Ike's Misfortunes" (Essanay)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE Alkali Ike series by Essanay has been productive of great hilarity in the past, and the latest, "Alkali Ike's Misfortunes," scheduled for release May 31, puts all former efforts in this line in the shade, with the possible exception of "Alkali Ike's Auto." Augustus Carney is in a class by himself in these screaming farce comedies, which possess the virtue of being free from suggestiveness and that indulgence in vulgarity which so often mar broad farce on both stage and screen.

The story can lay claim to originality of a laughable type. Take, for instance, the fortification of Alkali Ike's person by the use of electric belts, which are wound around his body from hip to armpit. The short circuiting that follows, when his three enemies pounce upon him, brings about the most mirth provoking results ever seen on a screen. The climax comes when his sweetheart, Sophie Clutts, endeavors to remove him from the fence on which he has fallen exhausted. The lightning-swift gyrations of the hapless pair and the venomous hair-tugging to which Alkali Ike is subjected, after the dry battery has burned itself out, cannot fail to provoke a roar of mirth in any audience.

Scene from "Alkali Ike's Misfortunes" (Essanay).

Sophie Clutts, of Lizardville, as impersonated by Miss Margaret Joslyn, is a worthy mate of Mr. Carney's Alkali Ike. The name of the buxom beauty and that of her home town are risible in themselves. Hearty laughter, next to fresh air, is health's best tonic, and it is created in large doses by viewing the latest escapades of our old favorite Alkali Ike.

Sophie is the belle of Lizardville. Her visit to friends in the East has caused much heart anguish among her admirers in the little Western camp. Her return is eagerly awaited by Alkali Ike and three other suitors. On the day she arrives, there is scrambling for clothes and hot haste in dressing by the four lovers to get the first interview with her. Suitors number one and two help themselves to Alkali Ike's suspenders, coat and hat, leaving him in sorry plight; but, nowise daunted, he makes the best of odds and ends and arrives fourth in order at Sophie's home.

Now it happened that the other suitors arrived singly, and to preserve the necessary privacy Sophie has stowed number one in the kitchen when number two put in an appearance, and number two in the parlor when number three knocked at the door. So deeply engaged were Sophie and number three, when Alkali Ike called, his repeated knocks were unheard. He then dispensed with good manners and boldly entered the room. Thereupon he was soundly trounced and thrown into the parlor by number three, where in turn he was made a football by number two and kicked into the kitchen. There he was tossed through a window by number one, and landed on a hard place with wind and energy clean gone.

While gathering himself together in a nearby store, a salesman for electric belts entered. Alkali immediately bought the outfit and, clothing himself with the strength producers, sallied forth to the fray. Samson never wrought greater havoc with the famous jaw bone than did Alkali on this occasion; but, unfortunately, in the end, he suffered serious scalp injuries at the hands of Sophie.

"BUSTER BROWN AND TIGE" (Essanay).

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

R. F. Outcault, of Buster Brown and Tige fame, was in the city about three weeks ago and made a stay of several days, on the invitation of Producer Wharton, of the Essanay Company. Mr. Outcault made a national reputation by his famous cartoons in the New York Herald, with Buster Brown and Tige as his subjects.

Few, if any, outsiders knew that Mr. Outcault's presence here had any other significance than that of renewing his acquaintance with Mr. Wharton, who is an oldtime friend. Now a pleasant surprise has been sprung in the world of films; for Mr. Outcault, under Mr. Wharton's direction, has filled a full reel film in which he appears at work on the canvas, while his delightful creations, Buster and Tige, are seen seated in a box of a theater watching, with amusing facial expressions, the unerring traces of the carbon in his magic and nimble fingers.

"Buster Brown and Tige" (Essanay).

Mr. Outcault's features are unfamiliar to the many millions, young and old, who have smiled, or laughed uproariously, at his pictorial stories of the twin friends; but with the advent of this film, which will be released May 20, he will be seen not only as he appears in life, but also in the very act of delineating the gambols and mirthful deviltries of his pets. If this first appearance of Mr. Outcault before the camera has been made as a test of the popularity of such a series, I believe it is a foregone conclusion, after seeing the pictures, that the demand for a continuation will be pronounced. One might think, at first thought, that interest cannot be sustained throughout 1,000 feet of film by Buster and Tige; but, for myself, I must acknowledge that when the artist penciled the words "Good Night" on his final sketch, I was still desirous of seeing more. If 1,000 feet will prove too long, it will be easy to confine the sketches to 500 feet or thereabouts.

These sketches in moving pictures will furnish clean, wholesome and delightful entertainment for the young folks, and they will also have their attractive side for adults. I can recall the interest taken in Buster Brown and Tige by myself when the series was running in the Sunday issues of the Herald years ago, and their popularity with young and old. The reproductions in moving pictures, I believe, will be equally popular.

Producer Wharton was very happy in his selection of little Miss Ruth Henderson as Buster, and he was equally happy in his choice of tiny Tommy Shirly as the faithful and devoted Tige. To watch the expressive, childish face of Ruth, as she shows her pleasure, displeasure or mortification while the pictures are being drawn on the canvas, is always a treat. And Tommy Shirly will convince everybody that he is a most amusing and intelligent dog.

Considerable talk is heard these days of companies that are looking more for types and less for the younger and consequently under-experienced persons, albeit handsome or beautiful as the sex may be.

ESSANAY'S NEW SUN PARLOR OFFICES.

The office force of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company are more than delighted with their new quarters in the new building, just erected above their old offices. Each office has from four to seven windows, running seven feet high and four feet wide. When in town, drop in and see them.

NEW POSTERS FOR AMERICAN LEADS.

The success which greeted the appearance of the handsome lithographs of popular American players has induced the American Film Manufacturing Company to issue a new batch. These will include a splendid lithograph of Louise Lester in her famous role of "Calamity Anne."

GAUMONT'S PARIS PICTURE THEATER.

The Gaumont Palace in Paris is the largest building in the world devoted to the exhibition of motion pictures. It is more spacious than the New York Hippodrome. The building was formerly used as a sheltering place for Bostock's animal show. It was later used as a skating rink and then as a picture palace. Both proved failures until Gaumont took it, more as a gigantic showroom than as a permanent picture theater. Since the opening night it has been a great success. Every night it is packed with five thousand people. The seats run in prices from 12c up to $5.00 for a box. The show continues from 8.30 until midnight. Only Gaumont subjects are shown.

There is an orchestra of forty musicians, also vocalists. The interior of the Hippodrome is 65 feet high, 148 feet wide and 164 feet long and has a volume of 1,577,680 cubic feet. It is surrounded by a huge retiring room where various side shows are given during entr'acts. There are 125 employees, such as attendants, money-takers, etc. The thirty policemen are more or less superfluous, as a more orderly assembly would be difficult to find. Many persons attend regularly and reserve their seats from night to night.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

THE censorship bugbear continues to survive in and about this city, as well as many other parts of the country, notwithstanding that the more it is discussed the better intrenched becomes the position of those who contend that official censorship is favored by a comparatively small percentage of the people; that it is a political joker unwittingly nursed by over-zealous moralists; and that such censorship applied to motion pictures alone cannot stand a constitutional test. The latter is true despite anything to the contrary that has, or may be, developed in Canada. The constitutional rights and privileges in the United States differ very materially from those existing on the other side of the border line in many respects, so that an argument that the Canadian government has solved the official censorship problem carries no weight on this side of the line. No law of discrimination against the motion picture form of entertainment, whether it be that of official censorship, or any other form, can withstand a court test. An argument that some manufacturers and importers of films refuse to even make a pretense of censorship will not hold water when offered as a reason for advocating the proposed laws. The authorities have ample laws through which remedies may be applied if occasions arise for action.

A vaudeville act in one of the theaters of this city was recently reached by the application of one of the existing laws. It does not matter what the result of the case was. If the prosecution failed in its efforts on account of inability to show the act was a violation of the law that does not alter the fact that there is a law that can be enforced when a case can be made out, and that that law is applicable to motion pictures. If motion pictures are to be subjected to an official test before their exhibition, then vaudeville acts and all other theatrical productions must be treated likewise. If not, why not? If motion pictures are to be given an official bath before their public projection upon the screen why not put newspaper and magazine illustrations under similar treatment.

It is alleged that the stories told by some motion pictures tend to lead to the commission of crimes. Grant, for the sake of argument, that this is true and then apply it to the public press. Take an issue of the New York World of the past week and read how robbers attacked a woman in her home. Note the details of the crime given in the article; how the robbers approached the victim; the materials used to gag, bind and blindfold her, and the manner in which they were applied. It is extremely doubtful that the authorities can point to a motion picture now on the market that is more faithful to the details of a criminal operation than was given in the article referred to. Of course the comparison would not justify the exhibition of the picture, but it goes a long way in support of the contention that if there is to be official censorship it must take a general form to be consistent.

Now take the newspaper version of the question as reflected by consideration of the bill of Senator Works at Washington to censor the press of the District of Columbia, which was returned with an unfavorable recommendation. The Commissioners of the district reported that "the publicity given by the press generally tends to lessen evil conditions and thus renders a useful service to the public. That the dread of publicity has a deterrent influence upon those disposed or tempted to the committing of crime may reasonably be inferred from the fact that most offenders against law earnestly seek to avoid exposure of the circumstances of their misbehavior in newspaper reports of their trial. The Commissioners do not believe that the enactment of the radical legislation contemplated by the bill is advisable."

The report does not justify publication of details of crimes as referred to in one of the paragraphs above, but it does uphold for the newspapers what is claimed for motion pictures. If the publication of the details of trials has a deterrent influence on the criminally disposed or tempted, surely the operation of a motion picture story that leads up to a moral and a warning must have the same effect. In this respect the newspapers and motion pictures are so closely allied that a distinction cannot be seriously or consistently drawn, and on a proposition of official censorship both must be considered.

Our friend Marcus Loew has adopted the cigarette coupon scheme in connection with one of his houses. In doing so he has fortified himself against the main objection to such schemes by providing that the tickets are good only "for wife, sister or sweetheart." Children are barred, so that it cannot be claimed that they are tempted to purchase cigarettes to secure the coupons. You can't keep the resourceful theatrical manager down. The result of the scheme will be watched with interest. When the proposition was up before it was contended that schemes of that character have a tendency to affect the character of the patronage of houses; that they bring to the theaters an element that eventually drives away the better class of people. As Mr. Loew announces that the scheme is to remain in operation for but a limited period it may not be possible to determine the stability of the contention.

Well, the motion picture ordinance advocated by Alderman Folks, according to last reports, is not dead, but sleeping. Mayor Gaynor woke it up one day last week, but the Borad of Aldermen put it to sleep again for a few days. The indications are that by the time we make our next tour of observation it will bob up again. It is stated that the Mayor summoned several of the Aldermen to his office and discussed the proposed ordinance with them. He feels hurt that they do not act decisively upon it. To be more explicit, the Mayor feels that it should be passed. The opposition to it is strong in the Board. Several of the Aldermen who are interested in the larger picture houses will fight to the last against any measure that will place the smaller exhibitors in competition with them by allowing increased seating capacity in the small houses. One of the Aldermen is credited with having said to a smaller exhibitor recently, "Do you think we are fools? We invest fifty, or a hundred, or more, thousands of dollars in houses and then you expect us to give you an opportunity to come next door to us with your 600 seating capacity place." That is the fight in a nutshell. The big men in the business have thus far held a political influence that the little men, numerous as they are, have not been able to counteract, and there really seems to be no change in their favor so far as this aspect of the situation is concerned, with the exception that Mayor Gaynor appears to have advanced a step towards helping them. Heretofore he has rested upon his endorsement of the measure without the censorship clause. Now he seems to be pressing the passage of the ordinance.

A discussion of censorship extended the other day to comments on the action of the committee on paintings connected with the Brooklyn Institute. Mr. Charles A. Schieren, a former Mayor of Brooklyn, offered to donate a painting entitled, "To the Highest Bidder." It shows a negress slave and her child under auction. It is a valuable work to which gold medals have been awarded. The committee rejected it "in the belief that the subject brings up unpleasant recollections." A day or two later Senator Borah at Washington told Congress that slavery of the most degrading type is now effective in the Philippines and this announcement has been seized upon for argument that the rejected painting should be given the most prominent place of public exhibition possible to keep before the eyes of the rising generation the repulsive features of slavery, and have them prepared at all times to co-operate in fighting any attempt to revive it. And so we again find that, although many people are trying to confine attention to it within the lines of the motion picture field, censorship is of wide scope, and the greater the scope the stronger becomes the argument on constitutionality on the part of the motion picture people.

AMERICAN "HER BIG STORY" NOT A TWO-REEL.

Some time ago the American Film Manufacturing Company announced "Her Big Story," by Richard Washburn Child, as a two-reel subject. This was in error. The picture is an exceptionally splendid single reel for release May 31. This is about the date that the popular magazine will first publish the story.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Made Good.

READERS will remember a question raised lately by A. G. Wunderle, of the Pastime, Brooklyn, as to whether it was better to lay low circus week or make a special fight. Mr. Wunderle fought with a two-reel special every day and the "What Happened to Mary" as the added attraction. Some of his friends declared that he was throwing away money on top of that he naturally stood to lose through the presence of the superior attraction. Mr. Wunderle was good enough to comply with our request for information as to how he made out. This is his letter:

> The results showed an increased profit of fifty dollars above the best week of the past year, discounting the extra expense. The circus, as you said, tended to persuade the people to be more liberal. It seemed to increase their desire for amusement, according to several remarks I heard. The "Mary" reels were the biggest attraction.

That's the answer to all the men who this summer are going to confront the invasion of some circus. Most amusement men dread the coming of the tent attractions and too many show an inclination to hedge. Where the show is in town for a single day they may cut expenses for a week. Naturally they are right when they say the circus costs them money. And yet, as a matter of fact, the circus brings new business to them. All they have to do is to reach for it.

The circus performance runs about two hours and a half, twice a day. It brings into the city hundreds of people from other places, in some instances it brings thousands into town. Even with some shopping to do there is some spare time and the photoplay theater is the most natural place to turn to.

Coax them into your house by offering special attractions. Get a big two or three-reel feature and a couple of comedies and get out after them. Don't lie down.

The One Reel Feature.

The Mary series seems to have found a field all its own. The series story is familiar enough, but the series story that has a continuation of the same story is another matter. Predictions were freely made when this series was announced, that the fact that the stories were best shown in series would seriously militate against it. That the stories would be released about a month apart was supposed further to act against success, yet the Mary pictures have been run singly, the first five or seven have been brought back for successive nights, the first ten have been played back later and they will be running almost as strongly a year from now. This being the fact, it is to be regretted that other stories are not also made in series instead of individual releases. Twelve Broncho Billy stories in which the same Broncho Billy appeared in all would be a winner and we can imagine what would happen to the magazine that ran the fiction end of it with photographs of Mr. Anderson and his company for illustrations. In the rush for the two and three-part features the connected series seems to have been overlooked.

More Portrait Posters.

The Kraus Company has just published an edition of Mutual Players, uniform with the 11 x 14 posters of Licensed and Universal players. The new list includes Irving Cummings, Harry Benham, Warren Kerrigan, Fred Mace, Jack Richardson, J. B. Sherry, Edgena de Lespine, Marguerite Snow, Pauline Bush, Mabel Normand, The Thanhouser Kid and Anna Little. The price is two dollars the set of twelve. They work out excellently well for lobby display.

Doing Something.

Frank Montgomery, "The" Moving picture Man, is stirring things up in the southern states for which he has the rights to "From the Manger to the Cross." William Wright, of the Kalem Company, sends us a page of the Memphis Press, in which Tennessee publication an entire page is surcharged with a red ink advertisement of this impressive subject. A part of the text on this page is a well written account of the film, the rest being news and other advertising, but these twelve-line crimson letters go clear across and down the page. It's a trifle vivid for a sacred subject, but it is not offensive and it assuredly will get the business. The very fact of the red ink advertisement will make talk.

We have seen several pages run in two colors for the Kalem Irish subjects, when a green border was run in, but this is the first instance of a surcharged advertisement that we have seen. The ink is of a sufficiently light body to permit the black print to be read through it.

It is easily one of the most remarkable pieces of advertising yet received by this department.

An Educational Department.

The Pearce Weekly Bulletin, New Orleans, has a department devoted to industrials to be shown the coming week. This is a good idea from several points of view. It gives the reader an increased respect for the once despised "scenics" and impresses the thoughtful. It has a surprisingly large allowance of general gossip and a little more care in the make-up would result in a real magazine that would be eagerly watched for.

The day is passing when the educational subject on the end of a short reel can be regarded as an imposition on the managers. Now there is a demand for the educational subject and many managers make adroit use of these short lengths. In some houses there is an actual demand for them and the demand can be created anywhere by giving them the prominence that is their due.

Real Exchanges.

Lately we jokingly referred to these house bulletins as our own "exchange" list, but that is precisely what they are getting to be, and these little sheets are as eagerly watched for as some of the national magazines. We clip this from the Idle Hour Educator, Aberdeen, S. D.

> One of the latest requests to be placed upon our exchange list comes from the manager of one of Brooklyn's most popular theaters. We are pleased to mail him a copy of "The Educator" each week. Our little publication now goes into twelve different states of the Union, ranging from Maine to California.

Jack Nash, of the Isis News, Trinidad, Colorado, writes that he has placed 35 theaters on his exchange list, as the result of the mention in this department. It will be 36 presently for we have suggested to Emil Kerhlein, Jr., that he ask Mr. Nash for some samples.

The Isis News will have to go up to eight pages pretty soon, for the advertising grows apace and we think that some of the advertisers get better results than from the local paper.

If we hear any sounds of encouragement we'll start a Press Club for the Photoplay Theater Papers. How about it?

Another Ozone Machine.

Quite a number of houses now use Ozone machines to purify the air in their auditoriums instead of "killing the smell" with disinfectants. A new Ozone machine has come on the market at a lower price than those now offered. The machine was developed by a physician who intended it for use in sick rooms, but its success has resulted in the making of sizes suitable for larger spaces. We can supply the address to anyone interested.

Another One-Sheet Weekly.

The Martz is the latest one-sheet weekly. It is issued by the Martz Theater Company, Tipton, Ind. They state that if the experiment is a success they will raise it to a larger size. It will not be the success in any form that it would be as a four page paper right off the reel. The added cost of composition and printing would be carried by outside advertising and still they would have room for plenty of chat with the reader. The first issue carries a readable chat about the house and its advantages, not in a braggart vein but sincere and convincing. There is an announcement of a coming vaudeville act and the details of a new guessing contest. This will interest many managers, particularly those in the better residential districts. The second page is given to more general chat. We note that they run advertising slides for one dollar a month. They will find that it will pay them better to cut out the advertising slides and put the advertisements in the paper. This is the guessing contest.

> The Martz will soon present another contest somewhat similar to the "Who Are You" pictures shown by them some weeks ago. This time it will be a test as to your acquaintanceship with the city in which you live. Pictures will be taken of thirty of the residences in Tipton, those to be photographed to be taken at random from the different parts of town. Five of these will be thrown upon the screen each night until all thirty have been displayed. To the one guessing near——

Gossipy Announcements.

The Alpha Theater, Belleville, N. J., has a weekly program differing from many in that the man who gets it up writes the paragraphs intelligently. Several of their programs are at hand and each gives either a hint of the story or some bright comment. Quite a number of recent programs from other sources suggest that the manager takes the printed synopsis and cuts off what he needs without regard to whether this is the end of a sentence or not. We have actually seen programs where the paragraphs ended in the middle of sentences because the man who got out the copy was too lazy or too stupid to fix it up. It takes money to print programs and it is worth a little time to get the sheet out right. To start off from somewhere and end nowhere does not interest, and yet the object of adding a line or two to the title of the story is to catch the interest and make the reader want to see the performance. The Alpha does not copy. It prepares original stuff. It's worth while.

Didn't Then Did.

Harry C. Waldron, of the Langdon and Electric Theaters, Langdon, North Dakota, writes that he has cut the advertising and projection departments from this paper and has had them bound. He indexed the projection matters but did not index the Advertising for Exhibitors. Right on top of that comes a second letter, six days later, in which he says:

> I wrote you recently that I had made a file of your department but had not indexed it. Have found a simple method and suggest it for the benefit of others.
> Clipped out all pages, in order, and with mucilage pasted their edges into book form, each little volume containing, roughly, about 20 or 30 leaves. Numbered these from 1 up. Have taken a note book and headed the pages with the different subjects that interest me in this particular house, such as, "Matinee schemes," "Coupon, souvenir and premium schemes," "Good copy," "Novelties, innovations, etc," "Mailing list, requests, etc," "Special invitations, etc," "Programs," etc, etc. By indexing the different subjects, using my little booklet number and the page number, I have a dandy reference list to the entire contents of the department which can actively help me here. Of course, I have not listed the general comment, nor anything not going into detail.

This is my poor season here and now is the time I get busy on these stunts. When the fall comes, tho, with its better business, I am going to keep right on hustling.

I have two other little files which might interest some of the others. Have clipped every single ad in the World as far back as my file goes, and pasted them in a scrap book. I mean, of course, just one ad of each firm or each article offered. As new equipment comes on the market through the World columns, I clip it, thus having a complete file of dealers, manufacturers, theater equipment, accessories, etc. Of course, I do not clip film ads, feature ads, or the like, but only those of dealers and equipment, etc., I am likely to refer to. It is convenient for consulting when ordering and contains a lot of information.

The other file is one of general ad copy and chatty motion picture news, for use in my house leaflet and in special advertising. The clippings are gleaned from the different bulletins, Eclair, Kalem, Edison, Vitagraph, etc., from The World, the Universal Weekly, The N. Y. Telegraph, and the M. P. Story Magazine.

No, I don't spend all my time at my desk, but I like to have this stuff handy. Right now I am putting in a motor drive and two electric signs, doing all the work myself.

Captions.

We are going to follow much the same scheme for our own bound pages. When we have fully decided on the classifications we'll give them for the benefit of others who may want to keep the index going. It is handy to be able to turn to an item without laborious search. We think that Mr. Waldron will find a card index better than a note book and these are inexpensive.

Has a Paper.

Being a live wire, Mr. Waldron also has his weekly paper, The Tattler, described as a frivolous publication with a serious purpose. We would like to suggest to Mr. Waldron that even house papers should carry a date. The first issue was a very small four page, but it grew to a little larger size with the second issue and stays a five by seven inch four pages. It is interesting to note Mr. Waldron's adaptation of the hen and the duck story. Most of our readers will remember the original. Here is the expurgated version.

> SOMETHING TO CROW ABOUT
> FOWL TALK
> Ever notice when a duck lays an egg? It just waddles off and never says a word. Ever notice when a hen lays an egg? TALK ABOUT A CACKLE AND NOISE! Everyone can hear it. Go to a grocery store—100 people will ask for a hen's egg and only one will ever buy a duck's egg.
> Moral: It Pays to Advertise.

How will this do to rouse the interest of your feminine patrons:

> A man in a Pittsburg theater last week aroused feminine curiosity when he borrowed a pencil from a neighbor and excitedly sketched on the back of an envelope the costume of one of the screen artists. "I suppose you wonder why I drew that picture," he explained. "You see I am a ladies' tailor and have to know the latest style. That heroine's dress was something new, and the women here want what is new in styles. I often get ideas from the dress of the picture actresses. I will have this latest model for my customers in a week."

Some Humorist.

We hope that some time Mr. Langdon will write his experiences in book form. Under the general heading of News from the Front he tells the people back in Langdon what he is doing with a road show that makes six towns each week. Here is a characteristic paragraph:

> We left a vest at Pisek last week, a pair of gloves at Milton this week, and also some mail and a rod from the machines at Inkster. We are generally wearing our trousers when leaving a town, so we still have them.

A Shell Game.

Perhaps your trouble is not peanuts, but have you ever tried fighting some nuisance with slides. If we are not wrong it was a Canadian exhibitor who first called attention in this department to the slide crusade idea, but here comes a letter from Ralph R. Ruffner, of the Comet Theater, Vancouver, Washington. Answering his question before we print it we would say that Mr. Ruffner is justified in his pride in his letter heads. They are done in blue on blue paper with a silver comet possessed of a most luxuriant tail. The type display is neat, the wording good and the whole thing is big time. Here is the letter:

> My first offering to this department, while not dealing with advertising is sent for what it is worth, the thought in my mind being that while an exhibitor may spend lots of time and money to get the crowds, is his "house in order" to receive them? Whereas, be it
> Resolved, That after a man has taken advantage of the many fine points of the game, appearing as they do in your capably edited department each week, when he has anything to talk about that might be of use to some other exhibitor who may have a similar problem to solve, I think he is obligated to make a donation. That's me.
> "Peanuts, Their Virtues and Their Muss," is my subject.
> Small-town exhibitors have to rely upon regular patrons for their "livelihood," and it is to these that this "nutty" subject will perhaps appeal. To cultivate and hold the friendship and interest of one's best boosters—and every manager has a few—is one of the fine points of success. With me, my best outside booster is a peanut and popcorn man whose stand is opposite the theater.
> I wanted to clean up my house, make it more presentable—tidy and with some air of refinement; visible indications that there was a live-wire with a detail-eye on the job, and not a mere figurehead, and as my patrons for two years past have been in the habit of throwing their peanut shells on the floor, I began with that feature.
> How to stop the muss without hurting my friend's business—for he passes up and down the aisle with his basket each intermission—was the problem. (Of course I had the feelings of my peanut-eating patrons to consider as well.) I adopted jocularly worded slides, changing the copy about every two days, made them laugh and at the same time got over my point.
> My first was, "To Eat Plenty of Peanuts is Healthy; To Keep the Shells Off the Floor, Orderly. Be Both." A little improvement noted. Then, "Did You Know Peanuts Will Give You the Backache? Try Sweeping Up the Shells and See." Followed by "Peanuts Make Some People Have Fits. If You Don't Believe It Come Around To-Morrow Morning At 7 O'clock and Watch the Janitor." More improvement. "A noted German Scientist says: 'Peanuts stimulate the heart action.' You ought to hear what our Janitor says about the Shells, and he is not Noted either." "Cast your Bread upon the Waters but keep the Peanut Shells off the floor—Janitor." And the latest, "We are starting a Crusade against Profanity. Help us save our Janitor by keeping the Peanut Shells off the floor. Amen for that."
> Result: My friend's sales have increased (he says) and the muss has almost disappeared. To take care of the shells, each purchaser of a bag of nuts is given an empty paper sack.
> Now to take snap judgment at an article like this, a reader might wonder "what" kind of an element I've got to contend with, and the only reasonable answer to that is, competition is so strong (there are three houses here) and the shows all so long, that if my "customers" didn't eat something to tide them over, they'd starve to death before the program is finished.
> You said something about letter-heads one time. This is mine; I'm proud of it; adopted it when I first went into the business and have never altered it in any way. I didn't name the house, just made the best of an old name for business reasons, and there you have it. Will my stationery pass?

Checks on the Box Office.

The Novelty Theater, Sealy, Texas, is issuing checks on its box office instead of passes. W. N. Saunders, the manager, writes that while he uses it for his own passes he thinks that this form could be used good when countersigned by some local merchant in favor of some customers who have purchased goods to a stated value. We think the same way he does about it. It is more novel than the old style pass, will be talked about and shown and it will make money for the house and the merchants. We suggest the form for the benefit of those who may want to accept Mr. Saunders' suggestion. If he has any more ideas as good as this, we hope that he comes in often.

Good and Bad.

Bank and Ryan send an invitation to the opening of their new theater, The Hippodrome, at Williamson, West Virginia. They have the proper idea of display for their name, the name of the house and the city are in red with the rest in black. The remainder of the text is in Old English, so small that you have to look at it about three times to see just what the opening date is. It is a twelve point body, but cut so small that it has a six point effect. As they had plenty of space, a larger size should have been insisted upon. Old English is a poor type for anything that the advertiser wants read, and with a whole book full of good type specimens, we wonder why this awkward type is used so often. With red and black it is impossible to suggest copper plate work. The announcement is on excellent stock with envelopes to match and must have cost something to produce. Next time try a combination of copperplate gothic and engravers' shaded. It works much better in solid color or two printings.

The house will run eight reels in the afternoon and the best four of those and vaudeville in the evening. The worst of the eight reels is apt to be better than the sort of vaudeville that gets into West Virginia.

A Half Page Goat.

Lately the Reliance released "The Bawler Out," a three-reel feature. It was shown at the Princess Theater, Evansville, Indiana, and to offset the effect the four local loan companies united in taking a half page advertisement in the daily paper, which was a great deal more than a half page advertisement for the Princess. Sometimes it is just as easy to make someone else do your advertising for you and then you do not have to pay the bills.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by Epes Winthrop Sargent

The Dinner.

ACCEPTANCES are coming in for the dinner of the photoplay writers under the auspices of the Inquest Club. If you have not made up your mind to attend make up your mind now, for there is not much time left in which to decide and you'll be sorry and we'll be sorry if you miss it. To recapitulate, the dinner will be held in Keene's Chop House, Saturday evening, May 31st. Tickets are two dollars each and may be had of the club members or by addressing the Dinner Committee, Box 70 Madison Square Station.

MacNamara Goes Abroad.

Walter MacNamara has severed his rather brief connection with the Universal script department as a special writer to go to England on a matter of film importance. Since his connection with the Universal on January 1st, he has written practically all of the comedies produced by T. Hayes Hunter and a number of dramatic plays, the most notable of which are "The Regeneration of John Storm," "King Danforth Retires," "Officer 174" and "The Comedian's Mask." He is equally at home in stage dramas and has five productions now running in London counting his music hall work, and has made a reputation for himself as a comedian. More than that Pop Hoadley (no quotation marks on the Pop, please, Mr. Printer. That's his given name—we all gave it to him) says he's one of the best fellows on earth—and Pop knows him well.

Off Weeks.

May and June are the months when "off days" and "off weeks" come most frequently, and some writers find the spring fever discouraging. You cannot run a locomotive any further on a ton of coal than a ton of coal will carry it and it's pretty much the same way with writing scripts.

You have a streak of inspiration and do two or three times the amount of work that represents your usual output, you work hard and fast, because genius burns and then you sit and make faces at the type mill for a couple of days and wonder what's the matter when you were doing so much better than usual. That's just the answer. You've done two weeks work in one and you've run as far as two weeks, energy will carry you. Don't force yourself for you'll only force yourself to write rot. Rest up.

As you progress you'll gradually increase your productive capacity, but you'll not improve a hundred per cent. in a couple of weeks and be able to keep it up. Go to the ball game or anything else you want, but don't try to force things.

This doesn't mean to fall into lazy habits, but when through impulse or circumstance, you work harder than usual, take a rest and get back to normal. Don't think your creative ability has fled. Just give it a chance to take a nap and you'll be all right again.

Keeping Carbons.

This from Arthur Leeds:

> I was one of the "lucky" ones who lost a script in the Universal fire. Willis said that they were just about to pass on it when it went up in smoke. Of course, I have a carbon; but I won't send that, and I won't recopy it, either—as it stands now. Looking it over, I see room for improvement; so I'll send it again after it has been rebuilt. He must surely be a foolish photoplay writer who fails to keep a carbon of his script, though.

It just drives home the argument that it pays to keep carbons. It may seem an excess of caution, but we keep one carbon at the house and one at our office. If both places burn down we'll be helpless, but it will take more than one fire to do it.

Taking it from another angle LaVerne Allen, of Oneida, N. Y., kept his carbons, but about the time the Universal had its fire he also was in a burnout and lost all his carbons, not to mention a new typewriter. Twice in the same place is too much. Perhaps he'll follow our scheme.

We Cannot See It.

A correspondent weeps a whole page of single spaced matter because the Lubin company has an arrangement whereby it can use such Munsey stories as it desires. Possibly there will come another page of tears when she learns that the American Company has a similar arrangement with Street and Smith and that Quo Vadis, Ben Hur, Les Miserables, and some scores of other novels have been visualized in from one to twelve reels. She thinks—or says she thinks—that it is going to kill the business but in spite of her effort to write an anonymous letter, we have a signed communication on another matter and know her for a photoplay writer. Possibly she blames the story arrangement for her failure to sell.

Now only a small proportion of fiction can be made into photoplay; not enough to materially hurt the market, and we think that the visualized story will be welcomed as a sort of glorified illustration of the tale admired in fiction form.

We said not long ago that we were not in the axe grinding business. We repeat that statement.

Mr. Curwood Once More.

James Oliver Curwood seems to be a bit peeved because we said not long ago that there is no reason why a butcher's boy should not write as good a photoplay as the trained fiction writer. He points to the fact that he gets a hundred dollars apiece for all he writes, and also seeks to traverse our statement that the fiction writer does not have to see his story as does the photoplay writer. He, two editors and three other fiction writers all stood aghast at the statement that the fiction writer did not have to see the story he writes.

Nevertheless we stand on our original statement that there is no reason why an intelligent butcher boy cannot write better stories than Mr. Curwood, who has a novel in process of publication. We did not state that the butcher's boy would get as much money as some of the fiction writers such as Mr. Curwood. We said he might write better stories, stronger plots, better situations, more natural development, because he sees the story with the eyes of the photoplay writer and not with the vision of the fiction writer.

Mr. Curwood does not seem to be a practical photoplay man. He is an author with a literary reputation and he is getting $80 for his reputation and $20 for his stories. Because he is a fiction writer he believes that the fiction writer must be the best writer of photoplay stories, and he doesn't know that for every fiction writer who gets $100 apiece for scripts there are a hundred who have turned out scripts not worth a dollar each. Some of the worst piffle turned out by a person able to read and write has come from men with national reputations, while many men who could not write a thousand word fiction story that would pass muster in a country weekly will turn out a photo story that has all the punch and action that might be expected from the novelist.

We have never said that any unlettered person could turn out acceptable photoplay material. On the contrary it takes a high degree of intelligence. It requires imagination, a sense of the dramatic, the ability to express oneself tersely and clearly. It is, in some ways, a more difficult art than the writing of the short story, but it does not require the refinements of literary style which is what the fiction writer is selling to the manufacturer, and so the way is opened to the butcher boy who may not have style, yet who does possess all the other requirements. The man who writes for a hundred dollars a script may turn out a photoplay that makes infinitely more work for the editor and producer than the script of the writer who is paid a quarter of that sum and yet who turns out a story clean cut, practicable and intelligle—utterly lacking in style—but a photoplay.

One of Those Human Documents.

The craze for human documents is fading, or rather passing to other names, but here comes a real writer to tell us what he thinks, and we are giving him plenty of room because he writes much that is sensible and helpful.

There are two broad classes of writers, those who do their best work under pressure and those who arrive at their best only through careful labor. This one represents the former class and he says:

I have reached a stage where "over-trying" has reduced my mind to chaos. Probably that phase has been threshed out a thousand times but if you haven't discussed it lately I believe a lot of your younger generation will find it helpful. Here's what I mean:

When I began writing, a couple years ago or more, I really didn't know there was such a word as technique. I had something I wanted to write and I wrote it as best I could and sent it on its way. And it sold—the first eight or ten without any trouble. Then the Saturday Evening Post grabbed one and that was my undoing. I began to get the idea that I could do better work; that I wasn't doing the best that was in me. Then I began to study and to read up and to "try." And I haven't done a decent thing since. In the old days, in revising, if I saw anything that could be bettered and the betterment came to me at the same time, I made the substitution. If not I let it stand and worried no more about it—being in a state of blissful ignorance. Now I am never satisfied. Even if the better thing doesn't come to me I am obsessed by a haunting idea that the thing as I've done it is all wrong and I labor and mull over it until I've smeared all the spontaniety out of it. In other words I'm trying, not to write the best story I can, but to write a perfect story. I'm fretting so much about how it's going to read that the blessed freshness is all squeezed out of it.

The Form and the Plot.

Here's an illuminating letter:

> I am a constant reader of your photoplaywright department and am a writer of scenarios. I have written about thirty scripts, (none were accepted as yet, though I have many out at present). I know that I have the right scenario form, as I have seen sample scripts in books on the technique of the photoplay. I have also read the book that you have written. Now, that I have the correct form, the plot enters into the question.
> Most of my plots, I think, are original. A friend of mine, one who writes photoplays himself and one who has had about ten scripts accepted, says that he wishes that he were able to write plots as good as mine. Now, here comes a queer turn of affairs. Why are his accepted and mine rejected? Why is it that I am so unsuccessful? There must be a reason somewhere. And I am trying quite hard to find that elusive reason.
> The Universal in passing judgment on five of my scripts, said that similar themes had been used before. That, to my understanding, implies that I had actually sat down and plagiarized anothers thoughts. Yet I am positive that I have never seen a theme like the ones that the Universal marked "similar theme used before." And then again, it's against my principle to sit down and just plagiarize.

"Similar theme used before" no more means that the plot has been stolen than "Not available" means that the story is too poor to produce. It is simply a word of advice to the author that he is treading upon another plot. It does not suggest that he has done so knowingly. It merely states that a similar play has been done.

We do not always regard with venerating awe the checked reason. Lots of times the reason is worthless because the person who does the checking knows nothing. We saw a Ramo slip the other day with half a dozen reasons checked, none of which seemed to apply to the story. It's the man behind the pencil that counts, but the Universal has been checking close to the line of late and we think that the editor has diagnosed this writer's case. He is writing good plots, but they are plots that he remembers. He does not remember that he remembers them, and that is where the trouble lies. He is not a creator. He has a well founded technique, but he lacks imagination and in straining for plots he digs deep into his brain and brings up the plots he has read without recognizing them as old acquaintances. The plots are better than those of the man who sells one in ten, but the man who sells can originate and the man who does not, copies the work of others. That he does not know that he does this, makes his position all the worse. If he knew that he stole some of his plots he would be able to distinguish between those he creates and those he remembers, but they all seem new to him and so he cannot know which really are his.

There doesn't seem to be much help for a writer like that. If he keeps on writing he will get into trouble some day. The only thing to be done, if it can be done, is to train the memory to a point where the source of the plot can be traced.

Getting Wise.

Another of our correspondents has gained wisdom. He has a vivid imagination and he's been writing a lot of plays, but they have not sold because imagination alone never sold much stuff. Lately he has been looking around for reasons and now he has found the answer. He writes:

> I am taking a course of study in our local university. For a long while now you have been advising us ivory-domed beginners to patronize this university. At last the idea has penetrated the dense osseous tissue of my think tank and I have evolved a system of study of the best of the films which I see. My system might not be the best for everybody for it requires a mighty good memory.
> Formerly, when I went to the picture show, I sat in a tense attitude watching for pointers. Now, I abandon myself to a thorough enjoyment of the films. I see two or three shows and then go home and—go to bed. Next morning, I try to decide which picture has made the most impression on me. Then I write that story just as it was produced, scene for scene, leader for leader, everything just as it came onto the screen. Then I begin to fire questions at my story—Where was the punch? What was the conflict? How was my sympathy enlisted? How did the author arrange his scenes? etc, etc. When I am through I have gained all that the picture in question can teach me.
> No one who has never tried the scheme can realize the value of this simple proceeding. For example, the biggest idea that I have yet obtained is that these better stories all have a characteristic which I can find no word to express. The nearest I can come to it is to say that they are "balanced." I couldn't tell you in six pages what I mean by that word but you will know. Another big idea that I have gained is that the authors of these stories have taken infinite pains with them. They have put power into their scenes, they have given dignity to their characters, they have avoided trivialities. As a simple corollary to this discovery I have about decided that it is not so much your story as the way you write it that really counts.
> The next one I send you is going to be balanced. It is going to bear the marks of infinite pains and it will be arranged to strike with all the power it has. This is going to cut down the facility and ease with which I can originate plots but when I have originated one it is going to be worth something. I never felt more confident that I was going to succeed than I do now. I never felt the power that confidence gives until I took your advice and went to the University.

This correspondent's memory, as appears from other parts of his letter, is developed, through training, to an unusual degree. In his work he is required to keep constantly in mind thousands of details and so it happens that he can see three picture shows and remember them the next morning with almost photographic accuracy. Most students of the Home University will find it better to see one show three times than three shows once each, but the idea is the same. Remember the photoplays. Look back and see what it was that made the impression and why. Then write it down as briefly as you can and look it over again and study it. After a time you'll be able to put your finger on the "punch" almost instinctively. You will be able to take it out of the story and study it, and after you've studied enough you'll be able to put the punch in your own scripts.

You'll find, in a word, that a photoplay is written with care and intelligence and not just dashed off. After that happens you are a graduate and manufacturers will give you diplomas that will be recognized by the local banks if not by other institutions of learning.

Saved.

Hugh King Harris has been doing Missionary work. He writes:

> I learned, by accident the other day, one of the girls in the mailing room had the photoplay writing bee in her bonnet. She cannot operate, or utilize a typewriter, and her ideas of plot would amuse one, if she were not so painfully serious. She was about to invest $4 for a course in a New York "School"—they had started at $25 and came on down the line, and finally made an offer to take $4 and the balance of the $25 from her first sale. Generous souls. An inspection of Technique of the Photoplay, made her sit up and take notice. She doesn't want those "lessons" now. Probably she will never submit any plays—but I believe I have saved some editors the trouble of returning scripts, and at least one girl real disappointment.

If there was someone like that to stand at the elbow of every foolish person who believes the lying statements about the income to be gained and the ease with which scripts are written, some schools would close and hundreds of dollars would be saved to people who can ill afford to waste the four dollars that now marks the "school's" lowest extra special discount. At least one girl can thank Mr. Harris for saving her four dollars in money, an indefinite sum in postage stamps and many a heartache.

The Comedy Relief.

In melodrama and even drama of a more polite sort, the comedy relief is a strong feature. To lighten the tone of the plot a pair of young lovers are dragged in now and then or perhaps, while the chambermaid is waiting for her bell boy sweetheart she does a song and dance. Some writers try this in photoplay and the idea seems to be growing.

The comedy relief is all right in a three act melodrama with forty-five minutes to an act, but you have none too much time in eighteen minutes in which to tell your story without any side issues. Stick to the thread of your story and leave comedy out of drama and drama out of comedy.

Inquiries.

NOTE.—Replies cannot be sent by mail. State name of character. Do not ask for "leads" or 'that man.' Addresses cannot be given here, but a list of studio addresses will be sent for a stamped and self-addressed envelope. Only questions of general interest will be answered. Replies cannot be repeated.

S. H. F.—Selig and Vitagraph make most of the animal pictures, but they work largely on scripts written to order. Better stick to the regular stuff unless you know just what is wanted.

M. P. M.—You will not get a receipt for your script, and you'll not get it even if you write for it a second time. The companies cannot hire a couple of clerks just to send out receipts. Send in your story, wait eight weeks, and then send a polite note of inquiry. To ask for a receipt or write feverish letters is to emphasize the fact that you are new at the game. Don't do it.

D. G. W.—We cannot tell what is the matter with your scripts, but it is evident that you have not quite hit the idea, though you seem to be working along the right lines. No company has the right to mark your script. A courteous letter to the home office should bring you the cost of copying, and may prevent future markings. Several companies have made "The Scarlet Letter," either under that title or modified. They always seem to go well. Why not another?

RUBENA—Lillian Gish was the girl in "The Left Handed Man." She is not any relation to Miss Sweet that anyone seems to know of, but we understand she was a child playmate of Miss Pickford's. It is Sydney Ayres, not Acres.

R. J. M.—You have found your own solution. You are told not to write certain lines of stories, for these are cared for by contract, while the company is in the market for a very limited number of other scripts. Just at present Essanay is not in the market for scripts of any description.

RUBENA—Miss Gertrude Bambrick was the bride in "A Ragtime Romance." Joseph Holland was Brave Eagle in "Back to the Primitive."

C. W. B.—We have queried Mr. Delaney, but have not yet received the reply.

X. Y. Z.—Give your name next time. There isn't any place we know of where you can break into a studio unless you're a sheriff or a burglar.

R. E. A.—We have no recent information as to the company you mention. If it were alive we should hear something. Keep away from those companies not having an outlet for their releases. That K-B name is not yet known.

K. N. W.—In "The Wanderer," Henry Walthall was the Wanderer, Miss Mae Marsh the girl, and Miss Claire McDowell and Lionel Barrymore the sweethearts who later married. No dope on the Thanhouser section.

A. L. J.—Thanks for the music. You write on your script either the price you want or "At usual rates." The latter is the more general and the better way. If you mark a price, the company sends you the money or sends back the script. If you leave it usual rates, they pay what they generally pay. In no case should a script be sent with the price subject to correspondence. No editor will spend time dickering about the price. The company may make the script and then send you a check, which is one reason why you should not send a script to more than one company at a time. You need a copy of "Technique of the Photoplay"—if there are any left.

MOTHER G.—We cannot identify Pathe players. Ed Coxen was Tom in "The Chaperon Gets a Ducking." R. H. Grey is the other player you ask about.

COUNTRY BOY—The two players are not related. We do not identify Pathe players.

G. M.—Look in recent issues for the reply to your first question. The second name we do not know.

L. G. C.—It looks as though you did not study the screened product closely enough to see what the company really wants. We cannot tell more than this without reading the script, and we do not read scripts.

D. F. F.—It is "fearfully hard" to get questions answered unless you follow the rules and sign your name. And, don't ask if they are married.

G. A. P.—Kalem boys only in New York. You can submit to the eastern and western studios of the others mentioned. There is a very slight market for tragedies, because the happy ending is preferred, but do not distort a tragedy into a happy ending. Write a story that naturally leads to a pleasant climax. Write again about that five-month script, but be nice. We have not the slightest idea that the individuals you mention would steal a play. If they say it was sent back it probably was. It's not the punch that makes a melodrama, it is the way the incidents are handled. Most companies find that the contract system works well because they make contracts with those who can keep on delivering the goods.

L. H. V.—You'll have to keep on writing to forget some of the school stuff, and get the benefit of practice. The rejections seem to be encouraging. We cannot tell, without seeing your scripts, what sort of a chance you have, and this department cannot read scripts. The average good writer should sell at least fifty per cent of his work, though not necessarily at the first place to which it is sent. Study the stuff on the screen and the synopses in this paper, to get an idea of what each company wants.

J. F. F.—Kinemacolor film is precisely the same color as the regular black and white stuff, and can be run as a black and white if desired. The colors are obtained through the use of red and green screens alternating in front of the lens of the projection machine. Each alternate photograph is made with a red screen, and the others with the green. These give negatives with the color values accentuated. There is no blue though a violet flicker shutter gives a suggestion of blue. It is rather too involved a matter for a short explanation, but that is the basis of the idea. Up to the present time it is not possible to take pictures in natural colors for projection purposes.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON

New York Operators' Notice.

THE Editor of this department has given Local Union 35 one hour's time each week, from eleven to twelve, Thursday. During that hour he is delivering a series of lectures on projection and what goes with it. All members of Local Union 35 are welcome. There is no charge of any kind.

Rheostat Delivery.

Mr. John Condon, St. Louis, Mo., writes, wanting to know the amperage delivery of Power's circular wire coil, 220 volt rheostat, on 110 and 220 volt, d. c. A test of this rheostat shows the following delivery, 110 volt, d. c. With the lever on contact 14, 10 amperes; contact 13, 12 amperes; contact 12, 14 amperes; contact 11, 15 amperes; contact 10, 17 amperes; contact 9, 20 amperes; contact 8, 20 amperes; contact 7, 25 amperes; contact 6, 30 amperes; contact 5, 34 amperes; contact 4, 34 amperes; contact 3, 45 amperes; contact 2, 48 amperes, with the two coils remaining red hot. On 240 volt current, contact 14 gives 33 amperes; contact 13, 38; contact 12, 41; contacts 11 and 10, 45; contacts 9 and 8, 48; contact 7, 60; contact 6, 68, with the remaining coils red hot. On 110 volt, a. c., beginning with contact 14, the delivery in amperes is as follows: 14, 16, 18, 20, 22, 24, 24, 26, 33, 36, 36, 47, 52, with the two coils remaining red hot. I have no test of this instrument with 220 volts, d. c., but the delivery would be a little less than with 240 volts. It will, of course, be understood that these figures are not absolutely reliable, since the voltage may vary a little; also the test was not made with the light adjusted exactly to the best projection standard, and that would make a difference.

Outside Shutter and Definition.

Mr. A. R. Thomas, Atchison, Kansas, writes:

> This is my first offering to the department. In April 12th issue, Springfield, Mo., under the head "Injuring Definition," asks with regard to effect of outside shutter on the definition of the picture. I have experimented somewhat on this question in the past and find that if the shutter is set to cut one-third, or one-half of the lens opening, the effect on the screen is a very hazy appearance of the light. Flashing the light through the stationary film, with shutter set at same position, I find a blurred image on the screen. Now, looking at the matter in the light of that experiment, would it make any perceptible difference in the definition of the picture when running the machine at normal speed? Another question: In projecting one film the picture will be sharp, and in perfect focus, but the next, succeeding reel of a different make will be slightly out-of-focus, and the lens has to be readjusted before the definition is sharp. Now is there a difference in thickness of film put out by different manufacturers, and if so, would it be so pronounced as to cause this effect? My own idea is that it would. We all know the emulsion is next the light and furthest from the lens. If one film is thicker than the other, the thicker film would keep the emulsion further from the lens than the thinner; but is that the cause of the trouble?

As to the shutter, what Brother Thomas means is that if you set the shutter, with the machine standing still, so that it covers half or third of the lens, and flash the light through the film, the image on the screen will be blurred. This is quite true and is, I presume, due to the fact that half of the rays are cut off, thus injuring the definition. Rays of light pass in every direction from every portion of the picture in the aperture, hence pass through every portion of the lens, and if you cut half of them off you would only be using the rays through one-half of the lens which causes the blurred effect, though just precisely why it does this, I am not myself prepared to say. I do not think this would have any effect as to injuring definition when running the machine at normal speed, since the action would, I believe, be too rapid to be perceived by the eye. In fact, I do not see that the outside shutter would have any effect at all as to injuring definition, unless there be a slight travel ghost, and that, I think, was really Springfield's trouble. As to the other matter, it is very probable that different thickness of film has something to do with the matter, but inasmuch as there is only a variation of about two one-thousandths of an inch in film thickness, I do not think the whole trouble can be accounted for in that way. If any of the brothers have had experience with moving picture cameras and know the whole answer to this proposition, let them set it forth. The effect is not only there as between different films, but it is also frequently present in different sections of the same film.

Getting Wise.

Mr. Setti E. Barnes, Wichita, Kansas, writes:

> Just a few lines to let you know Wichita is still on the map. I am running two Power's Six machines, projecting a 15 foot picture at 97 feet on a canvas screen, coated with alabastine. The current is d. c., from a motor generator set, using about 32 amperes. I try to govern the speed of my machine to fit the action of the picture and to have a clear, evenly illuminated field at all times. I have been operating more than five years and am just beginning to find out how little I really do know. The house, the Marple Theater, is a very nice one, seating over 500. We show three reels of Licensed pictures. Our manager is a prince. He allows the operator full charge of the operating room and gets anything wanted, but, of course, expects good projection in return. He never butts in, telling you to do this or that, but believes in the axiom
> Would like to say that I tried out Brother Worthen's scheme of putting a brace on his shutter bracket, April 5th issue. I was troubled with travel ghost. Yesterday I put on brace and now—well, the travel ghost is gone. It certainly is a good stunt. I noticed sometime ago several letters about green glass eye-protectors to be used on the machine. I have one of my own design which serves all purposes. It fastens to the lower film shield and is just heavy enough to hold the same down while threading. All I have to do is give it a touch and the guard is up with the glass in position to protect the eyes from the glare of the spot. As to the complaint of a Wichita operator who had trouble at the Marple Theater and wrote you concerning it sometime ago, in my opinion, he was the one at fault. He claimed to set fire to a film through its proximity to an incandescent globe—I doubt it. He claims the fire was started by a 4 c. p. incandescent lamp. I laid a piece of film on a 16 c. p. lamp for an hour and then took it off because I got tired of looking at it. It was only just curled a little bit.

I guess there is no question about Wichita still being on the map, Brother Barnes, because it bears the reputation of being a pretty lively little village. I note what you say concerning the operator who sent in the complaint from Wichita. I am sorry that ever got into print. I intend in the future to keep such semi-personal matters out of the department, unless there seems to be some extraordinarily good reason for their publication. Your glass protector stunt is all right, and I can recommend it for that type of machine, if the weight of the glass be not too great, but just barely enough to hold the shield down while threading.

That Soldering Torch.

Mr. A. De Gregory, Tampa, Florida, writes:

> I received the handbook and am perfectly satisfied. It is worth double its price. Would like to know if you handle soldering torches and what the price is.

A short time ago I ran across a little soldering torch which I thought would be of use to the operator, and, merely as a matter of accommodation, offered to send one, by parcel post, to all those remitting the sum of $1.00. I supposed I would have a dozen or so to send out, but it has become a first-class nuisance. I want to accommodate you boys as far as I can, but it consumes a lot of valuable time to go down and buy those torches, write additional directions to go with them, examine each torch and see that it is all right, wrap them up and address them, take them over and have each one weighed and affix the postage. Therefore, if any more of you that want that torch can just add twenty-five cents more to the dollar, remitting a total of $1.25.

Brooklyn Answered.

Mr. A. W. Ballenger, York, Nebraska, writes:

> This is rather late to answer Brooklyn, N. Y., issue of March 1st, in regard to the Simplex troubles, but I have been experimenting on that fire shutter trouble, i. e., the fire shutters getting hot, expanding and sticking. Mine has never troubled me until I used some things to make it stick. First I tried lubrication, both oil and graphite, and that made it stick. I also found out that if the guides were kept clean with kerosene or gasoline, no matter how intense the heat, there would be no sticking. It may possibly be that the brother has not taken into consideration the rust (that is what I call it), which gathers on iron or steel when it is exposed to an intense heat. This must be removed. This trouble can be avoided by using kerosene or gasoline once a week. In regard to the framing device, I wish to say that the one I have worked hard when I first got it, but before I installed the machine for operation, I worked a solution of good, rather light lubricating oil and flake graphite into all the places I could find when there was a bind, or a chance for excessive wear. Now, I wash the machine out at intervals and give it a fresh dose of graphite. No trouble where you keep things well oiled. It is much cheaper to buy good oil than to replace even one little part. To keep the motor from squeaking when starting, wash the commutator with rag moistened in kerosene, also clean the brushes where they rub on the commutator and use only a good grade of vaseline in the oil cups. Motor troubles are thus eliminated.

As to the Simplex fire shutter, I think the makers would do well to leave a little more play. There is no particular reason, so far as I can see, for fitting the shutter so closely, and the close fit evidently has serious objections. Graphite is a most excellent lubricating medium. The only objection to its use on the machine is the fact that it is black and hence a dirty thing to use. I cannot agree with you as to the use of vaseline in the oil cups of the motor. Vaseline is not a very high grade lubricant. I would myself much perfer automobile cylinder oil, if the motor cups were adapted to its use; but most motor bearings have an oil well that requires the use of a not very heavy oil.

Toledo, Ohio, Answered.

Mr. H. W. Snodgrass, Holton, Kansas, writes:

> In this, my first literary offense, I will enter the brotherhood circle with a few words of possible help to Toledo Ohio, who complains that his picture is out of focus on one side. A remedy for this may be found in loosening the thumb-screws holding the mechanism to its stand and straightening the head, which possibly has gotten slightly out of line. I have had this occur with the new model as well as with the old. Possibly Lloyd G. Balkam, Washington, D. C., can find relief by adjusting his machine head.

To all and sundry of which Toledo and Washington will kindly give due heed. You are welcome to the department, brother Snodgrass. Call again.

Still in the Ring.

Mr. J. P. Meany, Empire Theater, Sunnyvale, California, wishes a correction made as follows:

> I wish to correct an impression which has gone out that the Empire Theater has changed hands or gone out of business. Nothing of the sort. We are merely awaiting the completion of an up-to-date cement theater building. It will be ready about the middle of May. We find your advice to be excellent and are using it to good advantage in construction, equipment, etc. The building will be 100 feet in length. Will have a nicely fitted stage to take care of traveling shows. The World is an indispensable adjunct to our business.

Let the good work go on. Larger and better buildings for moving picture theaters are the rule. Wish you all kinds of success in the new home.

From Racine.

Mr. R. J. Groenke, Racine, Wisconsin, converses after the following fashion:

> Just a few lines to let you know that Racine has a new moving picture theater, the White House, which opened two weeks ago and has, so far, been enjoying good business. The building was erected by the union men of Racine, who have their meeting rooms on its upper floor. Our picture is 15 feet at 90 feet. The present equipment consists of a 1913 Motiograph and spotlight, but I expect to add a Power's 6-A soon. The only thing I have to kick about is the fact that the film service is not as good as it should be. There are too many "rainy days" on our screen. Two of the Milwaukee boys came to our city last Friday and tried to organize a local. I, of course signed up and was given a working permit lobby card, to be hung in the box office. But the manager preferred not to have it displayed. Do you think that was wise? I have both of your handbooks. Could not get along without them any more than I could without The Moving Picture World. I enclose $3.00 for another year's subscription.

You have about a six inch e. f., objective lens, friend Groenke, and I would recommend that you read my reply to Lodi, California, so that when you get your Power's Six, you can do a little experimenting with the shutter, since I think you will not need quite as wide a main blade as that supplied with the machine. If you have an outside shutter on your Motiograph, you might try the same experiment with that. As to the union card in the lobby, I think your manager is in error. I wonder if he has the exhibitors' league card (the exhibitors' union) hanging up anywhere. The display of the union card cannot possibly do him any harm and may do him some good. At any rate, there isn't much use in a man being dissatisfied with organization in this day and age. Organization is the rule of the day and it is a good rule too. I have said before, and I say again, that I want to see both the exhibitors and the operators thoroughly and completely organized, so that they can deal with each other as organizations, instead of as individuals. It will be far better for all concerned.

Neither Engine or Dynamo Large Enough.

Mr. A. R. Bishop, Bridgetown, N. S., encloses $2.50 for a handbook and writes as follows:

> Will you give us your advice as regards an electric light outfit? We want to project a 12 foot picture and would want to use 10, 12 or 16 c. p. lights in addition to our arc. Might have to set the engine about 300 yards from the theater. Would you consider a 4 H. P. engine and a 2½ kow., 60 volt generator large enough for this size picture, or would you advise the purchase of a heavier outfit? We want to show a good, clear picture. It costs us $2.00 per night for our Bridgetown theater, using about 35 amperes about two and a half hours.

Assuming your city current to be 110 volts, 35 amperes would be almost 4 k. w., which at twelve cents per k. w., a very high price indeed, would be approximately fifty cents per hour. At $2.00 for two hours and a half, you are paying a very high price indeed. Possibly you are using 220 volts through a rheostat, in which case the price per k.w. is not excessive. No, I would install a 6 h.p. engine and a 3½ k.w., 70 volt generator. The outfit you speak of will probably give you good service within its limitations, but I personally would prefer more engine and more dynamo, as well as a little higher voltage.

More Careless Printing.

Mr. Phillip C. Stillwell, Erie, Pennsylvania, contributes the following:

> Enclosed are pieces of 101 Bison film; also I have had some trouble with other makes lately. Now how in thunder can we be expected to put up a good picture when they print them out of frame and incorporate other faults, as per the samples? I have a ghost. Have tried two 7½ and one 6½ and 7½, with the first named next the light. Have set them close together and far apart, have moved lamp backward and forward, have tried different carbon settings. Am using ⅝ cored above and below. Direct current through a rheostat. My picture is 14 feet nt 115 feet, using a half size lens. My Power's Six intermittent casing leaked oil out of the main shaft bearing. To remedy this, I am using a good grade of heavy cylinder oil. I use the best grade of cream separator oil for the other bearings, and find it to be cheapest in the long run. Will send description of my motor-drive. Have not seen or read of any like it in the department. Am driving from three gears instead of one.

Send on the picture and the description, Brother Stillwell. Glad to have it. If valuable, will publish it. Separator oil ought to be a good lubricant for machine bearings. Cylinder oil I have often recommended for the intermittent casing. As to the films, such rank work is an outrage. It has been spoken of before in this department and is due to raw, rank, unadulterated carelessness. In the first place, part of the faults, such as the occasional dark picture, are committed in the printing department, and then the inspection department fails to find and eliminate them. In our sample shown, the printing machine was not registered properly and one picture overlaps into the next. In another a patch is not properly made, causing a nuisance. If film exchanges would inspect new reels thoroughly and ship back defective ones, accompanied by a good stout kick, this sort of work would soon be a thing of the past. The Bison-101 Company is not the only one guilty.

The Power's Six Lens Ring.

Let me caution all users of Power's Six machines to be sure not only to center the lens ring with the aperture but to be very sure that the screws, holding the ring, are all tightened the same, so that the lens ring sets square with the faceplate of the machine. If this is not done, there may be some trouble with out-of-focus or ghost, or both.

An Open Letter.

Kansas City, Mo., Moving Picture Operators' Union, No. 170, I. A. T. S. E., sends in the following letter, which they are sending to all locals:

> Having been organized and affiliated with the I. A. T. S. E., I wish to call your attention to a few points in which we, as a whole, are interested, viz.: (1) That operators pay the same per capita tax as sister locals composed of stage men, etc. (2) While our per capita tax is the same, we have not the same rights as locals 35 and 37. (3) That we are granted charters to operate moving picture-machines, and spot lights where located inside the operating room. (4) That some moving-picture locals have the word projector on their charters, while all charters granted since the Springfield Convention have this word stricken off. An order was issued by the last convention to take the word projecting off all charters. (5) That grips, flymen, electricians, stage carpenters are not operators. (6) That the granting of auxiliary M. P. M. O. charters is ruinous. And now a word of explanation: My intention is to obtain the signature of every member of the various operators' locals to the enclosed petition, to be presented to the Seattle Convention in July.
> The petition reads as follows, omitting its preamble for sake of brevity:
> "We, the undersigned moving picture and projecting machine operators of the U. S. and C., do petition this assembly to grant the following to the moving picture operators of the U. S. & O.: that we be granted jurisdiction over all spots, floods, picture machines, stereopticons, etc., from the front of all theaters back to the curtain line, and further, that no auxiliary M. P. M. O. charter be granted to any stage local. All existing auxiliary unions at this time be given a direct charter, or jurisdiction be given to nearest moving picture local, and further that the word projecting be added to all M. P. M. O. charters."

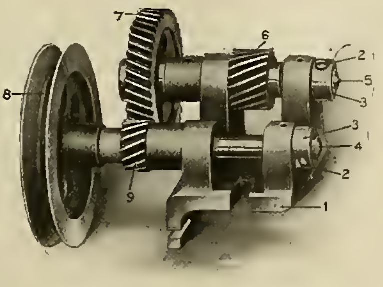
I have printed this because it is a matter to be brought before the convention, and it is one which should be fully and freely discussed, since it presents a great many angles and is not as easy of solution as it looks. I refrain from commenting at this time until others have had their sayl. The letter itself I have abbreviated somewhat, but have carefully refrained from altering any of its meaning.

Brother Hadden asked me to call the attention of all operators' locals to the importance of having delegates at the convention, but this has already been done.

Power's Six Motor Drive.

Mr. John Hart Cobalt, Chicago, Illinois, writes as follows:

> Will you kindly tell me what kind of a motor-drive attachment the Power's Company furnishes for their No. Six machine; also whether you consider it as good as any other drive for this mechanism?



The Power's Six motor-drive is a simple little device, as shown in accompanying picture. The attachment is fastened to the base of the machine right under gear 640, plate 4, page 278 of the handbook, with which gear 6 of the attachment meshes. The power is thus applied in practically the same way it would be applied by the crank itself. Holes are provided in the base of the machine for the motor attachment. Yes, I consider this attachment as being as good as any for this particular mechanism; in fact, it has some points of excellence as against any other motor attachment for the Power's machine, in that it is simple and places the motor, belt, etc., on the offside of the machine where they are entirely out of the way. The attachment can be adjusted to the machine by any competent machinist, or

Action Too Fast.

Nutley, N. J., sends in the following complaint:

> We run several Biograph films each week, and for a long time I have noticed the players' actions, both in drama- and comedy, appear to be unnaturally fast, although, I seldom vary from the normal speed of 20 minutes for 1,000 feet of film. Recently, at the direction of the manager, this speed was reduced 25%, which was the cause of a continuous dropping of the automatic fire shutter, without much improvement in the film action. The machine is a Power's Six A, and in perfect condition. The picture is 14 feet at 70. Using the above speed, the pictures are simply great until we strike the Biograph, then the action is so swift as to become bewildering. I have had five years' experience on the crank and have always had good, clear, steady pictures, but these Biographs have me lashed to the mast. What is the trouble? Cameramen, directors, actors or operator? If the fault is my own, I want to know it; but this seems incredible, since other pictures show up perfectly at the normal speed of projection.

I do not know, brother, but under-speed of the camera would account for the rapid action, but it seems strange since, according to your own figures you are only running 50 feet of film per minute, and that is ten feet under normal speed. I do not agree with you so far as not changing speed is concerned. Speed should be changed very frequently, to fit the action of each individual scene, or film. The Biograph Company informs me that the trouble complained of did exist temporarily, but has been found out and remedied.

The Bunch of Grapes.

I suppose, after reading the following letter, the Cincinnati Operators' Union will send their best gun-man to New York to camp on my trail. I am indeed sorry for the disappointment awaiting our Cincinnati brothers, but here is the letter. The joke is on the Editor. Mrs. Muriel Rohde, 31 Cincinnati Avenue, St. Augustine. Fla., writes:

> I see in the April 12th issue, there is a dark, deep, dense mystery concerning poor me. When you published my letter in the February 15th issue, you made the mistake of reading my street address for the name of the city. To defend my husband and partner, I would like to say he is not t-i-r-e-d, nor is he hunting for an easy way out. We are in the real estate business and the M. P. theater is our extra work, as we only run it at night. I must confess I am one of the "new women" and have always liked to build houses and fool with machinery, while my husband prefers music and business; so you see we each have the part we really love, and yet we are altogether chums, partners, husband and wife. I am hugely grateful to Mr. Lacy for his sympathy, however, even though I d-o-n-t require it. You have no idea how much your department has meant to me, for I have needed help to get along, and a woman engaged in this work has a harder time to get at things than you men have. But I have enjoyed every minute of my time. Now one more word and I am through. St. Augustine, Fla., has two (2) lady operators. I have laughed over this dark, deep, dense mystery until tears have come to my eyes. I am paid the same as any other operator, and get the same, wages as the best in this city get—so there!

Slap, bing!—just like that. And now we'll all stand hitched. And now, I'll tell you what I want you to do, Mrs. Rohde; I want you and the other lady operator to get your phogetraps tuck together on a postal card, and send them in for publication; also I would suggest that you send one to Mr. Henry Lacy, Local 165, M. P. and P. M. Operators, 131 West 5th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio. You might also put the skin of a couple of grapes in the letter. I very much like one phrase of your letter, viz.: "partners, chums, husband and wife." There is some class to that kind of a proposition. But I am sure your definition of the "new woman" and the accepted New York version is not the same. "New woman" here in New York City means a freak hat, a face plastered with powder, a skin-tight hobble skirt, slit up to the knee, and all that goes along with that kind of a make-up, including wine suppers at 2 A. M., with some other woman's husband, usually. But I must apologize, Mrs. Rohde, for, of course, your definition and the New York definition are at wide variance. The term "new woman" immediately called to mind the New York point of view on that phrase, however. I am well aware of the fact that the woman who is a chum and partner of her husband is not that kind of a freak, for the New York "new woman" is a freak, pure and simple. I am indeed glad that you have found enjoyment and benefit in the department. I, too, and I presume thousands of readers of the department have had a good broad smile over Cincinnati's dark lantern search after the bunch of grapes. But all's well that ends well, and we now await the photograph. If you cannot get the other lady to come in on that, send one of yourself anyhow.

Cleveland Boys Have Banquet.

The Editor is in receipt of the very neatly gotten up souvenir program, issued by the Cleveland Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union, No. 170, I. A. T. S. E., on the occasion of their first annual banquet and entertainment, given at Elks' banquet hall, Cleveland. The program was accompanied by the following letter, from S. M. Hulbert, of the Cleveland Local:

> A large number of our members and friends enjoyed the good things to eat while watching the vaudeville, including the Thanhouser Kid and her sister, which was a treat especially for those who have so often seen their work in moving pictures. They received a hearty reception which proved their popularity among those who see them on the screen. After several of the guests had responded to the requests of the toastmaster, including labor men of the local and state federations, the banquet was adjourned at 2:10 A. M. Those present expressed themselves as having a good time. We hope to have again the opportunity of entertaining our friends in the near future.

Applies Heat to the Patch.

Mr. Glenn Bossard, Avon, New York, contributes the following idea and says:

> That new handbook certainly is a fine thing and something every operator should own. I find by having a small electric light, which furnishes a little heat, under the film patching plate, the patch is dried and welded much better. That brother with one arm must have his hands full keeping his arc and everything else running smoothly; particularly if he uses a. c.

The heat idea may or may not be all right. I could not say, but film cement sets so very quickly that I would not suppose it would be of any particular value. How can a one-armed man have his hands full?

Information Wanted.

Lakeland, Florida, makes the following inquiries:

> I now have a 115 foot throw but wish to move the projector forward to within 66 feet of the screen. (1) What focal length condensers ought I have, the picture being 15 feet in width. (2) Will my General Electric transformer be large enough? Am using a barrel of water now, but it consumes too much current. My picture now has a far-away look, but otherwise is great. (3) Is this angle too great for a good picture?

(1) You should have either two 7½ or one 7½ and one 6½, whichever give best results. (2) If you mean the transformer out on the pole, or wherever it is located, which supplies the building, it will be necessary to have either a rheostat or low-voltage transformer (Inductor Economizer, etc.), in addition thereto. If, on the other hand, you mean that you have a 30-40-50 ampere operating room transformer then it will be all right, provided it be one built for the voltage of the house supply. Water resistance is a nuisance; also it is more or less variable and unreliable. A rheostat is much better and an inductor or economizer is a still greater improvement. For information as to action of rheostats, economizers, etc., see pages 107 to 170 of the Operators' and Managers' Handbook, a 450 page book of instruction by the editor of this department, for sale by The Moving Picture World, price postpaid $2.50. (3) The angle shown is 24 feet in 60, side throw, which is much more than I would advise. You will have keystone effect, some distortion and out of focus effect. Possibly you may be able to overcome the latter, but I would not tackle a proposition of that kind in a house of mine unless it were absolutely necessary. What do you mean by "far-away look"?

Fernia, B. C., Canada, Answered.

Mr. A. W. Ballenger, York, Nebraska, answers Fernie, B. C., as follows:

> In answer to D. A. McDonald, Fernie, B. C., he should have no trouble with his 110 v. d. c., giving a yellow light if his clamps and wire terminals are perfectly clean, and if his condensers are of the best grade. In regard to the condensers, I have tried the cheap, $1.00 kind and never was able to get even a reasonably good light, but when I got my new machine the condensers which came with the machine are much thicker and a better quality of lens. Since then I have had no trouble. Of course I focused the condensers. That has much to do with the yellow light. Get them focused to where they belong and note the difference. With regard to carbons: the ⅝ cored above and ½ solid below will give very good light if set according to the handbook. There will be a minimum of needling if the carbons are not run closer together than an eighth inch, and not farther apart than ¼ of an inch; also they should not be brought together after starting, as continued touching together will tend to form a hard spot, and then the needling begins. There should not be too great an angle to the set of the carbons. Just place lower carbon, if a half inch one, with the front side barely even with, or a trifle in advance of the upper.
> Relative to trouble with the lower loop, beg to say that I took time to try to make my machine, a Simplex, lose the lower loop, and could not. This I am convinced, however, will cause the trouble, viz.: If lower sprocket teeth are worn, or full of dirt. Same with the intermittent sprocket. Also if screw 36, plate 2, page 294 of the Handbook, which holds roller in position, becomes loose or worn the trouble is liable to happen. The same is true regarding breakage or looseness of the lower arm roller spring, No. 43, plate 5, page 300. Lower loop-losing is a thing I have never had to contend with on the Simplex, except one instance, a patch where the sprocket holes did not match. This I fixed before running it again.

As to losing the lower loop, no machine should do that if it be kept in proper adjustment and the films themselves be in good condition. But if the films have badly made patches or the machine be out of adjustment as to its lower magazine, take up tension or the lower sprocket idler, then the fault may occur on any machine, though with the Power's Six the loop is automatically re-formed if it be equipped with the loop setter.

Operator Flood Sufferers Benefit.

Mr. P. Everett Wagner, Thomasville, N. C., writes asking if any of the money taken in at the New York Exhibitor's Flood Sufferers Benefit will go to operators who were losers in the flood. He also suggests that every operator should send me the sum of one dollar, same to be forwarded by me to operator flood victims. The suggestion does credit to Brother Wagner, but it is impractical for several reasons, not the least of which would be the fact that I would have no means of knowing what operators would be deserving of the benefit. As to who will receive the exhibitors benefit money, I cannot say. It will doubtless go to exhibitors exclusively.

Possible Exception.

Raymond C. O'Quinn, Petersburg, Florida, writes:

> I note you do not like to receive letters from a boy, but I am going to write anyhow. I have been operating for three years, and have your little handbook; also the $1.50 one, as well as the two volumes put out by the American School of Correspondence. Projection is very good in this town, but could, of course, be better. April 12th issue, friend Balkan reports out-of-focus trouble. We had the same difficulty and if your own suggestions do not remedy the fault, let him try twisting the barrel of his lens around. This is my first trip to the department, but I would like to write you of the conditions in the theaters here. My age is sixteen. I put that at the bottom for I knew if it was placed at the beginning you would not go any farther.

You do me an injustice friend O'Quinn. Strange as it may seem, I was a sixteen year old boy myself, just a few years ago—at least it seems just a few years ago, and I can assure you I am not over sixteen and a half in spirit right now. According to your letter, which is very well written indeed, you seem to be one of the exceptions. I have met boys sixteen years old who were, so far as poise and mentality went, far ahead of men twice their age, but, as a general proposition I do seriously object to sixteen year old boys in an operating room, because they lack experience and judgment. I shall be glad to have the letter you speak of. Send it in whenever the spirit moves and the ink bottle is handy.

Some New Scheme.

Mr. Louis N. Sorensen, Fort Clinton, Ohio, writes:

> Your columns are certainly interesting and I will now contribute my mite in the shape of a description of our method of handling reels. My manager is the inventor and the manufacturer of a rewinder, which is not a rewinder in the ordinary sense of the term. I just arrange my films in the rotation I want them to run, and then start the machine. There is a picture on the screen all the time. We have no stops or intermissions, and find the people like it much better than waiting for reel changing, while looking at advertising slides. I think the same as Mr. Hendry that the picture show is no place for advertising, except in so far as it applies to your own program. I have some operating room, not a "booth." It is 7 x 12 x 9 feet, cement floor, steel sides and ceiling, large vent flue which opens through the roof, as well as another opening which brings fresh air directly from outside of the building. Flicker? No, we are not bothered with it at all, and we do not have to make a foot race out of a funeral march either. I do not know it all yet, but if you continue the Projection Department I certainly will know as much as the other fellow, in course of time at least.

I wish I were where I could slap you on the wrist for arousing our curiosity by telling us what you have got, and then not showing it to us, either by picture or description. You tell your manager to come across with a description of that whatever-it-is. You say it is not a rewinder, and that is about all you do say. Suppose you get busy and converse just a little more about the flicker business also.

An Error.

In March 12th issue, in quoting a letter from the General Electric Company I seem to have misconstrued something that was said. That company now calls my attention to the fact that, while all the rest of it was correct, the statement that their prices for mercury arc rectifiers have been reduced was an error. According to the present letter these prices have really been slightly advanced, but they now cover the cost of the rectifiers delivered to the customer.

Trouble Galore.

Mr. George Ehruine, Marblehead, Ohio, orders a handbook and sets forth his trouble as follows:

> I am up against it. I built an addition of 24 feet to my theater, making the throw 76 instead of 50. Before this we always had a very good, steady clear picture, but now in spite of all we can do, our picture is dull and flickers very much. The flicker is so bad that I cannot use my silver screen. We have tried everything we know of, or ever read of in your department, without avail, and I am losing patronage. I use two-pin Edison machines. Would I get better pictures by having the machine remodeled into one-pin?

You most emphatically would. No wonder you cannot use a silver screen. I thought the old two-pin machines were dead and buried. My recommendation would be, however, that you get a new up-to-date, three wing outside shutter mechanism. The only thing I do not understand about this matter is why you have trouble through increasing the distance, unless you, at the same time, increased the size of your picture. If you placed your machines back 25 feet further, and use the same lenses, that would account for the dullness of the picture and for the added flicker also. Your second sentence is a neat little problem in higher mathematics.

Show Me the Place.

Mr. John Matthews, Nicholasville, Kentucky, slaps the Editor on the wrist in the following letter:

> As regards belting a motor to the Edison machine, I noticed in one issue of the department you tell an operator it is a very bad idea to belt to the fly-wheel of a machine, then you turn right around and tell another operator that the fly-wheel is the right place to belt to. Now, I would like to know which is really the proper place to belt the motor to, the same being a Kimble, ⅛ h. p., variable speed. I may be green, but I am not afraid to show my lack of knowledge when I can learn by asking questions.

Show me the place where I ever said it was correct to belt to the fly-wheel of a projection machine, and I will read it with pain. Most certainly if I did I was day-dreaming when I wrote that particular paragraph. For the Edison machine, I would suggest the Chambless motor-drive. This device was described and illustrated in the department last week and is excellent for the purpose for which it is intended. You are perfectly right in not being ashamed to ask questions. Only the fool fears to show lack of knowledge when he can obtain it by asking questions.

Operators Are you perfectly satisfied with the results you get on the screen?

Comments on the Films

"A MOCK MARRIAGE" (Lubin), May 9.—A sordid story with a cheap ending, but little value as entertainment. Audiences will take even trashy stories, when they are pleasant or romantic; but this is neither. Monte Katterjohn is the author and George Nicholls produced it. Irving White plays an interesting role, but spectators will have little sympathy for the others. The photography is clear, but without quality.

"CUPID'S HIRED MAN" (Vitagraph), May 9.—A new story and a cleverly imagined one. But it is too stony cold through the first two-thirds to make the best entertainment. The old-maid is ridiculed by her fellow-townsfolk (a state of affairs that isn't subtlely enough suggested, and who, when she finds a burglar in her house, hires him to play her sweetheart from the West. He likes his job until Mr. Bunny comes from the city, but what happens then pleases the old-maid. Flora Finch, John Bunny, and Charles Edwards play the three leading roles. The camera work is clear.

"MONTREAL, QUEBEC, AND HALIFAX" (Patheplay), May 9.—A travel picture of interest and merit showing the most famous buildings and points of interest in and near the three chief cities of Canada. It is clearly photographed. Such travel offerings are not wholly satisfying, because there is not enough personality in them; they are too much like the collections of postcard pictures that one sees.

"IN THE VALLEY OF VESUBLE" (Patheplay), May 9.—With the foregoing is this offering of entirely different quality. It is a well-colored travel picture, a true motion picture of a mountain valley, full of interest, grandeur and beauty. It stands for a day's outing and has a personality of its own. A tip-top offering.

"THE CHEYENNE MASSACRE" (Kalem), May 9.—A two-part special offering dealing with pioneer times in the far West. We have already noticed it. See page 283 issue of April 19, 1913.

"IN THE DAYS OF WITCHCRAFT" (Selig), May 9.—On the whole, a dignified and graceful offering, telling a story of early days in New England. In the story there is nothing new, but the producer, F. W. Huntley, has managed to get a picturesque atmosphere and has made several charming scenes. The players are acceptable at nearly all times, but there is nothing especially to commend in their work; it has no brilliant moments. The camera man deserves credit. It makes a very fair offering.

"A WOMAN'S WAY" (Essanay), May 9.—Some prettily photographed scenes with good, natural acting make this trashy story fairly entertaining in its picture form. It seems a pity that producers use such material as this to work with; it hampers them grievously. The players, among whom are E. H. Calvert, Ruth Stonehouse and Gertrude Scott, deserve credit as do the producer and especially the camera man, but no one else connected with this offering does. Those sets and the natural playing will please.

"THE GOLDEN WEDDING" (Edison), May 9.—A reverie story that has been done in pictures time and again. An old couple, after their golden wedding, dream of their youth, through war times to the present. With good, old tunes to help out the suggestion, it might make a very acceptable offering indeed. But in this case it must hold by its theme alone, as it has not been done artistically nor expensively; yet it will surely make the tunes go well. The author, Herbert Prior, deserves no credit for anything new. It is naturally acted by Harry Beaumont and Mabel Trunnelle, who are well supported by William West, Adell Clark, Kathleen Coughlin and W. Porter. The photography is fair.

"THE HASH HOUSE COUNT" (Kalem), May 9.—The count referred to is not numerical. The offering made a good deal of laughter, but it has only the rough horse-play in it that brought this forth. John Brennan made a hit with the audience. Ruth Roland and Marshal Neilan support him. It is very clearly photographed.

"TOOTHACHE" (Kalem), May 9.—This on the reel with the foregoing has more freshness. Its chief asset is Marshal Nielan's tramp, which is really very amusing. The misery of the toothache makes John Brennan and this hobo companions in arms with a hot-water bottle between them. The two together on this reel make an acceptable program lightener. Both are clearly photographed.

"THE WRATH OF OSAKA" (Vitagraph), May 8.—A story by Gene Mullin, taken in Japan by the traveling Vitagraph company. It is intended to be a tragedy, but, at least in the early scenes, it fails of being tragic, because of its players who, as Japanese, are comical. Maurice Costello looks anything but Japanese in his costume, and there was some laughter. The women are passable Japs, but none of the men get by. The backgrounds are as interesting as could be, but the picture, as a dramatic offering, is weak.

"HER MOTHER'S AMBITION" (Patheplay), May 8.—"Paid in Full" is the drama from which this picture comes. Marian Leonard did one almost exactly like it for the Gem last summer. It is a fair offering, not a great picture.

"A TRIP THROUGH THE 'NORTH ISLAND' OF NEW ZEALAND, FROM AUCKLAND TO WELLINGTON" (Melies), May 8.—A worthy travel picture showing much that is deeply interesting in the world's smallest continent. There are four sections of it. The first deals with Auckland and gives good views of that important city; then come sections dealing with Maori people of the present day and finally fine glimpses of Wellington. A good offering.

"SHE MUST BE UGLY" (Lubin), May 8.—A picture that made plenty of laughter and seemed to be well liked. The idea it uses—the pretty typist getting married and making her discouraged boss advertise for an ugly one—has been used a number of times, but there is freshness enough in the picture to justify it. One would say that its author, E. W. Sargent, had seen the others and then shown how they might have been made so as to approach possibility. It is funnier than any of the others that we remember. Of course, it isn't high art. D. A. Hotaling produced it with Mae Hotely in the lead.

"HATTIE'S NEW HAT" (Lubin), May 8.—With the foregoing this farce by the same author, producer and company, also made laughter. Like the other, it pleased many, but there was no time when it made the whole house laugh. Its quality comes from its unexpected things. We see, for instance, a man cutting a hole in big, empty hat box and wonder what he is going to do with it. We are not permitted to know for some time and then when we find it on his head and connected with the gas, it is in this case, very amusing.

"FRAPPE LOVE" (Biograph), May 8.—This picture made laughter, especially in the gallery, but it is vulgar.

"THE COVETED PRIZE" (Biograph), May 8.—With the foregoing, this farcical picture made but little laughter; it is dull.

"TWO WESTERN PATHS" (Essanay), May 8.—A middle-aged westerner falls in love with a vaudeville singer and, after an incident that makes it seem natural, marries her. She loves him, but the old life calls and she can't stand the lonely cabin, so she leaves him. This is quite sufficient to make tragedy enough for one little household and it is enough to make a very acceptable picture of human life. Arthur Mackley and his company produced it. It is well acted, clearly photographed and has distinct charm. An offering that will be liked.

"HER GUARDIAN" (Selig), May 8.—The author and producer of this picture is Lem Parker. He deserves credit for it as a producer, but very little as author. In sets, acting and all that goes to make a scenario effective it is fine, but what is the use in telling the same old story so often? Of course, there will be many who will see it for the first time and to them it will be a good offering. Hobart Bosworth plays a guardian of a girl (Amy Trask), with whom he has fallen in love. There's another man (Wheeler Oakman). But Amy thinks it her duty to marry her guardian. He finds how the wind is setting and wisely withdraws.

"THE PROPHECY" (Essanay), May 7.—In the first scene, a gypsy gives an enigma poem to a girl, Dorothy Phillips, and the picture shows how it comes true. This is the right way to start such a picture, but, in its development, it is needlessly obscure. This comes about chiefly through the awkward way the characters are introduced. The baker, the cobbler, and the farmer don't seem like natural members of a community. Then, when the lover, Allen Holuber, comes, the girl's father has just been accused of murdering the cobbler and it is not a time for her to begin a love affair with a stranger, who is not really in the story yet. The photography is fair and the offering has considerable merit.

"BELLE BOYDE, A CONFEDERATE SPY" (Selig), May 7.—Pretty girls, men in uniform, troops in motion and very exciting battle scenes are found in this as in every perfect girl-spy story. As for the story itself, there is not much difference between one and the next. The photography is only so so. Oscar Eagle produced it from the script of C. Nixon. Winnifred Greenwood and Charles Clary play the romantic leads. H. Lounsdale is General Jackson.

"THE CROOKED BANKERS" (Patheplay), May 7.—A melodrama that is not convincing, but almost all the old accepted qualities are found in it and it will find plenty to take pleasure in it. The photography is good.

"THE DEER SLAYER" (Vitagraph), May 7.—This two-part feature offering has been reviewed at length in THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD. See page 31, issue of April 5, 1913.

"THE ALIEN" (Kalem), May 7.—A patriotic picture in very truth. It's a pleasure to commend it, not only because it's a better offering than most, but because it has a sincerer kind of patriotism than usual with so-called patriotic pictures. We have seen no other picture that was like it, and if the audience doesn't applaud at the end, it will be because it is a very cold kind of audience. The story is simple, but it contrasts the quality of justice in a republic with that in a kingdom and ends with a couple of scenes showing the alien convinced of the value of this country's ideals, raising the flag and repeating the oath of allegience such as is taught in schools. This is flashed on the screen. It makes a bully kind of end. The alien is played by R. Vignola, his wife by Alice Hollister, their children, by Doris and George Hollister. James Rose plays the friend.

"DISCIPLINING DAISY" (Vitagraph), May 7.—A breezy, almost spicy picture that doesn't transgress the rules of good taste. It was popular with the audience, there is no doubt of that. The story is clear, fresh and may instruct. Cutie has a role in it, but it deals chiefly with Daisy, a girl at college and shows how she is cured of borrowing clothes from girl friends. It is the better for being a bit daring, because it has been carefully produced and doesn't offend. Wilfred North produced it from the script of Winifred Warner. Dorothy Kelly and Wallie Van have the leads.

"AUNTY AND THE GIRLS" (Edison), May 7.—A very slight picture whose comic feature is Alice Washburn in the rig of a cowboy. It is clearly photographed and amused.

"WITH THE ASSISTANCE OF 'SHEP'" (Edison), May 7.—On the same reel, is this comedy which made a hit. It is by Nolan Gane, and features a shepherd dog that is truly the best animal we have ever seen in pictures except, perhaps, "Rowdy." The natural way that Shep helps the lovers and the seemingly logical, but wholly unexpected things that he does makes true comedy and a very laughable offering. Alice Washburn is aunty who won't let Elsie MacLeod, her niece, and Raymond McKee get married. The photography is clear and it makes a pretty picture as well as a good comedy.

"THE HEART OF VALESKA" (Edison), May 12.—An interesting, romantic tale of Russia pictured in simple backgrounds that serve very well although not truly Russian. It is not tensely dramatic, but is clear at all times and flows convincingly enough to hold the attention from the first. Marion Nesbitt plays Valeska with dignity and charm, but without real fire. Marc MacDermott plays a count who falls in love with her. He is the most interesting figure in the picture. Bigelow Cooper as a tax gatherer, makes a distinct, convincing impression as do Valeska's parents, Mrs. Bechtel and J. Sturgeon. Richard Ridgley plays Valeska's first sweetheart. The photography is clear enough, but might have been much improved upon. The author, M. M. Katterjohn, deserves credit for an entertaining story which has been well produced.

"THE ADVENTURE OF AN HEIRESS" (Kalem), May 12.—A pretty picture with a good deal in its atmosphere that is well-bred, even distinguished; the acting of one of the lesser characters made it fall from this peculiar grace at one or two points. The story is freshly conceived, new and interesting. The leading role, the heiress, is a fortunate one for Alice Joyce and she fills it very pleasingly. Tom Moore, as her father's secretary, plays the other romantic role which the story makes secondary and conventional. Isabel Vernon, as the girl's mother is not always sure in her drawing and Richard Purdon, the father, though natural, is also conventional at most times. The offering stands on its story, its pretty scenes and its fine photography and will be much liked by all kinds.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY No. 20," May 12.—A very full number with good items covering a wide range of subjects. One could wish that the photography were as clear in all the items as in the best.

"THE KING AND THE COPPER" (Biograph), May 12.—An amusing extravaganza which gives the Biograph players a chance to do clever acting. It seemed to take with the audience and we heard a good deal of laughter. A South Sea Island sketch, it has a cannibal king and his chief officer of state whose robe of dignity is a copper's coat with badge and helmet.

"A RAINY DAY" (Biograph), May 12.—A farce with a touch of vulgarity to it, but that took very strongly with the audience, there being much laughter from beginning to end. Edward Dillon plays a clubman who dresses up in woman's clothes and goes out for a walk in the rain. He has white stockings and even the blind man follows to "rubber." It was taken on a real rainy day.

"THE POST-IMPRESSIONISTS" (Selig), May 12.—Maibelle Hekes Justice has written a clever satire on the new forms of art and Hardee Kirkland has produced it in a very creditable way so that it makes an amusing offering that seemed to make a hit with the audience. Cubism has been well advertised and widely made fun of and this picture comes to an audience ready to understand and appreciate it. Such a picture makes the average spectator feel that he is particularly clever; for it is a highbrow subject that all can enjoy. Jack Nelson and Winifred Greenwood play the romantic leads ably supported by Frank Weed and Lafayette McKee as the fathers. There are some very good scenes; well thought out and showing good composition.

"LUCKY COHEN" (Lubin), May 12.—A laughable little farce by Mae Hotely. It is not wholly new, but has enough freshness to make it entertaining. The audience seemed to like it.

"A TEN ACRE GOLD BRICK" (Lubin), May 12.—A farce that made laughter and seemed to be liked. It deals with a rural pair who are swindled by being persuaded to buy a few acres of sand in Florida, but who are too crafty to stay swindled. It is amusingly acted. The author is E. W. Sargent. Both offerings on the split reel were produced by A. Hotaling.

"THE WRONG PAIR" (Vitagraph), May 12.—We have had this situation a good many times and in a good many ways. For instance, we have had the picture where a horse was lost and advertised for with the result that the yard was full of horses; we have had two in which it was umbrellas; several in which it was dogs; one Vitagraph in which it was "the wrong couple," etc. Nevertheless, it made laughter.

"THE GRAND CANYON" (Vitagraph), May 12.—A picture of the mountains with a few views of the great canyon. The photography lacks quality and it is not very picturesque.

"MR. HORATIO SPARKINS" (Vitagraph), May 13.—A clever, amusing comedy picture from Dickens. In quality, its humor is first-class and the players have not failed in "putting it over" to us or making us see all the fun. Perhaps the film is too long, but the good parts of it make up for the dry parts. Courtenay Foote plays Sparkins, a dandy by night, a clerk by day, and makes a true and fresh character of him. He deserves credit. The other leading character, the spinster daughter of Squire Malderton, whom her parents have found it hard to marry off, is played by Flora Finch, a good actress, but hardly fitted to get all there was of fun from her part of the situation, except perhaps in the last scene where she and her mother find Horatio waiting at the counter of the linen draper's shop. Van Dyke Brooke produced it and much credit is due him. Seen later with proper music, it was a hundred per cent. better.

"A WOMAN OF IMPULSE" (Patheplay), May 13.—A picture made in France that, from the viewpoint of art, is the most commendable of today's releases. Its feature, from the popular point of view, is a stag hunt over the meadows of France and in which we see the stag in the water being followed by the pack and then the stag with his big antlers, at bay. It has some of the best chosen backgrounds that we have seen in days. Its characters are true and full of atmosphere. Some of its photography is glorious, most of it is pretty. The story is made clear, is simple, has a pleasant sentiment and holds the attention well.

"THE JAPANESE DAGGER" (Eclipse), May 12.—A two-part picture that seems to justify its length, though it is not a true masterpiece but an entertaining offering. The situation creates at once a feeling of mystery and dread. The producer has cleverly hightened this by bringing in one of Italy's biggest battleships as the ship of the hero, a naval lieutenant. The sets are carefully made and fit the story, though the photography, while clear, is not, on the whole, as picturesque as might be. The hero has brought home from Japan a dagger with a queer inscription warning everyone against taking the weapon out of Japan lest evil come of it. He doesn't believe there is any need to worry, but when he is at home, a very tragic misfortune befalls him; he kills his sweetheart, thinking her a burglar—the dagger is at his hand and he stabs her with it. The story doesn't hold equally well all through, but it holds.

"THE PADRE'S STRATEGY" (Lubin), May 13.—A romantic melodrama that is good entertainment, because of its situation which is full of adventure. It might have been much more effectively written. It is a good offering from what it has, but it might have had much more. That padre is a true character; the others are commendable figures, although part of the bandit's crowd looks like the real thing. The padre's strategy helps a girl's lover rescue her from the cabin of a bandit who has carried her off. His method seems new. W. Melville is author and producer. E. Nevins plays the padre; Dolly Larkin, the girl; C. Von Schiller, her lover; J. Holland, the bandit; and Henry King, his lieutenant. The photography is clear. The picture is not artistic.

"THE RANCH GIRL'S PARTNER" (Essanay), May 13.—A romantic picture by Arthur Mackley's company that will furnish entertainment. It has an acceptable heroine (she ought to watch her facial expression a bit more cloosely; she can improve a bit in that); it has some perfect moonlight scenes; the old, artificial, but acceptable, situations, and a touch of real romance. The photography, in the day scenes, could have been clearer.

"THE PROPHECY" (Edison), May 13.—A melodramatic picture that entertains mostly because it is full of pleasant reminiscences. These are not so clearly of any definite, good play as of good times in general at the show. It reminds one of plays not of life, but in spite of its artificiality, is pleasing. The people (in English high life), have very queer manners, but interest. Mary Fuller, authoress and leading woman, plays a conventional, but attractive coquette who nearly breaks a little love affair between two juveniles, pretty Marion Weeks and R. Ridgley. The photography is commendable.

"LIEUTENANT JONES" (Selig), May 13.—The heroine's father is a paymaster at an army post and had lost at cards beyond his means to a captain (A. E. Garcia). This officer is jealous of the girl's (Kathlyn Williams), affection for the lieutenant (Harold Lockwood). This situation is worked up into a melodrama in which we find the lieutenant overhearing the officer ask the paymaster to steal from the pay-roll. In the next act, the officer overhears the hero persuading the paymaster not to take the money and he, at once, brings the colonel who catches the hero replacing the box of bills in the safe. So the hero is compelled to pretend he is guilty to save the girl's father. The Indians help the hero to rehabilitate himself and then we have the ending full of justice rather than of law. This sort of thing takes well still, a good many like it. The photography is very acceptable.

"THE PAYMASTER" (Lubin), May 10.—The well-used situation, in which burglars force a mother to tell where her absent husband has hidden the pay-roll pouch, will be found again in this melodrama. There is always a large part of the audience that enjoys these melodramas, and it liked this, although it is not especially artistic. Clara Williams plays the woman with her usual intelligent understanding of what is wanted in such cases. The photographs are clear. A good offering for the right audience.

"PUTTIN' IT OVER ON PAPA" (Patheplay), May 10.—There were several hearty laughs in this rural farce-burlesque; but, between them, there were some very sleepy places in which were heard rattling of newspapers. Paul Panzer plays Papa, a farmer who forbids his daughter (Pearl Sendelar), to marry a "dude." We don't remember seeing any elopement like this one in any picture before and found it amusing. Rose Gore, as Mother, adds something to the fun. The offering would have been a hundred per cent. better in half the length.

"THE HOUSE OF DARKNESS" (Biograph), May 10.—The "house" referred to in the title is lunacy which metaphorically is considered as a dwelling. There is some story, but it is slight and, as for ourselves, it left us absolutely cold. Because from the arrangements, stage setting, and the action that went before, it was too plainly shown, at the climax, what the outcome was going to be. There is but little suspense. The photography is without much quality. The players had no real chance, but furnish the offering's sole interest.

"AN ACCIDENTAL ALIBI" (Edison), May 10.—That this old style, amateurish script is pretty well acted keeps the offering from dragging too much, but we don't see how it can possibly interest any one very deeply. For a moment, it gets a bit of added interest from its showing of a motion picture company at work. John Adair, the author, should have credit for thinking up the scheme of having Joe's face seen in the motion picture and so getting his alibi and Augustus Phillips, Bessie Learn and Robert Brower, the actors, should have credit. The photography is without quality. If producers of pictures could only hear what is said about them! Not about this one in particular, but about most of them. There is something wrong.

"THE SEA MAIDEN" (Vitagraph), May 10.—The situation used in this offering is old and not convincing. As it is worked out here, it offers some views of Santa Catalina Island and adds a little that is salacious and much that is vulgar.

"THE RIVER PIRATES" (Kalem), May 10.—That nest of the river pirates, in which most of this picture is set, is romantic and well worth while. The picture also has some dandy river views, among which, one of those old, back-kicking steamers, loaded with cotton, is attacked by the pirates in a big rowboat. The action doesn't drag and develops a conventional, but acceptable love story effectively. It makes, on the whole, a pretty good offering for all kinds of tastes.

"ALKALI IKE'S MOTHER-IN-LAW" (Essanay), May 10.—In the early scenes, Alkali needs a mother-in-law who can trounce him well and soon, to the spectator's contentment, she comes. We like her discipline of the brute, but he turns, gets hold of a book on hypnotism and she is powerless. As soon as the book comes into the picture, its quality changes and the fun almost drops out of it; it becomes burlesque. Yet the audienc eseemed to like all of it, liked the way mother "comes back." The camera work is clear.

Independent

"THE SERGEANT'S DAUGHTER" (Dragon), May 19.—A two-part story of West Point and of army post life, but mostly of life at the Point. It's a melodrama of the older kind, but has a quality that will make it popular with the many and it is fortunate in the two leading men who, when the story opens, are cadets at the Academy. One of these is played by Earl Foxe and the other by Charles Chester. The girl is the sergeant's daughter, with whom the boys are in love. Fay Perry takes the role and is personally a perfect heroine. The sergeant, Frank Purdon, is acceptable in that role. There is a fine atmosphere of real life at the Point in the picture due to its having been taken at the place and produced to be convincingly military. The backgrounds are the Academy buildings and one scene shows the cadets at drill.

"THE OUTCAST" (Dragon), May 12.—This offering makes an appeal that is not strong, chiefly because it is not all convincing. There is clear photography with interesting backgrounds and the acting is fair, but the scenario is weak. The plot is conventional and gives us a heroine and hero who contrive to get into difficulties that are artificial enough.

"DAD'S ORDERS" (Solax), May 14.—A farcical love story in which the hero, played by Fronie Fronholtz, disguised as his uncle, marries the heroine, played by Marian Swayne. The father wants her to marry the older man, but even the girl doesn't see through the disguise. The photography is clear.

"THE PAST FORGIVEN" (Solax), May 9.—The heroine of this picture has been a white slave, but has been rescued by a Salvation lassie and sent to a ranch where a cowboy has married her. The man who once owned her appears and her hubsand learns the truth. He sends her out of the house and the picture shows us how the reconciliation is brought about. Marian Swayne and Darwin Karr play the leads pleasingly. The photography is clear, though the subject can not be called fresh.

"THE PERIL OF THE PAST" (Gaumont), Special.—Taking its departure from a situation that has been used very often, this picture, a three-part offering. contains much first-class dramatic material that is both human and new. The story is very effectively developed, and being strongly acted, makes a serviceable feature, one that justifies its length. The average spectator will find in it situations with which he is familiar along with the new parts, but he will also find some of the delightfully interesting backgrounds for which the Gaumont Company is famous. It was taken, in part, near Biarritz and shows some views along the docks that are full of merit. One series of scenes is worthy of special notice. This gives us a fresh and very dramatic development of the "third-degree" picture and in it jealousy is deliberately fostered in a woman who has been her husband's accomplice in a murder, so that she will "give away" the secret in her wrath where hidden detectives will overhear. All these scenes are finely artistic and very effective.

"THE RANCH STENOGRAPHER" (Frontier), May 17.—A brisk comedy offering, with some hearty laughs in it. It is full of Western ginger and has some original ideas in it. The scene in which the girl stenographer collides with a barbed wire fence and has to be rescued by two men is very funny. A good offering.

"THE TOURIST AND THE FLOWER GIRL" (Imp), May 29.—A plot with rather greater possibilities than were realized here. The girl discovers that the interesting young man loves flowers. She poses as a flower girl and sells him posies. The love affair was so badly rushed that it spoiled the effect somewhat, giving too much of a farcical turn for comedy of this sort. The young man later poses as a butler in order to see the girl.

"THE HONOR OF THE REGIMENT" (Bison), May 31. A very entertaining two-reel production, with war in the Philippines as the leading feature. The first scenes are taken at the Presidio in San Francisco, where the love story develops. The plot is a good one and the observer is led along with close attention as the two captains fight to win the hand of the colonel's daughter. There is treachery and under handed dealing on the part of the unworthy aspirant. The part of Molly, the girl he has wronged, is well played. The natives, in skirmish fights with the soldiers, furnish some good entertainment; the ambush of the soldiers was well devised. A strong release.

"THE UNKNOWN" (Victor), May 9.—Though old as a dramatic conception, this film is so admirably acted and directed that it will rank high among the week's productions. The scenes in which the convict becomes reunited with his daughter, now grown and a mother, bring tears to the eyes. There is a sincere note throughout the whole production which makes a strong demand on the sympathies of the observer. James Kirkwood is both director and leading man, with Gertrude Robinson as the daughter. A fine offering.

"ANIMATED WEEKLY, No. 61" (Universal), May 7.—An entertaining number with many interesting scenes, among the best of which were the prize babies in the Denver show, sand-yachting in England, hydroplane tests at Monaca, racing at Aldershot and President Wilson turning on the 80,000 lights of the new Woolworth building. King Baggot is featured at the close.

"HAWAIIAN LOVE" (Champion), May 12.—A story located in the Hawaiian Islands, with some good scenic effects to help along its none too strong plot. The captain of a trading vessel takes a native girl away from her Island lover. Their vessel is wrecked and they swim to shore. Later he sells the girl to a Chinaman. But a just fate awaits him, as he falls from a cliff at the end. The photography in this might have been better in places.

"THE MODERN SNARE" (American), May 24.—This reel contains a good example of psychological drama. The man who shot another is told to answer the telephone. A voice says, "Gus, this is your dead man." The would-be assassin flees in terror, but later is recaptured. This situation gives interest to the film, but no reason was given to show why Gus was suspected of being the criminal.

"HER INNOCENT MARRIAGE" (American), May 19.—This film shows us the manner in which a young wife who has left her husband, after a quarrel, is befriended by a stranger and taken to the home of his parents. They like her and the young man learns to love her. She thinks her husband is killed in a railroad wreck and marries her lover. But the first husband returns and shoots the second husband. The acting and photographic effects in this are good, but we could not see much point to the story.

"THE SEA DOG" (Broncho), May 21.—A pretty two-reel story of the seashore, revolving about the love of an old salt for his grandchild. The boy comes to play with his grandfather in his old ship house until the parents forbid it because of the seaman's rough companions. Some good character work and pleasing comedy are introduced. Later the child pines and becomes ill because he cannot see his grandfather. When the old man learns of this he rushes to the child and everything winds up well. An entertaining number.

"THE MARBLE HEART" (Thanhouser), May 13.—This two-reel offering tells a story of a sculptor who loved the woman who posed for his masterpiece. The opening part is given a modern setting, with James Cruze as the sculptor, Raphael. Flo La Badie appearing as a homeless girl he has befriended, loves him devotedly, but he cares only for the model, played by Marguerite Snow. He has a dream, in which he sees himself and all the other characters in a previous incarnation, the scenes being laid in Rome. Through this dream he finally understands that his model has a marble heart. This so affects him that he smashes his statue of her and dies broken hearted. This is well played, the costumes are attractive and it has, altogether, considerable appeal.

"CALAMITY ANNE'S PARCEL POST" (American), May 22.—The woman with the burro here appears as distributor and collector of parcel post packages. She manages to capture an outlaw, having discovered him while chasing a parcel post rooster. There are some amusing moments in this.

"AFTER THE MASSACRE" (Reliance), May 17.—Another very fair offering of life on the plains. The girl is taken captive by Indians after the massacre of the wagon train occupants. The hero escapes and later learns her whereabouts from a locket dropped by an Indian, which he had given her. The Indian girl helps her away from the camp of the tribe and there is an interesting fight between cowboys and Indians on the broad plains and in a shallow river bed. Conventional but full of action.

"EARLY OKLAHOMA" (Reliance), May 21.—This picture has decided merit as a picture of the uncertain life led by early settlers on the plains. It has been done before in different ways, but there is an honest thrill in this when the savages divide the little family and set the prairie grass on fire. The children hide safely in a well and at the end the family is reunited. A convincing picture of frontier life.

"THE ETERNAL SACRIFICE" (Reliance), May 12.—A girl who lives in a basement with a tough gang, rebels against her environment and leaves the place on foot. She is hired as a domestic at a fine country estate. All goes well till the gang shows up and plans to rob the place. The girl brings the police, but is accidentally killed by one of the gang at the close. Not a very fresh type of a story, though well sustained.

"A TEXAS FEUD" (Reliance), May 28.—A story of sweethearts whose parents are at war. The minister patches up the warfare temporarily, but it almost breaks out again when the hero is accidentally shot by one of the opposite clan. The wood scenes and general out-door effects are good, but the photography is a little dim in places.

"THE BIG BOSS" (Reliance), May 14.—A two-reel offering, dealing with graft. The big boss wants to marry the contractor's daughter, but she loves a handsome young newspaper reporter. The story unfolds in a rather obvious manner. The hero sets a dictograph and catches the boss in an incriminating conversation. The excitement comes in when the boss suddenly discovers the dictograph and rushes up the fire escape to where the hero is located and engages him in a hand to hand struggle. This scene is very interesting. Muriel Ostriche and Irving Cummings play the young couple and George Siegman appears as the boss. The photography is clear.

"THE RIVALS OUTWITTED" (Majestic), May 18.—A slight story without much general appeal in it. The scenes are laid in a gymnasium. Several lady athletes fall in love with the professor in charge, but another wins him.

"THE OYSTER" (Majestic), May 18.—This, on same reel with above, gives us a scientific insight into the life and habits of the succulent bivalve. Very interesting and instructive.

"SHEP, THE HERO" (Majestic), May 20.—A good film story with a shepherd dog acting as hero. The dog does his part well and the picture is sure to please an audience. The photography is clear and smooth and there is quite a little thrill in the situation where the dog stops a train by barking and saves the little girl's life. A good offering.

"HY MAYER'S MAGIC HAND" (Imp), May 24.—A short reel, in which Hy Mayer, the New York Time's comic man, does some rapid fire illustrations. Each of the comic drawings has a good point to it.

"A MINE AND A MARATHON" (Nestor), May 23.—Melodrama of a pronounced sort. A runner has to reach a telegraph office ahead of two men pursuing on horseback. The men are but a hundred yards behind him as he reaches the operator. Exhausted, he dictates twenty words and the operator writes them before the pursuers enter. The picture cannot be said to be strong.

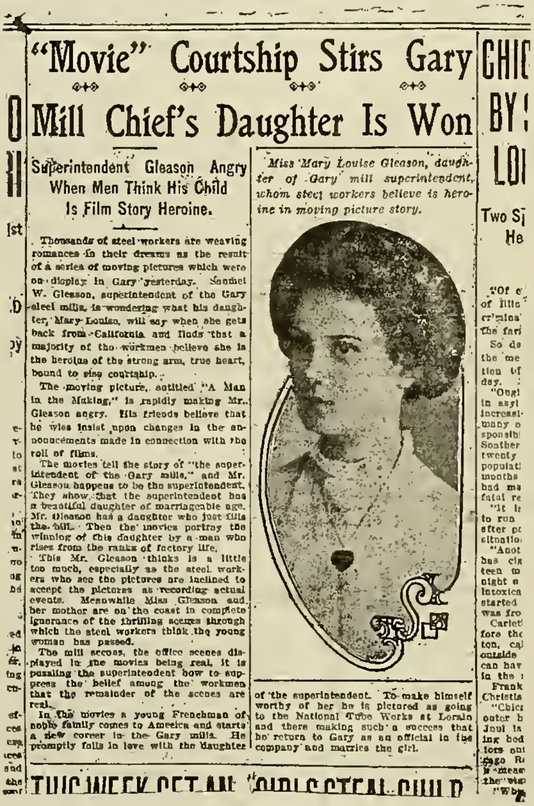
"A CRY FROM THE DUMB" (Imp), May 15.—Good drama. The theme is of a girl's power of speech lost through fright restored when under great excitement and anguish. Jane Gail plays the role of the older girl and plays it charmingly. The scene of the struggle between the burglars and the lover who has come to the rescue might have been shortened a bit to advantage. There is quite a lot of knife. The direction of the picture is finished, craftsmanlike.

A BIT OF THE "YELLOW."

To the Editor Moving Picture World, 17 Madison Ave., N. Y.

Dear Sir: I want to bring your attention to an instance of yellow journalism by a Chicago "yellow." The story is attached.

The moving picture was taken at the steel works, is a so-called industrial film, and illustrates the operation of the various safety devices. There is a very slight story in it to keep the spectator's interest strong. In the first place, the correct title was "An American in the Making." Of course, the "yellow" did not care to get the title of the picture correct. Neither Mr. Gleason nor his daughter "insisted on changes in the announcements made in connection with" this film, and the film does not tell "the story of the superintendent of the Gary Mills," and it does not "show that the superintendent has a beautiful daughter of marriageable age" and "portray the winning of this daughter by a man who rises from the ranks of factory life."



"Movie" Courtship Stirs Gary

Mill Chief's Daughter Is Won

Superintendent Gleason Angry When Men Think His Child Is Film Story Heroine.

Thousands of steel workers are weaving romances in their dreams as the result of a series of moving pictures which were on display in Gary yesterday. Samuel W. Gleason, superintendent of the Gary steel mills, is wondering what his daughter, Mary Louise, will say when she gets back from California and finds that a majority of the workmen believe she is the heroine of the strong arm, true heart, bound to rise courtship.

The moving picture, entitled "A Man in the Making," is rapidly making Mr. Gleason angry. His friends believe that he will insist upon changes in the announcements made in connection with the roll of films.

The movies tell the story of "the superintendent of the Gary mills," and Mr. Gleason happens to be the superintendent. They show that the superintendent has a beautiful daughter of marriageable age. Mr. Gleason has a daughter who just fills the bill. Then the movies portray the winning of this daughter by a man who rises from the ranks of factory life.

This Mr. Gleason thinks is a little too much, especially as the steel workers who see the pictures are inclined to accept the pictures as recording actual events. Meanwhile Miss Gleason and her mother are on the coast in complete ignorance of the thrilling scenes through which the steel workers think the young woman has passed.

The mill scenes, the office scenes displayed in the movies being real, it is puzzling the superintendent how to suppress the belief among the workmen that the remainder of the scenes are real.

In the movies a young Frenchman of noble family comes to America and starts a new career in the Gary mills. He promptly falls in love with the daughter of the superintendent. To make himself worthy of her he is pictured as going to the National Tube Works at Lorain and there making such a success that he return to Gary as an official in the company and marries the girl.

Miss Mary Louise Gleason, daughter of Gary mill superintendent, whom steel workers believe is heroine in moving picture story.

As a matter of fact the film merely tells the story of an immigrant who gets a job in the steel works and is enabled in time to buy a little house and marry a young school teacher. The whole attached article is an injustice to Mr. Gleason and his daughter, who were not mentioned even remotely in the film. Very truly yours,

Thanhouser Film Corporation, C. J. Hite, Pres.

BIG DEMAND FOR "ALKALI" IKE DOLLS.

The department stores all over the country have been writing letters to the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, requesting them to ship dolls on hobby horses of "Alkali" Ike at once. Exhibitors cannot wait, according to the surplus mail the Essanay people have been receiving. Send in your letters and place your orders early. Exhibitors may buy these wonderful novelties for $13.50 a dozen. Dolls are an exact reproduction of Augustus Carney.

"COMPACT MARVEL" CAMERA MAKING GOOD.

The scheme of taking motion pictures of local events received quite an impetus with the advent of the "Compact Marvel," a little camera designed especially for use by exhibitors who were desirous of injecting local interest into their exhibitions. This camera was made by the Williamson Company of London, upon the suggestion of Mr. Arthur G. Whyte of the Whyte-Whitman Company, New York. Mr. Whyte's idea was a camera of reasonable price that would be as efficient for all practical purposes as the larger sized professional camera, and yet not be considered an amateur affair, or a toy. The Williamson Company set to work and devised a fine little instrument that is the equal of their regular professional camera in every way except in size. The workmanship on it is of the most superior kind and the results are identical to those of the professional machine, the only difference being that the "Compact Marvel" will not hold quite as much film. It will take 200 feet as against 350 feet taken by the professional camera. The "Compact Marvel" sells at $150., which places it within reach of every enterprising exhibitor who is looking for live stuff for his theater. There is no end of local interest that can be worked up in this way and any theater that makes a specialty of local pictures is sure to become a very popular house in short order.

Since the first appearance of this instrument, last January, many exhibitors have bought them, and the Whyte-Whitman Co. is in receipt of many testimonial letters as to its efficiency. Mr. W. H. C. Dudley an exhibitor of Americus, Ga., is very enthusiastic in his praise of it; also Mr. Fred P. Dean, an exhibitor of Hartford, Connecticut.

UNIVERSAL CITY NOTES.

Grace Cunard, leading woman with Francis Ford in his pictures of Spanish-American life, is candidate for City Assessor in the forthcoming election in Universal City on May 20. Miss Cunard has even surprised her friends, who are appreciative of her versatility, by the vigor with which she has entered upon her campaign. The electors with sporting proclivities are freely laying bets that she will be successful in her quest for office. Miss Cunard spent a number of years on the stage, and has been in important roles in Dora Thorne, East Lynne, Princess of Patches, and other productions.

Gwendolen Brooks, who recently made her debut in moving pictures as a member of Lincoln J. Carter's company, has for the past few years been playing ingenue parts with Douglas Fairbanks, and under the Savage, Harris and Brady managements. Miss Brooks is a daring rider, a skillful swimmer, and all-round athletic girl.

"Love, Life and Liberty" and "The Grand Old Flag" are two of the new series of Cuban pictures that the Universal forces have just completed. Both were directed by Henry McRae and enlist the talents of Phyllis Gordon, Charles Bartlett, Roy Watson, Sherman Bainbridge, Ralph Cummings and Harry Edmondson. Several hundred extra people were also used.

Gardner Clifford, the young heir of William Clifford, and the youngest moving picture actor in the world, was the recipient of a cradle from the boys of Troop A the other day at Universal City. Upon the birth of Master Clifford on March 17, J. A. Morante, of the military company, started a subscription to get the baby a suitable present, and the gift finally took the form of a cradle, which was accepted for the little fellow by his parents in a clever little poem.

Little Gardner Clifford made his first appearance as a picture-actor in "The Last Roll Call," and like his daddy before him, under the direction of Milton J. Fahrney.

VERMONT HEALTH BOARD FEATURES PICTURES.

The Board of Health of the State of Vermont, in its quarterly bulletin issued March 1, 1913, calls particular attention to its use of motion picture apparatus and films in its fight against tuberculosis. It owns a Power's No. 6A projector and a Brush electric lighting set, the latter for use in towns where there is no high voltage electric current, which outfit is taken from town to town. Exhibitions are given with such pictures as "The Awakening of John Bond," "A Curable Disease," "Hope," "The Man Who Learned," and "The Capture of Fort Ticonderoga." Vermont is probably the first state to send the educational picture to every mountain hamlet within its borders.

"The Dead Secret"

Three-Reel Monopol Release.

By George Blaisdell.

THE illusion's the thing! It is the best test, the last test, in the determination of the depth of the spell under the clutch of which a beholder follows the unfolding of a story. When one is aware that one woman is portraying the dual role of mother and daughter, and the appearance of each on the screen is so skillfully, so realistically, ordered that at the supreme moment of the confrontation of one with the other you are from a firm belief in the single identity of each abruptly brought to earth by "How's that for double exposure?" from a phlegmatic operator the break is more than a shock. To a more or less seasoned reviewer there is in the dispelling of the illusion a measure of humiliation.

N LEONARD IN

Scene from "The Dead Secret" (Monopol).

Such was the experience of the writer in following the fine work of Marion Leonard in the adaptation of Wilkie Collins' "Dead Secret"—not at one point alone, but at two. The story is one which for high results depends much on the care with which the camera is directed. Surely there has been able direction here. We have double, triple and even quadruple exposures. This seems to be one department of picture-making which many directors prefer to avoid, as extra exposures entail time and calculation and, of course, expense.

MARION LEONARD IN THE DEA

Scene from "The Dead Secret" (Monopol).

Miss Leonard shows in her interpretation of these two roles that there has been no lessening in the quality of her art—that there is an increasing depth of appeal. As the carefree daughter she is charming; but as the mother, in the beginning with the fatherless infant and later struggling to protect the child grown to womanhood from the clutches of the blackmailer, she is at the best. There is serious work aplenty, yet at no time is it overdone. There is pathos, but never a trace of bathos.

"The Dead Secret" is not what may be described as straight drama, though it would easily hold on its dramatic merit, entirely apart from the weird phases lent to the story by the machinations of the physician-hypnotist and the uncanny manifestations of his occult powers, aided by the Hindu girl and the crystal globe. There are many strong situations. The best of all are those where the mother and daughter meet and converse, especially at the conclusion. Others are where the mother with babe in arms is forced from home in the driving rain; where she meets by the church walls the delirious mother who has just lost her infant; where she determines to leave her child with the motherless one; the discovery by the daughter of the remarkable resemblance to herself of the aid to the hypnotist at the church exhibition; and the many scenes showing the attempts of the blackmailer to secure possession of the fortune left to the daughter in the belief she is the rightful inheritor.

The cast is not a large one. It gives good support. Especially worthy of mention are the physician and the mother who in delirium claims the child of the outcast woman and later denies kinship with it. The photography is a feature of this picture. It is excellent. One of the feats, wherein the hypnotist is shown with a miniature figure of the mother in one hand and the daughter in the other, is said to be the first accomplishment of its kind in this country.

"HIAWATHA" IN THE OPEN AIR.

Mr. F. E. Moore, the producer of the all-Indian motion picture masque "Hiawatha," has arranged to bring the Indian players to New York this summer, to give the play at Fieldston, near Van Cortlandt Park, under the auspices of the Women's Municipal League. Fieldston is a short walk from the 242nd Street Station of the Subway, and Mr. Moore says it offers greater possibilities than any place he has ever had. There is a beautiful little lake, with tall trees shading the seats, and when the Indians' wigwams are put up, the rocks will form a perfect background. This is the ninth season for the play, and following the run of the pictures at the Berkeley Theater, which has advertised the Indian Players, aided by the enthusiasm of the women who have it in charge, the engagement, which is indefinite, should prove the most successful "Hiawatha" has known. Those who have seen the pictures will be glad of an opportunity to see the actors in their parts and hear their songs.

June 9th has been chosen for the opening, and two performances will be given daily except Sunday, one at four and the other at 8:30. Special performances for children will also be arranged, at which Indian-made souvenirs will be distributed.

BOSTON POSTER BRANCH OPENED.

W. P. Allen, formerly of Cleveland and recently manager of the General Film Company's poster department at 71 West Twenty-third street, New York City, has this week opened a Boston branch of the poster department at 218 Commercial street. The quarters comprise 3,400 square feet of floor space. Business was begun with a complete stock of theater advertising. Mr. Allen, who is well and favorably known to the exhibitors of New York and Ohio, has had a wide business experience, makes friends quickly, and holds them.

General Manager Balsdon announces that another branch of the poster department will be opened in two weeks at 122 Pearl street, Buffalo.

The World desires to state that through a most regrettable error in our last issue the price of the artistically colored multiple-reel slides now being sold by the poster department was made to read 25 cents. It should, of course, have been 35 cents.

INDIANS ENTERTAIN AT KAY-BEE OFFICES.

On Thursday, May 8, fifteen full-blooded Indians in blankets, headdress and war paint were entertained at the offices of the New York Motion Picture Company, at Broadway and Forty-second street. The original Americans, who were appearing in the Buffalo Bill show, were entertained with coffee and cake and shown many photographs of the Indians working in the Kay-Bee and Broncho companies on the coast. Before their departure they were prevailed upon to do an impromptu war dance around the large library table in the office of Kessel & Baumann, to the immense entertainment of the office staff. The red men expressed their pleasure over the visit and extended an invitation to all present to come and see them in return.

"The Female Raffles"

Thrilling Detective Story Released by the United States Film Company.

PROBABLY the quickest finish ever given any division of stage production was the solar plexus delivered the popular priced melodrama by the moving picture. In two seasons thirty firms of producers went to the wall and this class of show was completely wiped from the boards.

Why? because the essence of drama is the punch. A dramatic punch is a blow on the intellect that makes the brain wake up and get busy. Light travels faster than sound; the eyes read faster than the ears; cut out the ears and smash in your punch through the eyes and the action is quicker. Quicker action caused the moving pictures to beat the melodrama, and there is more action, direct, jamming, gripping action in one foot of the film, "The Female Raffles," than in all the acts of all the "crook" dramas now running in the two dollar theaters of New York City.

"The Female es"
Scene from "The Female Raffles" (U. S.).

Ever since Cain beat up Abel, the man who puts over the first blow cops the belt in his division, and the picture which lands from the very start is bound to come out a winner. "The Female Raffles" lands right off the reel. It is the life-story of the Countess de Havez.

"The Female Raffles"
Scene from "The Female Raffles" (U. S.).

The secret service of the Russian government is the most effective in the world. Its best servants are beautiful women. Schooled from girlhood in the political service of the Czar, they travel about the capitals of the world enslaving diplomats and other government agents and wresting their secrets from them. But one of the greatest Russian beauties, the Countess de Havez, turned against her native land, and instead of joining the ranks of the beautiful detectives, proceeded to use the same methods in preying upon the wealthy Russians of noble birth.

Her sad story is fact, written imperishably on the pages of the Bertillion records; the tale of one of the most talented and lovely of women, who, through a spirit of adventure and revenge, baffled the experts of the European detective agencies, and was only brought to justice through the superior skill of an American detective.

BUSHMAN RETURNS TO ESSANAY.

At a recent meeting in New York with George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Mfg. Company of Chicago, Mr. Francis X. Bushman signed a new contract for a very large figure and will return to permanent stock work as leading man of the Essanay Eastern forces. After several successful seasons with the Essanay company, Mr. Bushman resigned last November to make a lecture tour of the principal eastern states and cities, appearing at the leading photoplay houses. His trip was a huge success both for himself and for the theaters in which he appeared. Mr. Bushman's lecture consisted of a general preliminary talk about moving pictures in the making, after which he elucidated a number of Essanay pictures in which he had played the leading part. His work was a decided success and besides packing the theaters where he was booked, the effects of his drawing power lasted for many days after he had gone, and gave a new life to some houses whose popularity had been divided.

Mr. Francis X. Bushman.

Mr. Bushman's trip covered New York State, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Tennessee, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, the Carolinas and Virginia. He still had many more dates to fill, but owing to his new arrangement with the Essanay Company these dates have been canceled. For the summer the Essanay acting company in which Mr. Bushman will play leads is to be located at Ithaca, N. Y., and it will be directed by Mr. "Pop" Wharton.

KING BAGGOT GOING TO EUROPE.

King Baggot, leading man of the Imp Films Company, informs us that himself and a number of other Universal players are booked to leave New York on the steamship Mauretania at 1 a. m., Wednesday, May 21, bound for London. It is said that these players are making the trip to take a special production and that they will be back in New York in about a month. The Screen Club is preparing a little send-off for Mr. Baggot, which will take place Tuesday night, May 20.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

MINNESOTA BEATS CENSOR BILL.

President Raths Says Legislators Are Fair and Inclined to Favor Existing National Board of Censorship.

A letter from Mr. Otto N. Raths, President of the Minnesota Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, to the Moving Picture World, from which extracts are herewith printed, gives further evidence that there is a strong sentiment throughout the country in favor of the method of censoring pictures as now exercised by the National Board of Censorship. President Raths also commends the Moving Picture World for its stand on the censorship question. Here is what he says:

> We exhibitors in Minnesota are particularly happy at this time, because our State legislature has adjourned without passing a single law affecting the motion picture industry. We did have a royal battle on the censorship question, but as Minnesota has some very fair-minded men in both branches of its legislature we succeeded in sidetracking the measure.
> We made determined effort to have the National Board of Censorship legalized in Minnesota, but this naturally was a very difficult matter. The members of the Committee on General Legislation of the Senate, however, to whom this censorship matter was referred, were satisfied beyond any reasonable doubt that the censorship question as administered by the National Board of Censorship was adequate. The League in Minnesota, agreed with them that we would keep tab and watch for any films not censored that might be brought into the State, and that we would assist in prosecuting the theater owners, or the exchanges handling film that was not censored, and that might be offensive to the community in which it would be shown.
> This will have a tendency to guarantee that every film that is displayed in this State will be censored by the National Board of Censorship.
> I want to congratulate the editor of The Moving Picture World for his decided stand on the censorship question. It seems to me that we might be able eventually to legalize a board of censorship that would be national in scope and yet not be a compulsory matter with the manufacturers. The result that might be gained by an organization of this kind is satisfactorily manifest as every manufacturer in the United States or in foreign countries whose films are exhibited in the United States, will naturally want to have that guarantee which we are now getting from the National Board of Censorship, and which in my judgment is impartial, fair and equitable and along the proper lines.

CALL FOR MINNESOTA CONVENTION.

The Second Annual Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Minnesota will be held at the Radisson Hotel, 7th and Nicollet Ave., in Minneapolis, Minnesota, on Tuesday and Wednesday, June 10th and 11th, 1913.

The session will open promptly at ten o'clock A. M.

The Minneapolis exhibitors who have this convention in charge assure us that every visiting exhibitor will be treated royally while in their city. They also aim to have exhibits by the film exchanges and manufacturers, and this fact alone should induce every exhibitor to attend this convention.

It seems a pity that there are exhibitors in this state who don't realize the value and importance of this organization. The work accomplished during the last session of the State Legislature in preventing regulation, drastic and prohibitive, against our industry should be evidence to you that this is a matter of business and not child's play.

If you are already a member of this organization see to it that your quarterly dues of $2.50 for the quarter ending July 1st, 1913, are in the hands of the Secretary, Mr. E. F. Purdy of Minneapolis. In spite of the fact that so much was accomplished for the League, and necessarily a great deal of money spent, yet some of the exhibitors are slow in looking after this small matter. If you are not a member make out a check payable to H. A. Sherman, Treasurer, for $7.50, which will include initiation fee of $5.00 and quarterly dues of $2.50 for your first quarter, then make up your mind to attend this convention. I am sure it will be a surprise to you, and a source of a great deal of information.

The ladies are especially invited, and a proper form of entertainment will be provided for them.

The State Legislature adjourned without passing a single bill effecting the motion picture business. You are now in a position, without fear or favor, to continue your business along the same lines as you have in the past, only that I assure you the League will do everything in its power to suppress uncensored films that might offend the community in which they are shown.

Mr. D. W. Chamberlain, Chairman of the Committee on Legislation, was untiring in his efforts to prevent any drastic laws being passed, and I want to take this opportunity to thank him, and also all the exhibitors throughout the state who so promptly responded to my previous letter in writing to their Senator and Representative.

Don't delay in becoming a member. Delay is fatal to you, and fatal to all the exhibitors. Don't be a laggard, and let the other fellow do all the work, and think you can rest secure in the fact that he is doing it. Be alive and wide awake, and do your share toward protecting the business in which you are engaged.

We are going to insist upon every theater in this State becoming a member of this League, so don't delay but write me at once, and above all, send me that check for $7.50.

With highest personal regards, I remain,

Yours very truly,
OTTO N. RATHS,
Pres. Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Minn.,
Gaiety Theater, St. Paul, Minn.

MICHIGAN CONVENTION.

President Carl Ray of the Michigan State League, has issued a call for a convention of that organization to be held at Saginaw, Mich., on Tuesday and Wednesday, June 10 and 11. Headquarters will be at the Vincent Hotel and the meetings of the convention will be held in the Auditorium. Every exhibitor in Michigan has been invited to attend, regardless of membership. Railroad fare is offered to those who haven't got it.

Important legislative matters will come before the convention, also, there will be election of officers and delegates chosen to the National Convention at New York City. Besides the business meeting there will be other things to take up the dull hours in the way of amusements. There has been a committee working in Saginaw making plans for the amusement of the exhibitors at the convention and a jolly good time is guaranteed, with plenty of music and plenty of good things to eat.

LAST CALL FOR PENNSYLVANIA CONVENTION.

The second annual state convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania will be held in the Continental Hotel in Philadelphia, on May 27th and 28th. Through the influence of Mr. Neff the Pennsylvania exhibitors have been able to secure the services of Mr. Clem Kerr, who will act as manager of the arrangements in general. Mr. Kerr has already achieved much prominence among the various branches of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Leagues throughout the country for his adaptability in organization as well as his managerial ability in handling these conventions. The phenomenal success of the convention at Dayton, Ohio, together with that of Columbus, Ohio and other states have secured for Mr. Kerr the plaudits of all who have seen his work. The National Convention held in Chicago, last year, also owes much of its phenomenal success to his unceasing efforts and careful guidance.

The Pennsylvania Convention points to be a most interesting one, owing to the fact that in this part of the United States the exhibitors have been contending, for some time, with many laws and orders enacted by Civic authorities through their ignorance of conditions, that has done much to stay the onward progress of this industry.

The Continental Hotel is one of the most ideally arranged hotels in the East to hold an affair of this kind, owing to its ample auditorium facilities. To one side of the room, which will be used for the Convention, and adjoining the same will be a still larger room which will be artistically decorated and divided into booths for the display of the by products of the motion picture industry.

The detail arrangements are in the hands of Mr. Clem Kerr, who will act as manager, Mr. E. A. Jefferies, who will be the General Chairman and Mr. J. Hesser Walraven, who will act as secretary of the convention. The comforts of the many out of town guests who will wish to attend will be attended to by a carefully selected entertainment committee headed by Mr. J. Weinrich and assisted by Mr. A. R. Cavanaugh and others, while the exhibits will be in charge of Messrs Walter Steumpfig and John Greenbaum.

That the convention will be a royal success is already well evidenced by the many inquiries from photoplay exhibitors, manufacturers, and also by the keen interest displayed by the Chamber of Commerce and Civic Authorities of Philadelphia.

Every exhibitor owes it to himself and to this business to arrange his affairs so that he can spend both days at this convention, May 27th and 28th. You'll learn many things of great interest to your business, and incidentally meet the finest and livest wire crowd of high class cinematography exponents you ever heard of. There will be no dull moments, every second of both days will be one grand affair after another—So Mr. and Miss Exhibitor arrange to be there, even if you have to close up your theater to do so. You will never regret the trip and the good time that will be accorded you and yours.

WASHINGTON EXHIBITORS ENDORSE NATIONAL BOARD.

At a meeting of the Exhibitors' League of the District of Coumbia, held at Washington, D. C., on May 1, the following resolution endorsing the National Board of Censorship was endorsed:

> Resolved, that this organization goes on record as being opposed to the exhibition of motion pictures not censored by the National Board of Censorship.
> Resolved, further, that this matter be taken up at the annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America to be held in New York City.
> Resolved, further, that a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the press.

A regulation promulgated by the Commissioners of the District forbidding the placing of easels, sign boards and posters in theater lobbies was discussed. It was decided that the regulation was a reasonable one as it tended to make the theater lobbies more sightly and lessened the fire risk.

A resolution putting the League on record as opposed to any contest, gift, lottery or advertising scheme in connection with picture theaters was adopted.

On the subject of the attendance of children several communications were presented from Mr. Mertz, Supervisor of Schools of the District and the following resolutions were adopted:

> Whereas, the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of the District of Columbia disapprove of the attendance of unaccompanied young children to public places of amusement in the evenings;
> Resolved, that no children under the age of fourteen years, unaccompanied by an adult, be admitted to any moving picture show after the hour of eight o'clock P. M.
> Resolved, further, that suitable cards be printed to this effect and placed in the box-offices of the theaters.

A. C. Joy, chairman of the committee on the relief of flood sufferers reported a balance of $105.00 on hand. On motion this sum was sent to President Neff for the relief of picture men in Indiana and Ohio affected by the floods.

A motion was adopted naming the President and National Vice-President, yet to be elected, as delegates to the national convention in New York and the sum of $50 was appropriated for their expenses.

READING EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Reading, Pa., was organized, with the election of the following officers: Ben H. Zerr, president; A. W. McKently, first vice-president; Charles S. Graul, second vice-president; Julius G. Hansen, secretary; Harry J. Schad, treasurer; Frank A. Gould, publicity agent.

The object of the organization was declared to be "For mutual protection and the uplift of cinematography." The majority of Reading exhibitors will attend the State convention in Philadelphia this month.

The list of charter members includes: Carr & Schad, of the Victor and Empire; Ben H. Zerr, Schuylkill Avenue picture house; Julius G. Hansen, Gem; Charles S. Graul, Star; Edward S. Leightham, Mecca; McKently and Drexel, Savoy; Frank A. Gould, publicity agent.

Question of Entertainment

New York Exhibitors Have Tackled the Task of Taking Care of Convention Visitors.

Making things pleasant for the several thousand visitors expected at the Convention and Exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, to be held during the week of July 7 to 12, at Grand Central Palace, New York City will be a man's job and no small one at that. Undoubtedly there will be a number of women and children present, the wives, daughters, sons and sweethearts of delegates, who will not be interested in the proceedings of the convention and who will have to be taken care of at times when their protectors are engaged. The New York Exhibitors realize that they must make things pleasant for the ladies and much of the plans for entertaining will be framed to that end.

President Trigger has made a happy choice in the person of William Hilkemeier for chairman of the Committee on Entertainment. He is proving himself to be a live wire. A careful canvass of every phase of the entertainment problem is being made by him and it is almost safe to say now that he will arrange a program that will satisfy the most critical. Already Chairman Hilkemeier has secured the use of the two palatial steam yachts owned by C. O. Baumann and Ad Kessell and they will be under his direction during the entire convention. Other good things in the way of boat and motor joy rides are promised. Here's to Hilkemeier.

MR. WILLIAM HILKEMEIER,
Chairman Entertainment Committee.

Mr. Richard G. Hollaman, the vice-president of the International Exposition, has gone to Bermuda for a pleasure trip. Mr. Hollaman is taking a very active interest in this Exposition in an advisory capacity to the committee. When he returns from his trip he will devote a great deal of his time to the perfecting of all the plans.

Two of the feature play manufacturers are arranging to theatake quarter time in the open theater so half of this is all that remains not contracted for. The work of building the theaters is progressing. Special arrangements have been made by the committee with the International Exposition Co., so that these theaters may be installed in the Grand Central Palace by the first of July.

Returns are coming in nicely for the $25.00 prize scenario competition, this does not close till the first of June so those who are thinking of competing may yet send their offering to the secretary Mr. F. E. Samuels, second floor of the German Bank Building, 14th St. & 4th Ave., N. Y. City.

MISSISSIPPI MEETING SUCCESSFUL.

A very successful meeting of exhibitors of the Mississippi League at Jackson, Miss., is reported by President H. A. Carleton. The convention was held in the Board of Trade assembly hall on May 8, and 20 new members were added to the rolls. After the business meeting there was an automobile tour of the city. In the evening the various theaters were visited and the day concluded with a dutch lunch at the Bon Ton cafe. A number of exchange men were present.

VIRGINIA CONVENTION CALLED.

Mr. C. E. Tandy, chairman of the convention committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Virginia, announces that the first annual convention of the Virginia State League will be held at the Jefferson Hotel, Richmond, Va., on May 23. L. R. Thomas of the West Virginia League has been working among the exhibitors of Virginia for several days arousing interest in the meeting. For information regarding the convention address C. E. Tandy, 711 East Broad street, Richmond, Va.

HUNGRY REALISM IN "ROBESPIERRE."

A hungry mob scene that needed no rehearsal to make it realistic was enacted during the production of the Imp three-reel feature, "Robespierre," under the direction of Herbert Brenon. A morning of strenuous mob scenes was followed by a call for luncheon. The delicatessen that furnishes lunches for the Imp studio had supplied the three Imp companies O. K., but the mob of 200 men, women and children had been overlooked. They are becoming peevish. Director Brenon, to save time, decided to go on with the mob scenes. The particular scene to follow was the mob's attack on the bakeshop, which was elaborately stocked with loaves of bread, rolls, cakes, pies and all kinds of pastry. When the mob got a peep at the foodstuffs—well, you can imagine what happened.

The whistle blew; the scene was on; the hungry mob made one grand onslaught. All well-armed with axes, clubs and stones, they smashed down the doors and crushed in the show window, climbed through and helped themselves in true mob fashion to everything edible in sight. Then picking up the provender, they scurried to all parts of the studio to lunch sumptuously.

HYDRO-AEROPLANE PICTURES OF PANAMA CANAL.

R. A. Duhem, a member of the firm of Duhem & Harter of San Francisco, Cal., called at the New York office of the Moving Picture World on Tuesday, May 13 and related an interesting story of his experiences on a recent trip across the Isthmus of Panama on R. G. Fowler's hydro-aeroplane. Mr. Duhem in company with Aviator Fowler arrived in New York on May 11, and shared the distinction of being on the first airship to cross the Isthmus. The trip was made on Sunday, April 27. Some time was consumed in sparring for a good wind before the flight across was made, but once started Mr. Fowler was just 55 minutes flying from Panama to Colon. Mr. Duhem operated the camera and is confident that he secured some excellent views of the Canal and the surrounding country.

Flickers.

OUR little mascot has been lost. I took it over to be photographed the other day, and on the way back it got away from me. If any of you fellows get a glimpse of it, let us know where and when, please. It is a real film hound, and answers to the name of Sprockets. For those who are desirous of winning the offered reward for its return, we are publishing the following description: Of course, only those thoroughly accustomed and acquainted with the action and manners of dumb animals would be able to distinguish mine from the regular every-day hound. In the first place, like every other dog, it has a reel body, and, on account of its unnatural birth, it needs an occasional rewind, and then proceeds to eat a hearty meal of celluloid, with a bowl of film cement on the side. After thoroughly digesting the eats, it stretches its cameragraph legs, wags its subtitled tail, and moves off with the precision of a regular mutt.

F. E. Moore, owner of the "Hiawatha" pictures, is very pleased with the sales he has made within the past week. New York, Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Missouri, California, Washington, Oregon, Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona are amongst those sold.

P. P. Craft, president of the Apex Film Company, claims to have released one of the best sellers that have been "put over" in some time in "At the Risk of Her Life." After a six days' trip, his salesman, Mr. L. Geisenberg, returned with six sales to his credit. Some record, What?

Mr. S. Van Ronkel, sponsor for the American Slide & Poster Company, Chicago, and one of the best fellows ever, hit the big town this week and will be with us for a few days. The "World" office was the first call he made and, it is needless to say, we were all glad to see him again.

MAC.

At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs.

By George Blaisdell.

THE following has been received and is printed in modified form: "Have you seen the Patheplay of Saturday, May 3, called 'General Scott's Ward'? The treatment that a dumb creature gets in that picture is enough to make boil the blood of any human being. I have been around horses pretty much all my life and have been with men who often had to depend upon their horses, and maybe I have more affection for these animals than others. But believe me, if there'd been any real men around when the bunch who took that picture chucked that horse into the coulee there would have been some real shooting."

The writer of this department has not seen this particular film, but has heard discussion of it. The incident complained of is undoubtedly that for which three men, Jim Kid, Milton Brown and George Champion, were arrested in Los Angeles and fined $60. The fault unquestionably lay at the door of the director. The WORLD has already commented at length on the brutality complained of. The fact that the objectionable scene is incorporated in the film as released makes the company responsible. It is incomprehensible that it should be released. It is regretable that such cause should be given for public criticism.

Within a half dozen blocks on Broadway now a picture seeker may look at Licensed, Mutual or Universal films. Weber's Theater, at Twenty-ninth Street, is showing Mutual and the Bijou, at Thirtieth, is putting on Universal.

Announcement comes from the other side of the water that Theodore Burgarth, the director of the Irving Place Theater, of New York City, has been exclusively engaged by the Continental Film Company, of Berlin, to play the leading roles in their forthcoming productions.

At 6:30 on Saturday evening, May 10, the temperature according to the Weather Bureau report stood at 45 degrees. In the lobby of a Brooklyn picture house was promiently displayed an icicle-bordered, shivery looking poster bearing this strange inscription: "Twenty degrees cooler inside."

Let's see. Twenty-five above? No, no! Rather remain at home.

Chatting with Harry Harvey, one time director of Solax, later with Kay-Bee and Frontier, who is now in New York looking over the situation, he showed me a letter from that prince of good fellows George P. Hamilton, general manager of the St. Louis Motion Picture Company. Mr. Hamilton was writing from Albuquerque, and his letter bears eloquent testimony to the longing that persists in the breasts of picture people who for the time are expatriated from old New York. Here's an extract:

"It makes me rather lonesome, and a longing comes into my heart to see once again that marvelous country. The contrast is surely wonderful, Harry, between the rugged country that you were working in here in the Tijeras and the smooth, beautiful Broadway with its many alluring attractions both day and night that surely make one feel it is great and glorious to live in its tumult."

Another case of recovering a long-lost is reported from Milwaukee. Two years ago George Conway, living with his wife and daughter at 584 One Hundred and Eighty-first street, New York City, went to Mexico on a business trip. The only word ever received from him afterward was in a letter from Texas. As a revolution was in progress in Mexico, it was believed that Conway had met his death. Mrs. Conway died from worry and grief. The daughter went to Milwaukee to live with friends. A few weeks ago while looking at a picture of the Boardwalk in Atlantic City, she was startled to see on the screen her father. She saw him enter the Savoy Hotel. A message sent to the hotel was unanswered. Then the daughter wired various persons who had known her father. In a few days she found him. Mr. Conway started for Milwaukee.

Popular Mechanics says it is a safe prediction that in the future projection rooms will be provided for in the construction of homes costing, say, $25,000. "Another industry which will soon come into existence in all the larger cities will be film photography," continues the same article. "Children's garden parties and other functions which in later days or years recall pleasant memories will be thus perpetuated by the film photographer. He will eventually be considered as much a necessity as the orchestra."

The Progressive Party plans to use moving pictures in its campaign throughout the country. The executive committee recommends that portrayals of social injustice be displayed in as many social centers as it may be possible to establish. The committee suggests that the commercial film companies be engaged to make as many of the films as they can handle, but that the Progressives themselves undertake the making of such pictures as they cannot secure otherwise and which may be deemed necessary for campaign purposes. But the Progressives should have to depend on themselves and not on exhibitors for the dissemination of their political doctrines. If there is one thing more than another a male picture follower wants left off the screen it is anything which smells of politics.

Cines' two-reel special of May 2, "The Broken Vow," entirely aside from its splendid dramatic quality, is a delight to the eye. Throughout the first reel, scene follows scene of marvelous rural pictorial beauty.

The prevailing belief that picture shows have lessened the receipts of the regular theaters is not justified by the official returns for 1912 in Paris. The receipts of the theaters was $6,800,000, an increase over the previous year of 3 per cent.; of concerts and cafe concerts, $1,892,000, an increase of 40 per cent.; of moving pictures, $1,360,000, an increase of 143 per cent. The latter figures hardly bear analysis. They would indicate that on an estimate of an average admission charge of 5 cents American money but approximately 70,000 persons enter picture shows each day. Of course, there are many houses charging less, as also there are many charging a great deal more. If the figures be accurate there is far less public interest in motion pictures in the French capital than in American communities.

The Congregational Church, of Alpena, Mich., has suspended its Sunday evening services. This is the first time that this condition has prevailed in the fifty years of the life of the church. The pastor declares that the inclination of the people to stroll about the streets or patronize the picture theaters has made the vesper devotions a service in name only. He says that the meeting will not be resumed until 100 men members so petition and pledge their attendance. Why not try a kinematographic program—of a semi-religious nature if necessary—and lure back to the fold the stray sheep?

On the morning of May 2 a dispatch was printed in a New York paper describing experiments at Johns Hopkins University with liquid air. It had been discovered that, by means of massage, life could be restored to an animal which for a month had been immersed in liquid air—in a temperature nearly 400 degrees below zero. In the Patheplay split film of the same date entitled "Liquid Air," the demonstrator takes from a jar two eels. One he breaks with a hammer as he would so much ice. The other he puts into water, and almost immediately life returns. Thus we see on the screen a demonstration of the truth of an article the veracity of which one might have been pardoned for doubting.

The Savoy Theater, in Thirty-fourth street, has installed a large organ. It was used for the first time during the projection of Arthur Johnson's "Power of the Cross." It materially added to the effectiveness and impressiveness of this highly dramatic production. If Arthur Johnson ever put over its equal this writer is sorry to say he missed it.

A WARNING TO OUR READERS.

A few weeks ago an advertisement of the Beck Feature Company, Petersburg, Va., was inserted in our Classified advertisements. They required a $10 deposit on all orders. We desire to warn all our readers against sending any remittances to this concern under any pretext whatever. We are asking the Postal Authorities to investigate their business methods and will be pleased to hear from anyone that can give information in regard to them. Readers will favor us and protect themselves by making it a rule to send no remittances in advance to any party unknown to them. We are as careful as possible in guarding our advertising columns, but occasionally we are imposed upon. Send no money in advance, except to well-known business firms, is a safe rule.

"HER BIG STORY" (American).

Lovers of good fiction the nation over are well acquainted with the name of Richard Washburn Child. One of his best stories, "Her Big Story," will be released by The American on Saturday, May 31, synonymous with its appearance in the Popular Magazine.

The story centers about the efforts of a young newspaper woman to land a big story. She hears much from the staff of the "invisible boss" and starts out to locate him. Unfortunately for her, she and the managing editor are much in love and this proves a hindrance to both. Slipping into the Mayor's private library, she is caught red-handed, with valuable papers in her hand, by the Mayor and the famous "invisible boss," who is none other than the owner of the newspaper on which she works. The employer undertakes to discharge her and so orders the managing editor. This precipitates trouble as the managing editor, long accustomed to "killing" stories, wants to compromise the matter by not publishing the article. Cupid then gets busy for the young woman promptly spurns his love and takes her story to the opposition paper. The managing editor, however, finds the call of love of more consequence than his job and the pair are reconciled.

Scene from "Her Big Story" (American).

There are some exciting moments in the picture as when the young woman, wrestling with the Mayor and publisher in the former's library, breaks a statuette over the Mayor's head and in the confusion makes her escape as she came in through the window head first.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY NOTES.

Mr. Will C. Smith, Assistant General Manager, has returned from a trip through Central New York and Pennsylvania, during which he attended the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Convention at Wheeling, W. Va. While in Pittsburgh, Mr. Smith secured the approval of Power's 6A with motor drive by the Bureau of Electricity of Greater Pittsburgh.

The Walturdaw Co., Ltd., of London, England, has recently installed eighteen Power's 6's in London and suburbs.

Through the Picture Theater Equipment Company of New York there has been installed one Power's 6A and Inductor in Karl Stromberg's theater, Hempstead, L. I.

Two Power's No. 6A with motor and mechanical speed control have been installed in the Colonnade Theater, 542 Nostrand Avenue, Brooklyn.

Two Power's 6A have been installed at the Harris Theater, Pittsburgh, and one No. 6A at the Lyric Theater, Pittsburgh, through J. G. Foley, Johnstown.

"THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S CONSCIENCE" (Lubin).

This story is a wonderful problem—a cross between the good and bad in three men. It is not wonderful that the District Attorney tries to shield his wife, but when he hears that he has sacrificed a life, his agony is intense because there is a doubt. Intuition, however, had led him to the right path and the reaction brought relief that was fearfully unexpected.

Will and May Mason, seeing indication of a strike, go to the factory office to inform Fred Jackson. The men become friendly and Mason invites the factory owner to take dinner at their home that evening. A little later Jackson has an altercation with Tony Gazeco, one of the leaders of the trouble, Tony is drunk and draws a revolver which Jackson takes from him and puts it in his pocket. As per invitation he goes to the Masons to dinner. Mason, who is the district attorney, is however, summond to his office. Kissing his wife goodbye he departs telling Jackson to make himself at home. Jackson is infatuated and quickly proceeds to make love to the attorney's wife; for a while she seems to enjoy it, and Mason returns just in time to see her in Jackson's arms. Much agitated he goes to his room when presently he hears a shot fired and rushing in sees Jackson at his wife's feet dead. The revolver taken away from Tony is lying on the table. Gazeco is caught rushing from the grounds and Mason seeing a chance to clear his wife of the crime, accuses the Italian. He is tried, convicted and sent to the chair. The morning of the execution Mason is crazed at the thought that he had convicted an innocent man to save his wife. Presently a messenger arrives with a letter for Mrs. Mason, which proved to be a confession from the Italian that he had fired the shot through the window.

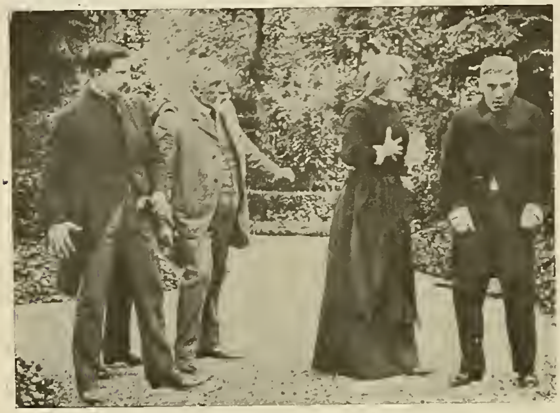
HAROLD SHAW TO DIRECT IN LONDON.

A contract was closed this week by Mr. W. A. Northam, representing the London Film Company of London, England, with Harold Shaw, formerly a director at the Edison studio and until this week a director at the Imp studio, whereby Mr. Shaw will at once proceed to London to assume the position of general director of the London Film Company. He is known well and favorably to the New York motion picture fraternity and enters upon his new duties with the hearty good wishes of the trade in general and of his fellow members of the Screen Club in particular.

"THE HUMAN VULTURE" (Patheplay).

The fact that the greatest successes of the present theatrical season are criminal plays, or at least plays dealing with criminals, or with a near-criminal as a leading character, proves pretty positively that the public is interested in the stories of persons who are the enemies of society. They seem to wonder by what process of reasoning anyone will decide to disregard the set conventions and laws of present day civilization. The public will listen attentively and study with zest the character of known criminals provided they do not have to make their acquaintance personally.



Scene from "The Human Vulture" (Patheplay).

This fact, then, guarantees the success of "The Human Vulture," a Patheplay in two reels, dealing with a criminal who is caught attempting a crime, and a woman, innocent enough, who is convicted as his accomplice, although she has only accepted his hospitality in a time of great distress. (See synopsis in this issue).

The acting is so perfected that it equals a legitimate stage production and this exceptionally fine playing brings the production out of the ordinary and until after the last of the two thousand feet have been reeled off the audience will not realize that they have been watching a film, so finely are the characters portrayed.

This feature Patheplay is booked for release May 30th.

HALLBERG "ECONOMIZER" INSTALLATIONS.

As a fair sample of his ability to furnish current saving and controlling devices for all circuits, Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," reports that in one mail during the past week he received orders from F. M. Taylor, Academy of Music, Newburgh, N. Y., for Hallberg A. C. to D.C. Economizer, 60 amp outfit; W. N. McConnell, Bijou Theater, Quincy, Ill., 550 volt, D. C. Economizer; Albert Kauffman, Rome, N. Y., Mercury Rectifier and Edison Model B M. P. Machine; M. Schneiderman, Bath Beach, Brooklyn, 1 No. 6A Power's with motor drive and Inductor Current Saver. In preparation for the summer season of open-air shows, Mr. Hallberg also reports the customary large demand for Hallberg Standard A. C. Economizers. These well-known current savers are carried in stock for either 110 or 220 volts A. C. Circuits, ready for immediate shipment.

A ST. PAUL PICTURE STUDIO.

Otto N. Raths, owner of the Gaiety Theater, St. Paul, Minn., has established a motion picture studio in his city and is prepared to take or develop motion picture film on short notice. This enterprise should be of considerable utility in taking pictures of local events not likely to be reached by the regular picture makers. The equipment is complete and can turn out anything in the way of negative development, positive printing or leaders and titles.

GENE GAUNTIER PLAYERS BACK.

The Gene Gauntier Players' company returned from Jacksonville, Fla., Sunday, May 11, and are now busy under the direction of Jack Clark finishing up a few scenes of some subjects started in the South. Sid Olcott, the director of the company, did not return with them, as he has not fully recovered from the effects of a recent operation. He will remain in Jacksonville with friends for a few weeks to recuperate.

"LONDON ASSURANCE" (Reliance).

This old and well-known play of Dion Boucicault's, first performed in New York in 1841, at the Park Theater, lends itself charmingly to pictures.

The famous character of Lady Gay Spanker, as portrayed by Edgena De Lespine, is as much a success on the screen as it has always been on the stage. E. P. Sullivan plays Max Harkaway and pretty Ethel Phillips is his daughter, Grace, whom he engages to the old beau, Sir Harcourt Courtly's (Henry Walton), when she has already given her heart to Sir Courtly's handsome son, Charles, played by Stanley Walpole. How Lady Gay makes her meek little husband jealous and aids the despairing lovers successfully; how old Max is made to see that Charles is a fitting husband for his young ward; how Sir Courtly realizes his folly in trying to captivate a woman of Lady Gay's wit, are all incidents that help to make a very interesting film.

Scene from "London Assurance" (Reliance).

Lawrence McGill, who has often directed this piece on the stage, produced the picture.

DIRECTOR DAWLEY JOINS FAMOUS PLAYERS.

General Director of Productions Edwin S. Porter, of the Famous Players Company, confirms the report that his company has secured the services of Mr. J. Searle Dawley, for the past six years a director of the Thomas A. Edison, Inc. Mr. Dawley will have charge of some large productions.

MIRACLE INJUNCTION VACATED.

On account of the failure of the Miracle Company to give a bond of $20,000 required by Justice Lehman in the injunction proceedings of that company against Isaac J. Danziger and the New York Film Company, said injunction has been vacated. This leaves the New York Film Company free to sell or lease "The Miracle" without question.

ANOTHER SPECIAL BY ESSANAY.

During the present month or the early part of June, the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company will release a multiple reel feature, entitled "The Final Judgment." This subject is gripping in portrayal and excellent in theme. The above mentioned company is having special one, three and six sheet posters made of this feature. Money has not been spared in their making. E. H. Calvert and Dorothy Phillips play the leads. Keep your eye on all Essanay's Eastern productions.

CORRESPONDENCE

NEW ENGLAND.

ON April 17, the Committee on Mercantile Affairs, to whom was recommitted the Senate Bill, relative to the use of moving picture machines in Massachusetts (Senate, No. 65), reported that the same ought to pass in a new draft, submitted by the committee. The bill in question is the famous "hour bill," asking that pictures be allowed to be projected continuously for that length of time instead of for 20 minutes, as the present law calls for. When the new draft was made, on April 17, Messrs. McGonagle, of the Senate, and E. F. Harrington, of the House, dissented. In simple language, the bill as changed at that time, stated that Kinemacolor pictures shall be run continuously for only 20 minutes, while every other kind of cinematograph may run the full hour. On May 1, the bill again came up, and a motion was made that the Senate reconsider the vote by which it refused to order to a third reading this bill. The bill was postponed on a motion of Mr. Blanchard, Senator from Boston. On Monday, May 5, the bill comes up again for final consideration. After progressing so favorably, it was a disappointment to exhibitors to learn that their pet bill had hit a snag, as the bill was nearly thrown out on May 1. Of course, if the bill passes in its present form, Kinemacolor is hard hit, and the theaters using this form of moving pictures, will be at a most distinct disadvantage.

The Massachusetts Branch of the Exhibitors' League is making great progress, and increasing its list of members almost daily. Already plans are being made for the big convention at New York this July, and a representative delegation from New England is sure to be on the job. President Joseph Mack is simply working night and day to further the interests of the Branch, and, best of all, he is showing good results.

Moving Picture Operators' Union representatives called last week upon the owners of theaters in and around Boston, for signatures to a renewal of the agreement secured a year ago. No trouble was found at any of the theaters. President James F. Burke and Business Agent Franke, of the local, were elected the delegates to the State Convention of the Unions of the big A. F. of L. Theatrical Stage Employees' Alliance, which was held at Fitchburg, Mass., on Sunday, May 4. This local is in a most flourishing condition, and things are going particularly smoothly with it.

"Moving Pictures," was the subject of an open meeting conducted this week by the recreation committee of the Children's Welfare League, at the ward-room in the Roxbury, Mass., District Court House. Remarks of an interesting and instructive nature were made by the members of the League, Parents Associations of the schools, and moving picture theaters. It surely is most interesting to note the change of attitude of this and similar organizations towards motion pictures. The Cinematograph, but a short while ago, was the pet aversion of these societies, while now, a great amount of good is said of it. At the meeting just referred to, motion pictures came in for a eulogy instead of the former bitter attack that used to be the regulation thing.

On May 1, members and friends of the Arab Patrol Club of Aleppo Temple, secured the Globe Theater, Boston, all to themselves, and enjoyed a long entertainment of vaudeville and moving pictures. The Globe Theater is doing a very satisfactory business under its present policy, which is a great deal more than could be said of it when it offered legitimate attractions.

The Tremont Theater, Boston, a regular $2 house, will have a genuine novelty for its patrons for the next few weeks, as Buffalo Jones is coming to this theater to present his entertainment, "Lassoing Wild Animals in Africa." Moving pictures of Colonel Jones' African expedition, described in graphic fashion by Buffalo Jones, are expected to pull in the business. Mr. Jones is a great favorite in Boston, where he appears regularly each year, with his exciting moving pictures, and will give matinees daily at the Tremont Theater, at popular prices.

Louise M. Marion's illustrated poems were a feature at the Comique Theater, Boston, this week, and the management declare that Miss Marion's act was one of the best they have used in many months, as the audience seemed to take unusual interest in the novelty.

A recent incorporation is the E. J. Caron Amusement Company, of Boston, that filed papers this week as a $50,000 concern, with Eugene F. O''Neill, Alfred E. Woodward and Edward J. Caron as the promoters.

Another incorporation this week is the Boston Mutual Film Corporation. This is a $5,000 concern, and Edwin D. Twombly, A. W. Philbrick and Pexley D. Smith, are named as the officers.

On Monday, April 28, fully 1,000 persons witnessed the first exhibition, at Tremont Temple, Boston, of the moving pictures of the production of the "Pilgrim's Progress," in natural coloring, the invention of F. W. Hochstetter, of Munich, Germany. The natural and harmonious coloring of the pictures as seen by this writer, was so realistic that one could hardly reconcile himself to the fact that he was watching moving pictures. The life of John Bunyan, author of "Pilgrim's Progress," was graphically depicted from his youth, when he was deemed the worst boy in town, to manhood, when he became leader of the people. Miss Katherine Eggleston delivered an exceedingly able and interesting lecture on the reels, which made a most acceptable entertainment.

S. Z. Poli is steadily making plans to increase the number of his New England theaters devoted to vaudeville and pictures. The commissioner's office at Springfield, Mass., shows that Mr. Poli took out a permit to build a theater in that city this week. The location is between Taylor and Worthington streets, just off of Main street. Mr. Poli intends to erect a theater to cost approximately $100,000, and one that will be of brick, steel and concrete construction. The entrance is planned from the Worthington street side, opposite the Worthy Hotel, and from the door the patrons will pass through a long lobby to the body of the theater. The dimensions of the building will be 138 by 102 feet, and it will be 60 feet high. The plans were drawn up by Messrs. Brown and Ban Beren, of New Haven, Conn., who have planned several of the Poli theaters in other cities. The contractors will be the T. J. Pardie Construction Company, of Bridgeport, Conn. The new Poli Theater will seat at least 3,000 people, and Mr. Poli's representatives state that the new theater will distinctly out-class every house in Springfield playing vaudeville and picture programs.

The New Haven Lodge, No. 110, Theatrical Mechanical Association, held a benefit performance at Poli's Theater, New Haven, Conn., on April 27.

The Casino Theater, on Mathewson street, Providence, R. I., a moving picture theater, was the scene of great excitement on Saturday evening, May 3, when fire attacked the roof of the auditorium. Two hundred people, mostly girls and women, reached safety through the fire escapes, while 400 others made for the regular exits. Henry Sullivan, the piano player, was the hero of the occasion, as he stuck to his post, playing lively music, which helped to keep the audience calm. The Casino is built over a bowling alley, and the auditorium is 25 feet above the street level, which explains the necessity of fire escapes. No damage to life, and not very much to the theater, resulted. For the most part, the audience kept cool, and while there was a great rush, there was no panic. The cause of the fire is unknown.

The city authorities of Boston are all devoted photoplay fans. City Counsellor Walter Ballantyne, who is a grandfather, takes great enjoyment in watching the moving pictures regularly each week. Hardly a week goes by that the councillor fails to find time to visit a certain moving picture house in the vicinity of City Hall, and he is generally accompanied by his colleague, City Councellor Thomas J. Kenny, the sedate president of the body.

A Sunday Concert was given on Sunday night, May 4, at the Gem Theater, East Boston, Mass., by the East Boston Young Men's Hebrew Association, for the benefit of their Sunday School. A large program of vaudeville and pictures pleased the large audience. The Gem Theater is steadily gaining in popularity with East Boston people, as it shows excellent photoplay programs, and is managed most ably.

The Broadway Theater, Springfield, Mass., has installed 2 Power's Cameragraph machines, No. 6-A. Although this house is now playing stock company attractions, the policy will be changed before long, to vaudeville and pictures.

Connecticut exhibitors are overjoyed by the news that the Senate has adopted a bill providing for a more liberal observance of Sunday. Under its provisions, sports, musical entertainments and moving picture shows will be allowed, during prescribed hours. This means much to the moving picture exhibitors of this state, as the theaters invariably do a capacity business on Sundays, wherever the law allows them to operate on that day.

The old Day Street Congregational Church, Somerville, Mass., is to be converted into a moving picture theater, by Ex-Alderman J. F. Mixer, who has been granted a license. The location is a good one, and a paying theater should be developed under the right management.

The Casino Theater, Elm street, Hartford, Conn., is finding business very good since it reopened. This house is showing Kinemacolor subjects exclusively, and the natural color films are becoming very popular at Hartford.

The Boston Theatrical Stage Employes' Union, at its meeting on Sunday, April 27, nominated the following officers: President, E. T. Reynolds; Vice-president, W. N. Meagher; Recording Secretary, M. P. Pickering; Financial Secretary, J. J. Barry; Business Agent, J. J. Barry. Executive Board, F. J. Dempsey, W. F. Gaul, M. P. Pickering, J. F. Haley, T. J. Callaghan, Thomas Keenan, W. M. Gallagher, J. H. Duffy and James O'Rourke. Patrick Maloney, M. Gallagher, T. J. Callaghan, George Ingersoll, J. J. Barry and James Murphy were nominated as the delegates to the Boston C. L. U.

Mayor J. F. Hurley, of Salem, the executive who always wears the high silk hat, has signed a contract with the United States Moving Picture Company, to appear as leading man in a photoplay or two. The mayor is to be the central figure in the burning of his dwelling at Salem, and is to be a noble rescuer of the inmates of his house. Since Mayor Hurley is such a devoted admirer of moving pictures as to personally act before the camera, his action in issuing an edict that all photoplay theaters must be shut down tight on Sundays is quite strange. However, Mr. Hurley is known as a rather peculiar man.

Messrs. Pindar and Rudloff, managers and owners of the Crystal Theater, Meriden, Conn., swear by Mutual films, as they state that the Mutual program has been the means of building up a most satisfactory business for the theater. The Crystal does not use vaudeville in its programs, but offers a large bill of pictures.

Business took a decided turn for the better at the Opera House, Lawrence, Mass., starting on April 14, at which date Mr. William White took over the management of this theater. Mr. White is offering programs of vaudeville and pictures that are the talk of Lawrence. The result is capacity business. Mr. White also manages the Victoria Theater, of Lawrence, where he gives programs of motion pictures and illustrated songs.

Messrs. Donovan & Walker, who recently took over the new Boylen Theater, Taunton, Mass., state that they are well pleased with their bargain, and expect to do a nice business at the Boylen, with programs of vaudeville and moving pictures.

The Columbia Theater, Bath, Me., is now managed by F. H. Burt, who recently secured a lease on this house. Mr. Burt made some needed improvements in the Columbia, and among other things, installed a Power's No. 6-A machine. The Columbia has a prominent location in the business district, and should do well with programs of moving pictures and illustrated songs.

Walter T. Murphy, manager of the Lyceum Theater, New London, Conn., has made arrangements whereby his house will show Kinemacolor subjects, on and after May 1. Manager Murphy is a live wire, and is always ready to give his patrons anything that he thinks may please them.

On Tuesday, May 6, the regular monthly meeting of the Massachusetts Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, will be held at its Boston headquarters on La Grange street.

Jacob Lurie, president and general manager of the Beacon Theater, Boston, stated this week that his business was not up to the mark, and the great majority of Boston exhibitors are saying the very same thing. The warm weather is playing havoc with the theatrical business in this section, if we are to believe the wails of the managers.

The Victor Amusement Company, of Worcester, Mass., was incorporated recently. This is a $10,000 concern, with Albert V. Pickering, Richard Pickering, Albert Fisk, George Walts and Frank W. Wellis, as the promoters. HENRY.

BUFFALO.

J. A. PFERD, treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Buffalo, has secured from Dr. W. H. Heath, of the Buffalo Health Department, a film showing how flies spread contagion. At the request of Dr. Heath, these pictures will be shown in various Buffalo theaters. Similar films will be distributed with a view to teaching citizens how the spread of disease may be checked and the advantages of sanitation.

The Chippewa Amusement Co., of Buffalo, which will engage in the moving picture business, has been incorporated, with a capital of $10,000. The directors are Paul Sheehan, A. J. Adler and William H. Gorman.

A moving picture concern, whose name has not been announced, has made a contract by which John Place, 23 years old, of 153 Fletcher street, Tonawanda, N. Y., has agreed to take a leap from the brink of the American Falls, with the aid of a parachute. The date for the daring deed is being kept a secret in order that the authorities at the Falls may not be given an opportunity to prevent the attempt. The plan of Place and the motion picture company, according to a report from Niagara Falls, is to have the Tonawanda man board a staunchly-built raft a short distance from the brink of the American Falls and leave the raft with the aid of the parachute as the edge of the brink is reached. Several boats will be in waiting in the river below the Falls to pick Place up in case he falls into the river, and the moving picture machines to be employed will be focused on the Tonawanda man from the time he boards the raft until he lands. In order that there may be no danger of the raft going to pieces by coming in contact with boulders in the stream, timbers have been used for the sides and ends. The parachute to be used is of special construction. Both raft and parachute are now ready at the home of Place.

Moving pictures of many Buffalo school children have been taken to advertise the coming Hygienic Congress in this city. These pictures are being shown in Buffalo.

Peter Hofmeister, manager of the Majestic Theater, at 150 East Ferry street, met with success in the piano trade before going into the moving picture business. He is an active worker in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of this city.

The Columbia Amusement Co. has given up the Garden, a burlesque theater here. The last performance was held Sunday, April 25, when Manager Middleton featured the picture play "Satan." He will open the Gaiety Theater, Buffalo, a burlesque house, in the Fall.

Several moving picture companies, it is expected, will photograph the various events of the Perry Centennial Celebration in Buffalo in September. New York State has appropriated $150,000, which will cover a part of the cost of the program. Military parades, sham battles and aquatic games will be featured. Moving picture men are interested in the recent announcement of W. J. Conners, a Buffalo newspaper proprietor, who is a leading spirit in the celebration. He says Buffalo will have one of the greatest tournaments of airmen in the country during the week. Mr. Conners, while in Germany, arranged with leading aviators and balloonists to give exhibitions here.

The Buffalo aldermanic fire committee has held up, for a time, the application of Daniel E. Knowlton, to build a moving picture theater on West Utica street, near Elmwood avenue. The committee has also deferred action on the application of Charles Farrell to build a similar theater on Kenmore avenue, near Delaware. Mr. Farrell, who attended a meeting of the committee, claimed that the Buffalo moving picture ordinance, which practically requires the petitioner to obtain the consent of residents within a radius of 200 feet of the site before he can build a moving picture theater, was prepared by Alderman Fisher of this city, as a piece of spite work. At a meeting of residents living near the proposed site of the Farrell house, their views as to whether they are in favor of the theater will be heard. One minister is opposed to granting the application. At the aldermanic meeting he expressed the opinion that the theater would keep many away from Sunday services.

Judge George E. Judge, of the Children's Court of Buffalo, is in favor of proposed legislation that children under 16 be allowed to attend the picture theaters after the school hours and before sunset, etc. In this connection, Judge Judge is credited with the following statement: "The child is going to see these shows, even if he has to break the law. All sorts of subterfuges are resorted to by these children in order to satisfy their natural craving for knowledge and harmless amusement. The children should be allowed to see these shows after school hours, provided there is a reputable matron in charge. In all my experience in the Juvenile Court, I have never had a case where a young girl was insulted at one of these shows. I am glad, however, that the melodramatic photoplays are being stamped out."

The daily organ recital at Keith's moving picture theater is proving very popular. Manager Charles Bowe, who has had some choir experience, has received from a patron an ancient copy of Handel's Messiah, published in England more than 100 years ago. This masterpiece will be heard at this house at an early date.

"Dick Whittington and His Cat," was the feature at the opening of the Globe moving picture theater at Main and Ferry streets, Monday night. This is Buffalo's newest playhouse. It was built at a heavy expense by the Sherman Amusement Co. "The Black Chancellor" was another popular film for the opening week. A general admission of ten cents is charged for this show, with reserved seats at fifteen and twenty-five cents.

It is expected that many moving pictures will be taken of the parades and other features of the Elks' national reunion in Rochester early in July. Buffalo's delegation and visitors will include proprietors of moving picture theaters.

A contract for the construction of Buffalo's largest theater, on Main, near Chippewa street, and running back to Pearl street, will be let in a few days by the Shea Amusement Co. It is expected that moving pictures will be added to the regular programme of vaudeville of the house. The site was bought by Mr. Shea and his associates a number of years ago from the Keith interests when the Keith vaudeville circuit threatened to invade the city. Mr. Shea at that time realized that the purchase not only eliminated a rival, but was a good investment as well. He then believed that in a few years Buffalo's population would increase to the extent that a fine theater could be profitably built on the site.

BILLY BISON.

IOWA.

THE Amuz-u Moving Picture Theater has been opened at 515 East Locust street, in Des Moines. Souvenirs were given to ladies at the opening performance. The house will use Mutual service.

Carl Smith, manager of the Pastime, at Mt. Pleasant, is building a thirty-foot addition to his theater, so that he can put in a vaudeville stage, to be used in connection with his moving picture show.

The mulct plan of operating moving picture theaters in Mason City, has attracted state-wide attention. It is reported that following his Sunday operations, Manager Heffner, of the Bijou, was arrested on Monday morning, and fined $2.50 and costs. Recently his operator was taken with him, and the fines and costs totalled $13, but it is said the receipts justified the expenditure.

Thomas Morrish, a moving picture operator at Knoxville, fell from a ladder on which he was standing while taking down some advertising banners and his skull was crushed against a corner of a cement building, causing his death.

The Scott County Medical Society, at Davenport, exhibited a swat-the-fly film to the school children of that city and made them write an essay of their impressions.

Joseph Brown has taken a permit in Davenport to erect a brick addition at 1716 West Fourth street, in that city, to be used as a moving picture theater. The improvement will cost $1,200.

P. E. Sauerwein, of Keokuk, Ia., has purchased the Grand Opera House at Fort Madison, from Edward Edinger.

Citizens of Keota are raising a fund of $15,000 for a new opera house. Early in the game the sum of $12,000 was pledged, so there is little doubt but that the new house is a go.

Moving pictures of the Panama Canal were an important part of the program of the meeting of Iowa Bankers, Group Eight, at Muscatine, recently.

Manager Victor Hugo, of the Majestic, at Cedar Rapids, has made arrangements to have a series of local views taken in that city.

The National Cash Register Company's Kinemacolor pictures are proving very popular in Iowa cities in which they are showing. They were recently exhibited at the Burtis, in Davenport, under the auspices of the "Help Beautify Davenport Committee." MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

OREGON.

NEGOTIATIONS are under way for the purchase by the Peoples Amusement Company, of Portland, of a lot in the business district of St. Johns, on which to erect a modern theater. C. A. Metzger, of the company, states that if the deal is closed it will be within ten days, and a theater will be erected as soon thereafter as possible. Although an architect has not been chosen, the building will be, if erected, 50 by 100 feet, 2½ stories high, of concrete construction, with a tile front, and will be elaborately finished throughout. It will cost about $30,000.

Negotiations are pending for the erection of a $100,000 picture and vaudeville theater at Eleventh and Washington Streets. They are being conducted through Walter Wolfe, representing a syndicate of theatrical people. The plan is to build a large picture theater and give a program of pictures with four vaudeville acts, on the order of the Portola Theater, in San Francisco.

One hundred and fifty employes of the Peoples Amusement Company have formed a permanent organization, known as the Screen Club. The object of the club is to hold entertainments once a month, at which all matters will be discussed pertaining to the motion picture industry. The following officers were elected: President, W. D. Armstrong; vice-president, J. S. Houghey; secretary-treasurer, Ted Henckle; trustees, Harry M. Thorne, F. B. Scholl and Dr. R. M. Emerson; relief committee, Melvin G. Winstock, Arthur Phillips and Mr. Hazelett; advertising committee, J. S. Houghey, Stephen Downey and Frank Gumm; entertainment committee, Ted Henckle, Tom Smith and V. Coppe.

Julius Goldsmith, of the Folly Theater, Eugene and J. J. Bryan, of the Savoy, Eugene, were visitors in Portland, recently.

Films of the most classical subjects are being exhibited throughout the theaters of the Peoples Amusement Company's circuit. Manager Winstock has booked a number of interesting subjects that will be shown in a very short time, all being of two and three-reel lengths.

"Saved in Mid-Air," recently shown at the Arcade Theater, in Portland, created much talk in the way the picture of the daring rescue was taken and complimented the management of the company for the fine subjects that are being gotten to cater to the patrons of this theater. The Arcade is the home of the Kay-Bee Films.

The Globe Theater, of Portland, under the management of I. Leeses Cohen, is being patronized to full capacity seatings. Licensed service is used.

Within one hour after the filming of the ball game between Portland and Los Angeles, the Peoples Amusement had the film exhibited at the Peoples Theater, to a house that was packed to the fullest capacity. General Manager Winstock should be complimented on the way he had arranged for this film to be taken and exhibited at the same day.

George Blight, of Salem, is building motion picture houses at Albany, Corvallis, and Roseburg. He has an excellent one at Salem.

C. P. Merwin, assistant manager of the General Film Company, with headquarters at Seattle, Washington, was a visitor in this city recently.

The first minister to install a standard motion picture outfit in a church in this city, is the Rev. Oswald Taylor, Rector of Grace Memorial Episcopalian Church. This outfit is used in the Sunday School. He testifies to the wonderful results to be obtained by the use of the films in this class of work, and says that it has proved so effective that he can get along without teachers, if necessary. He has operated the equipment for more than a year, and would not think of running a Sunday School without it, he says. Other churches of the city have had the use of it, but the owner insists upon it being kept in his own church.

The Edison Company is to film the Columbia River scenery with the Edison players, and Miss Laura Sawyer. This work will mean much to Oregon, and the Northwest will be undertaken by the Edison players, now quartered at Del Monte, Cal., about June 1. The object of the Edison players in coming here is two-fold, and the advertising that Oregon and the Northwest will get from it is scarcely to be estimated.

The new Princess Theater being constructed at 6th and Stark streets, by Foster & Kleiser, is rapidly being rushed to completion. The building is being built of steel and concrete, and is to be one of the finest theaters west of Chicago, where exclusive features of three and four-reel subjects will be exhibited.

Manager C. J. Kerr, of the Circle Theater, is busy these days booking advance films for the summer months of the most entertaining and exceptional classy subjects, that are of educational value to both the young and old.

E. N. WEINBAUM.

LOUISVILLE.

AN airdome for the exclusive use of negroes has been opened at Burnett and Bland Streets, Louisville. The new theater is styled the "Fort Hill." It has a seating capacity of about 600. The initial performances were composed of features. Regular service will be utilized later. It is probable that other airdomes catering exclusively to the negro population of Louisville will be started during the near future. The colored folk are good spenders where five or ten cents is concerned, and there are enough of them to support a half dozen airdomes at that price.

Fred. Dolle and Joseph L. Steurle, of the Broadway Amusement Company, are incorporators of the Billy Smythe Music Company, which will publish songs and handle sheet music and similar merchandise. William P. Schmitt, a well-known local composer, is the third incorporator. The company is capitalized at $1,000. Mr. Schmitt will have charge of the company's business. His new songs will be started in the Broadway theaters and will be made popular by rendition in the five theaters conducted by that company.

The Hungarian orchestra, which has been a feature at the Majestic Theater for the past year, no longer plays from one of the boxes, as in the past. The musicians now are stationed in the pit, the orthodox location. Scharf & Ramsey, the vocalists at the Majestic, continue to sing from the box. Manager Louis J. Dittmar believes that singers do better work when separated from the orchestra by some little distance. The strains of the music are confusing to the vocalists when too close according to Mr. Dittmar and others who have had experience along this line.

The top floor o fthe new Starks building at Fourth and Walnut Streets is the only one on which film exchanges will be allowed. Several Louisville exchange men sought quarters in the new skyscraper, but were informed that they must take the rooms immediately below the roof. The owners of the building are afraid of fire as well as the moral effect on other tenants, it is said. None of the exchange men would consider the offer, and will probably retain their present places of business.

The Crescent Hill Civic League, of Louisville, has adopted resolutions against the erection of a theater in that section of the Kentucky metropolis, sending copies of the resolutions to the city authorities. The meeting followed an announcement by the National Moving Picture Company that a moving picture house would be erected there. While the Civic League expressed itself as in favor of animated picture houses as amusement resorts, it believed that the theaters should be confined to business sections of the city. Whether the National will be forced to abandon its plans is problematical. Thomas F. Reilly, a well-known shoe man, of Louisville, is a new employe of the National. Mr. Reilly will sell stock for the company. He formerly was head of the shoe department of one of the big department stores in the city.

A new radium gold fibre screen has been installed in the quarters of the Central Film Service Company, of Louisville. The screen will be used in the private showings of films to exhibitors. Its installation has completed the Central's arrangements for the exhibition of films, and performances will be given every morning for the benefit of the patrons of the exchange. The screen is regarded as fireproof.

The formation of the American Theater Company was completed at a recent meeting in Louisville. J. H. Small was elected president and treasurer of the company. Other officers are John T. May, vice-president; E. B. Miller, secretary; and H. A. Moore, general manager. Shield & Campbell, Louisville attorneys, were retained as counsel for the American. The company intends to establish a chain of moving picture theaters in Kentucky and adjoining States. It now controls the Express Theater, of Central City, Ky. Improvements are to be made in this house, which was recently taken over from the Consolidated Theaters Company. A balcony is to be installed for the use of colored patrons, while the house is to be enlarged in other ways. The screen will be modernized and a new ventilating system installed.

Work has begun on the erection of an addition to the Crystal Theater, of New Albany, Ind., owned by Michael Switow. A couple of hundred additional seats will be placed in the annex. Mr. Switow will shortly extend the seating capacity of the Grand Theater, also in New Albany.

The Majestic theater is finding its screen a money-making proposition from the use of advertising slides. In fact, so many advertisers are anxious to utilize the house as a method of reaching the public that Manager Dittmar will either be compelled to raise the rates or fix a limit on the number to be shown. He has held the number to a minimum in the past, being among the exhibitors who believe that advertisements detract in a measure from the prestige of a theater.

B. F. Keith's Louisville house closed its regular season on May 10, but will continue a few vaudeville acts and moving pictures as an experiment. If the public takes to summer vaudeville, the house will be operated during the entire hot weather period. The last week of the regular season was made a sort of celebration, twelve acts forming an unusually long and attractive program.

A. T. Campbell, a cameraman for a moving picture company, was seriously injured in Owensboro, Ky., recently. Mr. Campbell attempted to stop a runaway horse, but misjudged the distance. He was knocked to the street and trampled by the maddened animal. Mr. Campbell's injuries are not believed to be dangerous. They consisted of numerous bruises and a bad gash on his head.

J. H. Hoben and J. C. Sills have converted the opera house at Hardinsburg, Ky., into a moving picture theater and will stage two performances a week. Tuesday and Friday nights have been selected as the days for shows.

Marqua & Allenburg have definitely decided to erect an airdome at Colerain Avenue and Dayton Street, Cincinnati. The contract has been awarded to the Grimm Iron Works and work will begin immediately. The airdome will seat 1,000 persons.

B. G. Morrman, who will erect a motion picture theater on Madison Road, North Hyde Park, Cincinnati, has made minor changes in the plans, and work has been resumed. Besides containing a theater, the structure will include several lodge rooms. Several orders have leased quarters for five years.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

THE blue law cases are on again in Springfield. It was thought the decision of Police Magistrate Clark B. Shipp that the people had decided it by a referendum vote was to end the battle. But the original eleven, which number, included Adolph Kunz, proprietor of the Grand Moving Picture Theater, have been re-arrested on warrants sworn out by E. R. Ulrich, Jr., secretary of the Law Enforcement League before Justice Robert Connelly. In addition two more warrants, one of which was for the Casino moving picture theater, 621 East Washington Street, were sworn out. An appeal was made of the original cases to the county court and until that is decided nothing can be done with the new cases.

The Springfield News which was one of the first papers in the country to see the possibilities in moving picture advertising is receiving requests from all over the United States for specimen copies. The Fourth Estate, a New York publication devoted to the newspaper field, mentioned this departure at some length. The Springfield, Ohio, News also has been catering to the picture advertising for some time; the business managers of the local paper and the Ohio paper were schoolmates and exchanged ideas. The local paper gives a page each Saturday night to the picture houses.

Herbert Woods announces that he is not interested in a proposed Airdome on South Fourth Street, between Adams and Monroe.

P. McAvoy now has a clear field with his picture show at Chatham and has moved to a larger building.

George Parlow who has been manager of the Lyric Theater on South Fifth Street has gone to Superior, Wis., to manage the Broadway Theater., one of the Allardt houses. Harry T. Loper, Jr., son of the owner of the Lyric will act as manager.

Charles Kizer who has been with the Vaudette Theater in this city, has gone to Chicago, where he will manage the Vaudette in that city as soon as the new house is open. W. W. Watts, head of the company, is busy with the state right picture, "From the Manager to the Cross," at the Cort Theater. It has been decided to give two shows a day at 25 and 50 cents at the Cort.

Announcement has been made that the Chatterton, the only house in the city playing big shows, will remain dark this summer. This house has made periodical summer excursions in the picture field. The Springfield Orpheum Company, which controls the Majestic, has increased its capital stock from $18,000 to $48,000 which makes it likely that there will be no photoplay competition from that source.

IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

BY way of compensating the picture theater managers for the loss of business caused by cutting out the Sunday shows, the City Council, of Sterling, Ill., has reduced the license from $25 to $5. The managers were given two weeks of grace inasmuch as they had Sunday films booked ahead. Rev. W. W. Aylesworth, pastor of Fourth Street Methodist Episcopal Church, has come out with a timely warning to the churches advocating that they use the picture to attract the young people. "The moving picture is as much the agent of the church as of the private investor," he said. "We have not used it to any extent. Why not put it into our churches upon Sunday night? With good music, a spicy discourse, a changed program from time to time, lectures, etc., I believe the young people will find in the church a place to go upon a Sunday night. In this way, and I fear in this way only, the people will be glad to give the churches full command of the Sabbath evening as it has had from time immemorial. If I rightly read the spirit of our times, however, we must rightly use the hour or it will be handed over to those who will use it. It's up to us."

A similar suggestion came up in Galesburg, Ill., at a meeting of the Federated Brotherhoods in that city. The theme of all the speakers at a banquet was taking care of the young boy. One sociological worker reported that two months' observation in Galesburg showed between 2,000 and 3,000 persons went to the theaters every evening and that about 49 per cent. were young people. Rev. Albert Fiske showed that the religious atmosphere of today is not of the sort to attract the boy and that we must develop his ethical and moral nature through his amusements. He suggested that the church should provide good wholesome amusement for the boys. Mr. Fiske has successfully used the moving picture machine both among the young boys and among the young men.

J. H. Martin will run picture shows in the Airdome at Red Bud, Ill., again this summer.

L. D. Gillette is having an airdome constructed on North Main Street in Woodhull, Ill. The place will run pictures.

F. F. Pool has sold the Magic Theater at Rockwell City, Ia., to R. W. Owens, of Columbus Junction, Ia., and O. M. Himmeldeich, of Washington, Ia.

Wallace J. Emery has opened the Star Theater at Galva Ill., as a picture house. The place will seat 200 persons. Miss Florence Weaver is pianist.

Construction work on Vernon C. Seaver's new Hippodrome at Peoria, Ill., was halted by a strike of 2,000 building tradesmen.

The Meridian Amusement Company, of Fort Wayne, Ind., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000 to operate amusement grounds. The incorporators are G. H. Heine, Arthur Benke, C. J. Scheiman, and F. C. Heine.

The Gaiety Theater, Springfield, Ill., closed its vaudeville season and went over to pictures May 5.

The Majestic, at Peoria, Ill., is now playing pictures from 11 A. M. to 11 P. M., giving four-reel shows. A six-piece orchestra is featured.

The Kozy Theater, at Eldorado, Ill., has been purchased by The Colonial Amusement Company. Ray Webber will be manager. It is reported that a $12,000 theater will be built on the site of the Casino in Eldorado.

The Airdome has been opened for the summer season, at Cuba, Ill., by Manager Wilson.

George Shof has opened a new picture show at Sidell, Ill. The Airdome there was recently closed.

It is reported that a St. Louis producing company recently made a trip to Chester, Ill., and chartered an Illinois Central train there for a portion of a train robbery picture.

Manager Hyatt, of the Orpheum Theater at Webster City Ia., is having an Airdome built on Second Street in that city. He may name it the Airdome or the Orpheum Annex.

It is reported that Canton, Ill., will have a new house which will play vaudeville, road attractions and high-class pictures.

The Reno Moving Picture Company is playing a number of Central Illinois towns under canvas, making week and half-week stands in the villages which do not support a regular photoplay house.

Manager S. T. Herman, of the Globe Theater at Monticello, Ill., has added Saturday matinees. As a bid for the patronage of the women he gives souvenirs of their favorite actors. The opening matinee was Costello day.

Dr. Fred. Rogers has opened his Grand Central Airdome at Hillsboro, Ill. Hillsboro with six shows is in a fair way to have an amusement war. Rogers is advertising three reels in addition to a comedy company of twelve persons, and Ed. Fellis, manager of the Hillsboro Opera House, is offering six reels on the nights that he has no vaudeville.

Manager L. J. B. Ulger, of the Lyric, at Greenville, Ill., made up a good educational program the night of May 6 and turned over the house to the Domestic Science Club which wished to raise funds for a new piano.

CINCINNATI.

MR. MARZLOFF, who for many years was identified with the moving picture industry in this city, closed a deal on May 1, with Edward Ryan, manager of the Century Theater near Peebles Corner on Walnut Hills, whereby he becomes sole owner of the house for a period of one year. The lease was sold to Mr. Marzloff for that period for $2,700. Some time ago a story gained currency that the Century Theater was to be converted into a roof garden, with moving pictures and a cabaret show as the attractions. This was affirmed by Manager Ryan. The new leaseholder today announced that the theater would be continued as a moving picture house. The Century is a handsome showhouse, seating about 2,500 people. Mr. Ryan, who negotiated the deal, left for Chicago, where he will operate a moving picture theater in the heart of the Windy City.

President M. A. Neff, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, returned late on the afternoon of May 1 from Wheeling, W. Va., where he presided at a meeting of the League of that state. The gathering of this group of cinematographers was the most enthusiastic ever held in the West Virginia State. The meeting was called to order on Tuesday, April 29. The address of welcome was made by Mayor Kirk, of Wheeling. It goes without saying that what he had to tell the assembly was received with much enthusiasm. The address was a high tribute to the cinematographers. "No business men can do a community the service, the motion picture men can. They are the genuine commissioners of progress and are fast breaking down prejudices and scattering the germ of progress wherever they go." The foregoing is a synopsis of the address of Mr. Kirk. President Neff's reply was received with great enthusiasm. He complimented the people of Wheeling on being so fortunate in having such a broad minded and able man at the head of their city administration. He said that the activities of the mayor would in the near future become statewide. The convention came to a close late Wednesday evening, April 30.

JACK STARK.

IN THE MIDDLE WEST.

IT is reported that one of the eastern producers has in mind a series of railroad pictures, and has been negotiating for the right to use the old Crooked Creek road near Webster City, Iowa. The line is a coal road seventeen miles long, and runs through a rugged country which would be ideal for some artistic "mountain division" films.

The Universal Film & Supply Company, of St. Louis, Mo., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $100,000, to buy, sell and deal in moving picture machines and films. The incorporators are: A. F. Black, A. T. Porter, and R. B. Dickson.

Mayor Phillips, of Dayton, Ohio, has received $92.42 from the moving picture men of Skaguay, Alaska, to be used for the benefit of flood sufferers.

The property at Dubuque, Iowa, occupied by Dreamland Theater, has been sold to W. J. Burns and Maurice Brown.

Warrants were issued at Beloit, Wis., for the arrest of seventy persons, proprietors and employes of picture shows and members of the audience, because they violated the Sunday closing laws. Two theaters escaped—the Lyric, because its lease stipulates there shall be no Sunday shows, and the Wilson, because the manager is opposed to the Sabbath performance. It was declared that the programs were made up of sacred and educational pictures and sacred music.

Wenz & Cole have sold the Star Theater, at 728 South Main street, Elkhart, Ind., to the Star Theater Company, which has assumed its management.

The New Albany Amusement Company, of New Albany, Ind., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $15,000, to do a theater business. The incorporators are: H. H. Legg, P. N. Curl, E. V. Knight, Charles Miller, Frank Beaucond, James Deatrick and Joseph Burns.

The Commercial Club, of Lincoln, Neb., is negotiating with a Denver cameraman for a series of pictures of Lincoln.

The Forman Opera House Association of Forman, Sargent County, S. D., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $2,000. The incorporators are: C. A. Walloch, E. M. Fjelstad and A. Glorvick.

Among the North Dakota cities which will have new opera houses this summer, are Sheyenne and Crosby

F. S. Timmins, manager of the Bucklen theater at Elkhart, Ind., will open an airdome, 60 x 80 at Main and Marion Streets, in that city. Vaudeville and pictures will be used. On rainy nights the shows will be switched to the Bucklen. A five-cent admission will be charged. It is reported that Mr. Timmins contemplates putting a theater on the same site later.

H. C. Coulson has sold the Scenic Theater at Ames, Ia., to Fred Gerbracht, of Carroll, Ia.

B. H. Jones, a negro, has brought action against H. C. Jergensen, proprietor of the Columbia, a moving picture house in Waterloo, Ia., alleging that he was discriminated against in being denied the privilege of purchasing an admission ticket. He declares a sign displayed stating "colored patronage not solicited" was not in conformity with the Iowa laws.

Films are being used by St. John's Church of Boyle Memorial Center, 816 North Eleventh Street, St. Louis, Mo., to attract the church persons who are not in the habit of attending. It was announced that it was not necessary for persons coming to wear fine clothes.

Quite a number of changes in Minnesota theaters have been reported. Paul Perkins has disposed of his interest in the Grand, at Brainerd, to Clyde Parker and Eugene McCarthy, N. G. Nelson of Tyler sold the Theatorium in that city to H. Mears and Harry Johnson of Brookings, S. D.; F. F. Latta of the Cozy at Austin has added to his holdings by purchasing the Idle Hour in that city from Dunning & Panabaker; Dr. F. E. Dalgneau sold his interest in the Pastime at Red Wing to H. L. Grady of Mason City, Ia., and the Majestic in St. Paul has been leased by C. H. Miles, of Minneapolis to Finkelstein & Ruben who also own the new Princess.

Moving pictures will be a part of the entertainment aboard the special train which will bring 200 Michiganders now residing in Southern California to their old homes, leaving Los Angeles June 27.

The Grand, the new picture house in Carrington, N. D., has been opened.

Carl Holtz and Al Nelson of Wadena, Minn., have purchased a picture show in Grand Forks, N. D.

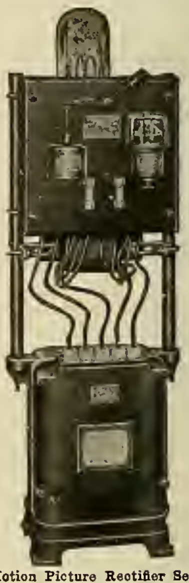
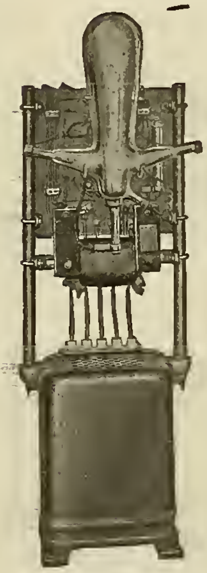
The Use of a Rectifier Makes Pictures More Brilliant



Motion Picture Rectifier Set
Rear View

It is well recognized that for the projection of pictures, the direct current arc lamp is far superior to the lamp using alternating current. The light is more steady and intense, and a far greater proportion of the light is directed toward the lens.



Motion Picture Rectifier Set
Front View

The ordinary lighting circuit furnishes alternating current only, but by using a G-E Mercury Arc Rectifier, this alternating current is changed into direct current.

The use of the rectifier makes possible much more brilliant pictures than can be obtained when alternating current is used in the lamp.

The operation of the rectifier is easy and its use decreases the cost of the electricity consumed at the same time that it improves the quality of the pictures.

Write our nearest office for Booklet B-3107 giving the results of comparative tests on projection lamps using alternating and direct current, and explaining the operation of the rectifier.

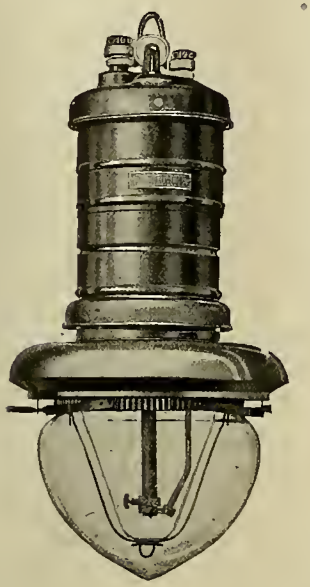
The Attraction of Good Light



Good brilliant illumination has an immense "pulling" power. To have two or three flaming arcs outside your theatre attracts the crowd.

Good light also shows up the signs and gives your place a cheery, inviting appearance.

A well lighted exterior is one of your most telling advertisements.

The Long Life Flame Arc Lamp Type W is one of the most powerful lighting units known. It is especially adapted to illuminating the exteriors of theatres. This efficient lamp is economical to install and maintain—one set of carbons burns for 100-120 hours without attention: and only one of these carbons needs renewing at each trim.

The lamp is thoroughly reliable and substantially constructed.

Write to our local office nearest you for further information.

LICENSED FILM STORIES

KALEM.

A VICTIM OF HEREDITY (May 28).—A gang of thieves is captured and brought to justice. Some weeks later the woman of the party dies in prison and her baby, Jane, is adopted. Twenty years pass and Jane, grown to young womanhood, has an inherited propensity for stealing which she is unable to resist. One day, while attempting to rob her employer, she is detected and discharged.

The poor girl decides to end it all and visits a drug store. Dr. Van Buren, a noted specialist happens to be behind the prescription counter and suspecting the girl's purpose, substitutes a harmless sleeping potion.

Some time later Jane answers an advertisement for a housemaid and secures a position with the wealthy Mrs. Dexter. Dr. Van Buren, who calls one afternoon, prevents Jane from robbing her mistress and, keeping his own counsel, becomes greatly interested in the girl's case. He gives her his card and invites her to call.

The specialist then calls in a number of his colleagues and determines upon an experiment. That night when Jane calls and is about to appropriate some valuables which the doctor has intentionally left exposed, a flashlight is set off by the secreted physicians. The girl faints from the shock.

Van Buren contends that the sudden shock will permanently cure Jane of her kleptomania and his theory proves correct when, later, he puts her to the test.

CAPTURED BY STRATEGY (May 28).—Tom Marvin befriends Bill, a tramp, and gains his everlasting friendship. Later Tom is refused the hand of Gladys Richmond by the doty old Colonel. The lovers are heartbroken. Richmond sells his timber land and resolves to make a trip to the city by boat, that he may deposit the money. The transaction is witnessed by several tramps who plot to waylay Richmond. Tom, who has overheard the plans, is made a prisoner. Bill, one of the tramps becomes conscience-stricken and liberates the young man. By a strange turn of fate the crooks are temporarily frustrated but follow Richmond and board the vessel.

After a hard ride Tom arrives at the landing, only to find that the boat has gone. He rides along the bank until he reaches a long pier where a dredge is working and induces the foreman to assist him in his desperate effort to board the boat. Tom is lifted up on the dredge and as the boat passes down stream he leaps aboard. He bursts into the Colonel's stateroom in time to foil the crooks and assist in their capture. Richmond concludes that such a resourceful young man will make a very desirable son-in-law.

THE WIDOW FROM WINNIPEG (May 30).—Johnson, a lonely ranchman, advertises for a wife and stipulates that she must have black eyes, weigh 180 pounds and be able to play the organ. The Widow from Winnipeg answers that she meets all requirements. Finally the great day arrives and Johnson escorts the bride to his cabin. But the Widow has ideas of her own which she proceeds to execute. Johnson, in desperation, arranges to have the Sheriff arrest him, but the Widow puts up a strenuous defense and prevents the officer from arresting Johnson. The ranchman has another great idea. He disguises himself and returns to the cabin with the information that he is Bad Bill the wife-beater, who has bought the Johnson outfit. The Widow penetrates the disguise and makes things lively for the pretender. Finally Johnson joins a band of outlaws and the Widow, searching for her heart's desire succeeds in rounding up the whole gang.

THE COMEDY TEAM'S STRATEGY (May 30).—Heindal, the theatrical agent, awakes in a very bad humor and goes to his office with a decided grouch. The comedy team arrives in town and applies for booking. They are told that there are too many "hams" in the business already. Jack and Jane propose to teach the agent a lesson. Jane disguises as a man and Jack as a woman. Jack pretends to meet with an accident and is assisted home by the gallant. Heindal. Then Jane, in masculine attire, confronts the agent, declaring that he is trying to break up the home and producing a huge bomb, she states that they will all die together. She secretly strikes a base-drum and the terrified agent thinks that the bomb has exploded. "Can we act?" ask Jane and Jack removing their disguises. They are booked for Heindal's entire circuit.

JOHN BURNS OF GETTYSBURG (May 31).—John Burns, having lost his son in the early part of the Civil War, becomes inflamed with a desire to avenge the boy's death, but his wife restrains him. The mother finds the great loss unbearable and follows the son.

John Burn's neighbors become panic-stricken when the terrific cannonading at Gettysburg is heard, but the old man stoically refuses to be driven from his home. Finally the retreating troops fire Burns' patriotism and he resolves to wreak his vengeance. Dressing in his best suit and high hat, he becomes the butt of the soldiers' jests, but his calm determination and seeming immunity inspire the regulars. He declines to take the shelter of the trenches, but stands before the enemy, quietly ramming his musket and firing shot after shot at the Confederates.

Unconcernedly he leads a charge that turns the tide in favor of the Federal forces.

THE REWARD OF SERVICE (May 26).—Old John Horris, past earning his living, finds himself slighted and unwelcomed in his son's home. Wearing his faded blue uniform, and carrying his old musket, he steals away and trudges the long road to Washington, confident that he will find welcome and rest at the Soldiers' Home. At the Capital, he finds that long formalities stand between him and the rest he craves. Little Ethel Seymour, daughter of the Governor, is filled with sorrow and indignation that the old man should be sent away with only a blank form of application and follows him. She knows vaguely that there are high authorities with power to remove obstacles with a word and determines to seek them. The old man readily follows his determined little guide. They wander about the city, refused admission to the War Department, the White House, and at the Capitol. The child is in despair, the old man exhausted, when they attract the attention of a kind-hearted senator. The senator quickly unwinds the official red tape, and Ethel and her old charge return to the Home in triumph.

THE YARN OF THE NANCY BELLE (May 27).—On Deal Beach, Jim Bolt, an old sailor, now a fisherman, is mending his net when a crowd of children urge him to tell them a story of the sea. He takes them into his hut and proceeds to tell his "Yarn of the Nancy Belle." As he tells the tale, the scenes are illustrated by visions that appear to the children's minds. First he pictures the good brig, "Nancy Belle," sailing the Indian Sea, when a storm comes up and the vessel is wrecked. Many of the seamen go to the bottom, but ten of the crew take to the life-boat and are cast on a barren island. For a month they nearly starve, and finally their hunger becomes so great that they resolve to cast lots to select one who may be killed and eaten to save the lives of the others. The first victim is the captain, and Bolt shoots him, thus furnishing food for a few days. The next one to draw the unlucky number is the bo'sum. Six others share the fate of the captain and bo'sum, until but two are left, the cook and Jim Bolt. They are now man to man and it is a serious question as to which one should be the survivor. The cook, being the cook, endeavors to persuade Bolt that he (Bolt), could not cook the cook, while he, being the cook, could make a savory meal of Bolt as he had of the others. To prove his claim he concocts a broth of herbs, salt and pepper, and taking Bolt to the edge of the kettle, tells him to smell it. Jim sees his opportunity, and seizing the cook throws him into the foaming soup and enjoys a delicious meal. Next day Bolt is chewing one of the cook's bones when he sights a battle ship. He signals, a boat is put off and the sailors take the only survivor of the "Nancy Belle" from the island.

DOING LIKE DAISY (May 27).—Auntie, who is almost, but not quite, ready to enter the old maids' class, seems to have trouble in attracting young men's attentions. Daisy, in her trim sailor suit, seems to be the attraction for all the young men. Auntie has an idea—it is her dress that keeps the men away. So auntie decides to dress up in short skirts and a middy blouse, and when she appears on the lawn in a costume like Daisy's she offers a good laugh for the young folks. She is always trailing around after Will, Jack and Daisy, and in order to get away from her they jump in a boat and put out into the stream. Auntie rushes to the dock just in time to be too late. When she leans heavily against the railing it breaks and auntie is treated to a good ducking.

LOVE AND WAR IN MEXICO (Special, 2 parts, May 28).—James Hudson, a young civil engineer, is engaged in surveying land in Southern California, when he meets and falls in love with Pequita, the daughter of Don Jose Alvarado, a Mexican farmer. Pequita learns to love Hudson and they are eventually married. Two years pass and Hudson has become addicted to the use of liquor, and has grown tired of Pequita. One day, while in a drunken rage, he strikes her, and as she falls unconscious, and he, being unable to revive her, believes her dead. He runs from the house, and, after a long journey, falls exhausted at the door of a mission. The padre finds him and takes him inside, where he is nursed back to health and eventually becomes a monk. In the meantime, Pequita has been found by her father and taken to his home, where her little son is born.

Twenty years elapse and the son, grown to manhood, has joined the insurgent Mexican army and is selected to do duty as a spy. He enlists in the Federal forces and in the execution of his duties as a spy, he is discovered and tried by court-martial. He is condemned to death, but when the commanding officer visits him in his cell, the boy overpowers him and escapes by donning the officer's cloak and hat. A detachment of soldiers give chase and overtake him at the door of the mission. The padre protects the boy and requests that he be allowed one hour for confession, after which the padre promises to deliver the prisoner to them. The officer consents and the boy is led inside. He requests that his mother be sent for and a monk goes to bring her. When she arrives she immediately recognizes the monk as her husband, and tells him that the boy is his son. At the expiration of the hour the officer demands his prisoner, and the men are waiting outside the mission gate to carry out the execution. As the boy and mother are kneeling in prayer, the father dons the cloak and cap in which the boy escaped and goes out. As he opens the gate and steps forth, he is met by a volley of bullets from the guns of the soldiers, who march away, believing they have done their duty. The mother and son rush from the mission and fall weeping across the body of the father who, with his life, atoned for the suffering he had caused them.

A ROMANCE OF THE OZARKS (May 29).—Harry Flathers, a revenue officer, arrives at Darcy and presents a note of introduction to the sheriff, informing him that illicit whiskey is being made in the mountains near the town and that Flathers has been sent to capture the moonshiner. Attired as a fisherman, Flathers sets out on a tour of investigation. In the heart of the mountains lives Ned Thaneous with his step-daughter, Dollie. Their nearest neighbor, Zeb, operates an illicit still and keeps old man Thaneous supplied with his favorite beverage. Zeb is in love with Dollie and with the aid of the old man, tries to persuade her to marry him. Dollie refuses and the poor girl's life is made a burden by the importunate lover and her step-father.

While Flathers is fishing one day, he and Dollie meet. It is a case of love at first sight. Several weeks later, Flathers, who has not succeeded in locating the still, comes across Zeb annoying Dollie. He interferes and starts to take her home. Zeb sees the officer's badge, and recognizing the danger, follows the couple. They approach Thaneous' homestead, where Flathers leaves her. He seeks further for the still and finds it. Zeb, who has been trailing him, comes up behind and strikes him a blow on the head. He then locks the unconscious man in the cellar and departs. He hurries to Thaneous' house and tells the old man of Dollie's treachery. They lock Dollie in her room and Zeb makes preparations to skip. Dollie has stolen the key of the cellar in which Flathers is confined, rushes to the still and liberates him. She then tells him of Zeb's intention to flee, and the two plan, not only to elope, but to capture Zeb and deliver him to the sheriff. Their plan is carried out successfully and they are married by the sheriff.

FAITH OF A GIRL (May 30).—The story opens with the wedding of Laura Mills to Jim Farley. Jim had a story that he had tried to bury. He had done things in the past that were against the law. The young couple made haste to the depot. They had scarcely left the door-step when two detectives presented themselves at the Mills home and informed the family that they wanted Jim. The bridal couple had just been shown to their room at the big city hotel when the officers entered.

An absorbing story leads up to the great struggle, which lasted three days—July 1-2-3—and in which the loss of life was appalling. Gen. Lee hurled himself upon the north, and the Union forces were hurriedly marshaled and met him at Gettysburg. The Union army numbered more than 77,000, and the Confederate forces 59,000. The charge of Gen. Pickett, with 4,900 men, following a fierce cannonading, into the center of the Union army, is the most sensational, heroic and thrilling incident in the war history of the world.

Jim was arraigned for a "confidence job" pulled off six months before. Laura had to return to her parents' home and was there confronted with the newspaper account of the crime. The parents renounced Farley, and Laura, refusing to hear a word against her husband, left the house and sought employment. She found a position in the office of Richard Starley. The work was enjoyable and Laura paid weekly visits to her husband in the jail. One evening, as she was about to leave the office, Starley attempted to embrace her. She recoiled with horror, but the next day reported as usual. Starley declared his love for her, and proposed to secure a divorce for her if she would marry him. For reply Laura produced a locket containing Jim's picture and her own and reiterated her love for her unfortunate husband. From that moment Starley became her friend. It was visiting day at the prison and Laura was there; a fire broke out in the jail and a panic ensued. Convicts, guards and visitors were rushing for safety. Among those in danger was the warden's son. Jim seized the boy, and trying to battle with the flames, was overcome. The guards rescued them both unconscious and they were taken to the hospital, where they lay in twin beds until convalescent. The warden and Starley interested themselves in Jim and for his bravery secured his release. Laura took her husband back to the family and all was forgiven.

LONEDOG THE FAITHFUL (May 31).—Lonedog, an old Indian, is found by a number of tourists, guarding three graves. Being asked to relate the story connected with them, he tells of the death of his beloved squaw on the desert and of the infant papoose left in his care. He tells of the long journey with the child in his arms to the nearest cabin, where he finds a settler and his wife, who have just buried their new-born babe, and when Lonedog asks them to care for his papoose until he can return, the woman's heart goes out to the child and she consents to nurse and care for it.

Years pass and Lonedog returns with gifts to his friends. In the meantime, the Indians of his tribe ask for more rations from the government. A famine is imminent. They are refused and revolt. Lonedog hears of the uprising and rides to warn the settlers and his friends. The Indians are repulsed by the settlers, and riding over the hills, wreak vengeance on Lonedog's benefactors. He, in the meantime, has ridden back to the little town to ask for help for his friends. The townspeople, mistaking him for an enemy, fire and wound him. Hurt as he is, he manages to make himself understood and the townspeople bind his wounds and rush to the rescue. He follows on horseback. The settlers reach the cabin, followed by Lonedog. They find the dead bodies of the man, woman and child, who have been slaughtered while waving the flag of truce. The Indians take flight and two of the settlers help Lonedog bury his dead. Faithful in death, as he was in life, he watches and waits for the time when he too will find peace and forgetfulness.

ESSANAY.

THE NEW SHERIFF (May 27).—Three thousand dollars is offered for the capture of the desperate Sheppard gang. Volunteers would not have been so scarce had not the sheriff been killed the day before, by one of the Sheppards. Judge Boyd implores the men to come forward and assist in capturing the desperadoes. Blenton steps forward and says he will try. His trial proved to be a huge success, when before the astonished villagers he marches the three men of the gang to jail. The secret of his success was the outlaw's undoing, and it all happened because Jack Sheppard had placed too much confidence in his dog.

ON THE JOB (May 28).—They say a traveling man has a girl in every town. Jack Gardener, thought he had one in Indianapolis, but he was muchly mistaken. James Rickert, also a knight of the grip, made an appointment with two beautiful young ladies, one for his friend, Gardener. The girls didn't care much for their escorts, so gave them the slip. At the hotel that evening, Gardener discovers that he has a pair of ladies' gloves in his pocket. Miss Busybody, in the next room, with her eye glued to the keyhole, discovers Gardener with the gloves. She is not long in notifying Gardener's wife. Rickert, while writing a letter to his home, finds the blotter which had blotted the letter that Miss Busybody had written to Mrs. Gardener. Holding the blotter to the mirror, the writing told the terrible story. When Mrs. Gardner arrived and her husband's traveling bag is searched at the suggestion of Miss Busybody, they discover a new suit for Gardener's boy, and the gloves missing. Mrs. Gardener orders Miss Busybody from the room. Hubby forgives his wife for thinking he was any other than he should have been.

THEIR BABY (May 29).—Jack and May Geary leave their ten months old son with the nurse and go to the St. Clair's for supper. May becomes jealous of Jack, and leaves the party telling Mrs. St. Clair she is going to get the baby and return home to mother. In the meantime, the Geary's maid holds a convention of nursemaids in the Geary household. When Mrs. Geary returns for her child, she picks up an infant, unaware that there are several others in the room. Mr. Geary also returns and he takes a baby. Thus the trials and tribulations of the Gearys are straightened out in the police court.

THE GOOD IN THE WORST OF US (May 30).—Joan proves her sisterly love by saving Mary from the penitentiary. The life that Joan led had often placed her behind the bars, but she could not bear to see her younger sister, Mary, travel the same route. Mary married a man, presumably in good circumstances, but after the wedding vows had been taken, Mary discovered that her husband was making counterfeit money. The two were arrested. Joan proved conclusively to the judge that her sister was not guilty, that she herself had been making and passing the fictitious bills. Joan sacrificed her freedom for the love of her sister.

"ALKALI" IKE'S MISFORTUNES (May 31).—Sofie Clutts, the belle of Lizardville, returns from her visit to the East, and the men clamor to see her. Alkali Ike is robbed of his suspenders, his hat and coat, so that three of the men could look presentable. Sofie tries to entertain her three suitors, one in the parlor, another in the dining room, and the last in the kitchen. Alkali Ike calls to see the fair Sofie, and is shoved by suitor number one from the parlor into the dining room, his next trip from the dining room into the kitchen, and the last trip, the one that hurt the most, was from the kitchen through the window into some shrubbery. Alkali Ike's revenge is sweet. He purchases four electric belts, and when the wires become short-circuited, you just ought to see what happens to the suitors.

VITAGRAPH.

UP AND DOWN THE LADDER (May 26).—Absorbed in his books, Mr. Stoddard, a bachelor book-lover, is interrupted by his servant, who brings him a small package. Opening it, Stoddard finds that it is a rare edition sent him by one of his nephews. The man-servant turns to dust the room but in doing so knocks down a valuable bust of Shakespeare, breaking it in pieces. Indignant at his carelessness, his master picks up the paper and looks through the "Want Ads," determined to get a housekeeper whom he can trust. He answers the advertisement of Luella Pears, saying however, that she need not come unless she is forty-five years old. When she gets his letter, Luella, who is only eighteen and who is desperately in need of a situation, decides to make up as an older woman and take the job. She arrives at the house the next morning just as the Professor is trying to glue the pieces of the broken statue together. He gets his hands all covered with the glue and makes an awful mess in the room. When she shakes hands with him their hands stick together and after they have broken apart, much to his disgust, she begins to tidy up his den. Stoddard does not wish to be in the dust of the tidying process and leaves the house to spend a week in Washington. As soon as he has gone, she lets down her hair and he sees her as a young girl, when he returns in search of a forgotten umbrella. He immediately falls in love with her and she makes him help her in putting things straight, making him get down the books from the upper shelves. Forgetting his customary reserve, Stoddard lets convention fly to the winds and takes her in his arms while they are up the ladder. After a lingering kiss, he proposes to her and she accepts him. Stoddard makes an admirable husband and an adoring father to the group of children that soon spring up to fill the home of this happily mated couple.

TRICKS OF THE TRADE (May 27).—Jack Breen and his wife, Lizzie, are professional crooks, who live in a fine house and set themselves up as belonging to the best. Breen gets his living by various means, including begging. He dresses in ragged clothes and picks up crusts in the street, which he pretends to eat, thereby exciting the sympathy of passers-by. Jennie Corcoran, thinking his case one of genuine misery, gives him some money.

He returns to his wife with his ill-gotten gains and changes his clothes. He manages to steal an overcoat from a poor actor who is trying to sell it and then steals a box of handsome shirt waists from a department store. Returning to his wife with these various things, he gives her the waists, one of which she put on, and changing into evening clothes, he goes out with her to dinner. At a swell restaurant, where they dine, Lizzie meets Jack Williams, a young fool, and starts to flirt with him. In the course of the evening she manages to get his diamond ring, adding another item to the spoils of the day.

Nemesis is on their track. Jennie comes to the restaurant and recognizes the beggar of the morning. She reports him to a police officer, who shadows him. He is seen to try the beggar gag again and is arrested. Detectives are put on the case and the whole sordid career of Breen and his wife exposed. Both are given a heavy sentence in jail, a punishment which is well merited by their career of crime.

CUTEY PLAYS DETECTIVE (May 28).—Seeing Cutey play the part of a maid of all work at a college play, Alys Trevor seeks an introduction to him and they soon become good friends. She takes him with her to present him to her mother, whom she finds talking to a stranger, Lord Goodbluff. Mama does not seem very pleased to meet Cutey.

Later, Cutey calls at the Trevor house to see Alys and meets Goodbluff there, who soon quarrels with him. Mrs. Trevor, entering in the midst of the dispute, requests Cutey to leave the house and apologizes to Goodbluff for the young man's behavior. Then she sends a note to Cutey, telling him that her daughter is no longer free to receive his calls.

By a strange occurrence, Cutey's suspicions of Goodbluff are aroused and he determines to watch him. Noticing an advertisement in the paper for a maid of all work, inserted by Mrs. Trevor, he obtains the necessary disguise and applies for the position, which he gets. On two occasions he is able to interrupt Goodbluff just as he is on his knees proposing to Alys, who has recognized Cutey and is enjoying the joke immensely.

Mrs. Trevor gives a ball, to which many guests are invited, including a Miss Whitehouse and her admirer. Cutey, who is watching in the conservatory from behind the portieres, sees Goodbluff steal a pearl necklace from Miss Whitehouse, who is sitting behind the palms with her beau, and then sees him hand the necklace to a confederate. Drawing a revolver from under his skirts, he holds up the two men and exposes the thief. The "maid of all work" receives the plaudits of all the guests and then takes off "her" wig, disclosing the fact that "she" is a man. Mrs. Trevor is at first inclined to be angry when she recognizes Cutey, but forgives him and offers no further objections to his attentions to Alys, who is overjoyed at having got rid of an objectionable suitor.

THE ONLY VETERAN IN TOWN (May 29).—More interested in automobiling than in anything else, Mr. and Mrs. Arnold are inclined to be neglectful of their little daughter, Dora, and are almost entirely unmindful of her grandfather, James Arnold, a one-armed G. A. R. veteran living with them. Dora makes up as well as she can to her grandfather for his loneliness and the two spend the greater part of their time together.

On Decoration Day, Dora's parents want her to go with them to see the parade, but as they do not wish to take her grandad with them, she refuses to go and stays at home with him. After a while she coaxes the old gentleman with her into a field of daisies, where she wreathes a crown of flowers and places it on his head. Seated thus in state, he is found by a delegation of citizens, who, having learned that he is a war veteran, bring a message that the town desires to honor him. Taking the old man, who will not be separated from his granddaughter, to a gaily decorated automobile, they conduct him to the grandstand in town, where a dais has been prepared for him. All along the route the old veteran is greeted with rousing cheers, and on arriving at the stand he is asked to speak.. Mr. and Mrs. Arnold see the passing of the decorated automobile and the honors paid to the veteran by the townspeople and are filled with remorse at the manner in which they have treated him in the past. They make the best amends possible and the whole party returns happily homeward to finish the celebration of the day in his honor.

A HUSBAND'S TRICK (May 30).—Converted to the cause of woman's suffrage by her Aunt Lucretia, Edna Penfield, who has but recently married, joins a suffrage club and soon becomes its president. Her duties in that position take up so much of her time that she becomes neglectful of home duties and her husband protests. Edna says she will leave the house and live with Lucretia, where she will have her liberty

Penfield's sister, Beatrice, whom Edna has never seen, comes unexpectedly to visit him and is seen embracing him by Lucretia, who has come to fetch some forgotten papers. Denouncing Peufield as a base deceiver, Lucretia rushes away to tell Edna what she has seen. Penfield, quickly grasping the situation, determines to teach his wife a lesson, and to that end he suggests to his sister that she shall pose as his affinity. She agrees and is found in Penfield's arms when Edna reaches the house, which she at once leaves in indignation.

That evening, while she is addressing a large audience at the theater, she observes her husband and Beatrice in a box and is almost overcome by her emotions. She manages to finish her speech and after the meeting accompanies the other suffragettes to a fashionable restaurant where she is showered with congratulations. Not being able to bear the thought of separation from her husband, she suddenly announces that she has finished with the Club and rushes to her home, where the true state of affairs is explained. Aunt Lucretia, who follows her, finds Penfield, much to her indignation, sitting with his arms around both Edna and Beatrice, who have become the best of friends. Her surprise is even greater when Edna abruptly dismisses her, blaming her as the cause of all her troubles.

ONE CAN'T ALWAYS TELL (May 31).—Why will visitors always give short notice, think the three Misses Bardell, when one morning they receive a letter announcing the arrival of their Aunt Lydia in the afternoon. All is hustle and bustle, for, although they have never seen the old lady, they know she is a particular housekeeper and their own house is upside down. The maid declines to be hustled about by three people at once and leaves in a huff. In despair the sisters 'phone to an employment agency for a maid and anxiously await her arrival. It does not occur to them to tidy the house themselves.

Aunt Lydia, dressed very simply and plainly, arrives at the house and is mistaken for the expected maid. She is given a countless number of tasks to do all at once and starts cleaning up. While she is sweeping the steps, the real maid arrives and is coaxed by Aunt Lydia to impersonate her. The maid, as Aunt Lydia, is received right well by the girls, who shower her with kindnesses in spite of the fact that she drinks out of a saucer and makes other similar mistakes. Behind her back, the girls make fun of her, disgusting the real aunt, who is waiting on them as maid. The manner of the girls becomes so overbearing that the real aunt discloses her identity, telling the girls that her money will be left to charity, she departs, taking the maid with her.

IF DREAMS CAME TRUE, or WHO'D HAVE THUNK IT? (May 31).—A fat man's jealousy is aroused by the arrival of an old chum of his sweetheart's brother. To soothe his feelings he gulches himself with food and wine, after which he falls asleep and dreams that the young lady is eloping with the man in question. He wakes up to find that it is only a nightmare.

THE WHITE SLAVE (2 parts, May 31).—Part One.—The estate of Terrebonne, in Louisiana, had been heavily mortgaged by the owner, Judge Payton, who, when he died, left the estate to his brother's widow and her son George, making Mrs. Peyton the guardian of Zoe, his natural daughter by a quadroon. Zoe is a very attractive girl and wins the heart of George Peyton, who has been pledged to marry his cousin, Dora Sunnyside. Zoe captures other hearts as well. Scudder, a Terrebonne overseer, and McClosky, a slave trader, both fall victims to her charms and rivalry between them becomes intense.

The mortgage on Terrebonne is suddenly foreclosed. McClosky discovers that the Free Papers of Zoe were taken out by Judge Peyton after the date of the mortgage, an illegal proceeding. Zoe is therefore an octoroon and still a slave of the estate. McClosky determines to obtain Zoe for himself. Mrs. Peyton is expecting a check that will redeem the mortgage. If McClosky can delay the check, the estate will be sold and he will then be able to buy Zoe.

Mrs. Peyton sends Paul, a little slave boy, to fetch the mail, expecting the check with it. On his way back Paul notices the tin-type camera of Scudder, the overseer. He tells Wah-No-Tee, an Indian and his protector, to remove the cap from the camera.

McClosky approaches the boy from behind and strikes him with a heavy club. McClosky opens the mail bag and extracts the letter and check, which he places in his bosom. The Indian thinking that the camera is a sort of gun that has killed Paul, smashes it with his club. Then he buries Paul in a near-by cane-brake.

Part Two.—Zoe is put up for sale. McClosky bids highest. Paul is called and found missing. A search is made and the rifled mail bag found and close to it the club with which the boy had been killed. McClosky points out that the club is the property of the Indian Wah-No-Tee and accuses him of the murder.

When the Indian is brought he describes with gestures how he had found the body, of the burial, and of smashing the camera. Scudder picks up his camera and finds that in its fall the dark slide had automatically closed. He takes the plate and develops it. The photograph shows McClosky kneeling by the body and opening the mail bag. The sheriff takes the murderer, and the check is found on him.

George Peyton confesses to his mother that he still loves Zoe. She overhears his declaration and knows that as a slave, George cannot marry her. She goes to the slave quarters and gets some toothache cure, which is poisonous. Meanwhile, Wah-No-Tee is on the trail of McClosky, who has escaped. Scudder and the others allow the Indian to wreak his vengeance, return to the house, bearing the check that will redeem the estate and free Zoe.

Zoe comes into the house and seeks out Dora Sunnyside whose forgiveness she asks, having won the love of George Peyton, placing Dora's hand in his. Zoe swoons and is brought back to consciousness by Dora and George. She tells George to fill a glass with water and empty the headache medicine into it. Thus, she dies by the hand of the man she loves, just as Scndder enters with the check that would have obtained her freedom.

WAMBA, A CHILD OF THE JUNGLE (Special—2 parts—May 26).—Wamba, a half-breed woman, and her Portuguese husband, Pete, live near a jungle in British East Africa. One day Wamba's child falls sick and she asks her inebriated husband to get Dr. Rice, the surgeon at the British Trading Post, some miles distant. Pete turns a deaf ear to his wife's pleadings and finally when he is in a drunken stupor the sympathetic mother love of Wamba asserts itself and she deserts him. She reaches the doctor's home where she is kindly received, and after hearing of the brutality inflicted upon her by her husband, Dr. and Mrs. Rice decide to protect her by retaining her in their household. The doctor is unable to save Wamba's child and it passes away.

Pete, in the meantime, discovers that his wife and child have disappeared and tracks them through the jungle to the doctor's home. He attempts to drag Wamba away, but the doctor intercedes, thus incurring the everlasting enmity of the treacherous drunkard. Pete leaves the house, vowing vengeance, but lingers in its vicinity and one day when Dr. and Mrs. Rice visit a neighboring settlement he crawls behind the unsuspecting Wamba, hits her on the head, knocking her unconscious, and abducts the doctor's child, Lillian. But the little girl manages to escape through the jungles, followed closely by Pete. After escaping many tortous deaths by the ferocious lions, she arrives at the edge of a high precipice. She turns and sees Pete close behind with a lion following him. The next moment she throws herself over the precipice into the waters below and swims to the other shore. Pete follows, but instead of swimming to the other side, hides himself under an overhanging rock.

Meanwhile Wamba has regained consciousness and takes the trail of the missing Lillian, whom she finds about to take refuge in a hollow log from the carniverous lions. Wamba seizes her rifle and begins shooting and soon the little girl is clutched to the bosom of the mulatto woman. The Rices return, and discovering that their daughter and Wamba are missing, form a posse and start in pursuit. Lilliao and Wamba are found and the posse then takes the trail to Pete's shack, where they find all that remains of him after a conflict with the lions.

RELIGION AND GUN PRACTICE (May 26).—Wesley Judell, as a missionary, finds a futile but puzzling field for work in the far, wild, West. In the temporal rush and struggle for existence, spiritual affairs are not as deeply pondered as he would wish, and life seems cheap and feverish. He has a wide territory to cover in his parish rounds, and in his absence his comely daughter, Winona, looks after the shack which serves for a parsonage. She converts Kill Kullen, who has wandered from the straight and narrow path, but despite this dereliction, he is the straightest shot in that section. The young people fall in love with each other, and the firm, fearless, yet gentle Winona succeeds in thoroughly reforming the redoubtable Kill Kullen. The missionary objects to this marriage, but she persists. She gives him spiritual advice, while he, in return, instructs her in riding and shooting. By following the up-lift plan, he secures a good position, and is a useful member of the community. Her good old father in time relents and consents, so all ends well, through the interchange of religion and gun practice.

THE GIRL AND THE JUDGE (May 27).—George Goff, the son of a wealthy city judge, goes to the country for a summer spell. He conceals his identity, but woos and wins Grace Green, the daughter of a stern and honest old farmer, who takes in summer boarders. He begs her to elope with him and she finally consents. He installs her in a rich apartment in the city, and then she awakens to find a letter that his allowance will be cut off unless he returns home at once, only telling her further that she has never known his right name and advising her to return home, broken-hearted. She follows this advice in all contriteness; but her irate father will not receive her, so she is driven back to the great city. She is eventually brought before Judge Coff in the night court, who fines her for being alone on the streets. She spends her last penny to buy a paper and immediately responds to the advertisement for a home maid. She finds herself in service in the palatial home of Judge Goff, and the moment that worthy sees and recognizes her, he denounces her in round set terms as one unworthy of such a situation. The shock throws her into hysterics. When the judge, enraged and bewildered, gives her money, she throws it back at him in scorn. As she is about to leave the house, Grace meets George Goff. He is at once in great consternation, wanting to know what she is doing there and pleads desperately for her to leave without betraying him. This was farthest from her intention and she runs from the hated place, out into the street. Judge Goff overhears this last colloquy. It breaks his iron will and his stern sense of justice reasserts itself. He sends his butler after the girl and she is finally persuaded to return. Then he sends for his son and tells him that if he does not consent to immediate marriage to right her wrong, he will cut him off without a penny. This brings the young man to a realizing sense of her true worth and the fact that he loves her truly.

THE WGRDLESS MESSAGE (May 28).—Captain Porter, a veteran of the C. A. R., is gathering flowers for Decoration Day. He is accompanied by his daughter, Bessie, and her fiancé, Tom, a custom that has been hallowed by tender memories ever since her babyhood.

The scene shifts to the next recurrence of the anniversary. Bessie, in the interim, has eloped, while under the malign influence of a quick infatuation. She is too ashamed and too proud to write a word of explanation to the captain and Tom, in their grief and loneliness. The poor, lonely old soldier tries hard to forget, but his grief is too poignant. He cannot even gather flowers again. His sole comfort is considerate Tom, who continues as his faithful friend.

Five years passed. Life has been growing harder for Bessie, although she has been deserted by her worthless husband. One day she happens to see a motion picture called "Memorial Day in a Country Town." On the screen before her, she sees again her old home, the town poet, her brave, faithful, first sweetheart Tom, and then her dear old father, too feeble to keep step with the other soldiers, staggering in his weakness and falling from the ranks. This wordless message from the past, breaks her selfish pride and sends her back to the old home in meekness and happiness. There, in the old garden, she finds once more love and happiness, after the flight o fyears.

THE EX-CONVICT'S PLUNGE (May 29).—Elton Gates, having served seven years for submitting to temptation with a bank's funds, is released. His uncle John sends him $500.00, with which to start life anew. He has hardly rested in a cheap lodging house when Detective Doolittle spies him and commences to make him an object of special scrutiny. The detective begins to trail him, hopefully awaiting his fall from grace. Gates watches a great house as the detective watches him. When the occupants, Mr. and Mrs. Rugly, leave, he goes to the door, rings, chats with Marie, the maid, and is admitted. He goes to the boudoir of Helen Rugly, his old sweetheart, and takes a photograph of her that he finds there. Going out he gives Marie a bill that he strips from his roll. The ex-convict is followed at every turn by the detective, who is now newly disguised. Guided by the photograph, he rents Bronson's Gallery for a week, paying for it in advance. These negotiations are puzzling to the detective, who now finds Gates quite alone in his new, short-leased home. When Helen Rugly finds her photo gone, she summons her maid and tells her they must get a copy. They visit the photograph gallery, where she meets and recognizes Gates. He tells her that he committed a crime for her sake and served seven years on expiation. The old love flames anew, and she rushes into his arms. The future looks good for them and the sneaking detective pockets his discomfiture and suspicions and allows them to go on their way to happiness without hinderance, SCENES IN MANILA (May 29).—Another of the ever interesting Selig Travelogues.

THE WOOD FIRE AT MARTIN'S (May 30).—An aged composer named Richmond, oppressed by poverty, is still striving to write the great opera that tortures him in sleep. One bitter cold night he befriends Reita, a poor Irish girl, that he finds starving almost in the shadow of Martin's cafe, where Bohemians congregate. After her first pangs of hunger are alleviated she hears an old Irish air played upon the piano there, and sings out in joy, with such sweet quality of tone that Martin at once engages her to sing regularly. Richmond seeks an audience with Delano, the producer, who turns him down in bitter fashion; Delano then hears of the failure of an opera he had selected open-eyed, and banked on as a winner. In disgust he eventually drops into Martin's to drown his chagrin in liquid refreshment. At a nearby table is old Richmond, the picture of despair, with his well thumbed manuscript on the floor beside him. Reita comes, picks it up and the musician begin to play as she sings the big airs of the unpublished work. All present are stirred by the wonderful music, but none are more deeply moved than the disgruntled Delano himself. He puts business immediately in train, secures Reita and the rights of the opera. She makes an enormous hit, likewise the opera. Reita becomes the toast of the town, and old Richmond's discarded music commands a prince's ransom; and thereafter they all meet in joy for many happy days and nights about the wood fire at Martin's.

BIOGRAPH.

HIGHBROW LOVE (May 26).—Fred was no highbrow, but in spite of all her primness and learning, he fell for Mary's undoubted charm. One day he was handed this communication: "Dear Freddie: I am going to Box Springs to be quiet and alone with by beloved Samuel Johnson. Lovingly, Mary Highbrow." Jealous rage stirred Fred's bosom for his new found rival. He followed, blood in his eye. Mary, the highbrow, however, explained matters to both Fred and Blacksmith Johnson, but Fred at the time was a little worse off for his experience,

THE TRIMMERS TRIMMED (May 26).—The trimmers were three hoboes until very properly the sheriff and those whom they had trimmed appeared and proceeded to be the trimmers themselves. The tramp, who was somewhat of a "wise guy" found the sheriff's coat on an airing. That gave him an idea for "big eats" in the future. He proceeded to hold up speeders in the country. The fines brought the necessary "eats" but unfortunately for the tramp the sheriff "got wise."

A DANGEROUS FOE (May 29).—The judge's young daughter championed the cause of Ching Fow against "The Bull." Kindness begot kindness again in a manner unlooked for and unusual. Ching Fow proved himself an unconscious humorist, but his very practical joke saved a life, making as well an exceptionally thrilling story.

HIS MOTHER'S SON (May 31).—The hardship of earning an existence for the family made it impossible for the mother to approve the little pretty things which her daughter liked. Lack of attention made her son dissolute, but later the sturdy stock of his mother showed in him and the cozy home he provided for dad and sister made them forget the post.

THE FOSTER BROTHERS (May 29).—Sir George Waterbury, accompanied by his wife and foster brother, Robert, is on a shooting expedition in a wild part of Australia. The two men, although occupying different stations in life, are deeply attached to each other. Inadvertently, mistaking the victim for a tiger, they shoot a native, and as they both fired at the same instant, it cannot be told which was the one actually responsible for the fatal shot. The native's father, according to the savage doctrine "an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth," demands the death of the slayer. Robert would gladly yield himself up, but the nobleman will not assent to this. They resolve to decide the issue by cutting the cards. By a trick the heroic Robert cuts the low card, and goes cheerfully to his doom. But his act of self-sacrifice is discovered, and by the prompt action of Sir George, death is averted and the matter settled in a more amicable way.

BORROWED PLUMAGE (May 27).—Dudley is completely on his uppers when he calls on his old friend, Jones. Jones, a photographer, is about to start on a short trip, and at Dudley's suggestion, hires him to handle his business until his return. Dudley starts well and business improves rapidly, but specimens of the photos ore returned and Dudley is the victim of a pitiful ordeal.

THE CHAMPION FIXER (May 27).—Judson is forbidden the pleasure of calling and resorts to serenading his sweetheart. When Mabel's father ejects him from the premises, Judson decides to outwit him.

The next day the father receives an anonymous letter from the desperate lover, warning him that the secret society, The Friends of Humanity, are after him. Judson advertises himself as a detective and is hired to defeat their purpose. Judson acquires the confidence of the father and regardless of what happens, his slogan is, "Leave it to him." Using this ruse as a means to an end, eventually results in Judson's marriage to Mabel.

JOHN MANLY'S AWAKENING (May 16).—John Manly one day learns to his great sorrow that Caroline Hastings, whom he was going to ask to be his wife, is already betrothed to another. Five years later he is summoned to the bedside of a dying friend, who asks him to take care of his daughter. He promises, takes her to his home and places her in the care of his housekeeper. The girl awakens Manly from his moody state, and, one night as she is playing and singing at the piano, he impulsively kisses her, but retreats, embarrassed for what he has done. One day Caroline returns to his home and tries to awaken his old love for her, but is met by coldness. As she is pleading with him, Ethel, Manly's protege, comes upon them. Thinking that she has stumbled upon a love scene, she goes to her room and is caught by Manly writing a note of her leave-taking. As he is reading the letter she notices the photo of Caroline lying torn to pieces on the floor, and Manly tells her what she has already guessed.

A CONCERTO FOR THE VIOLIN (May 17).—John Carroll, a young composer, has just completed a concerto for the violin, and brings it to Nada Malinsky, a famous Russian violinist, who is visiting the country, and induces her to play the piece. She is so enraptured by it that she promises to play it at her great concert at the Carnegie Hall. Carroll has fallen in love with Nada and neglects his devoted wife, who is also a talented violinist. One day, while at the apartments of Nada, he kisses her and in the reaction of his deed rushes from her home, with Nada following him. When he reaches home his wife, Sylvia, in a last effort to win him back, begins to play the concerto on her violin. Just then Nada comes in, and, hearing the wonderful playing of Sylvia, suddenly devises a plan. On the night of the concert, when Carroll goes to the piano to play the accompaniment for the concerto, Nada leads Sylvia on the stage and announces that the composer's wife will play the concerto. The result is a happy reunion between husband and wife.

BY MUTUAL AGREEMENT (May 19).—The husband, a big jovial sort of fat, careless man, is not as considerate of his wife as he should be, and when he returns from an errand he is upbraided by her for taking so long. He then proclaims himself to be the boss, takes his pipe and tobacco and smokes to his heart's content. The wife is horror-stricken and they decided to get a divorce. The lawyer, who is an old friend, wisely suggests a separation for six months, and the husband goes to the city to have a good time. It is not long after that he finds the great metropolis no place for a man without friends, and he wends his way back home.

THE GOOD IN THE WORST OF US (May 20).—Bill Brace and Sam McClure, accused of theft, are caught and imprisoned by the Northwest Mounted Police. A short while after they break jail and in making their escape they come upon the daughter of their erstwhile captor, Sergeant Williams. Fearing that the child might furnish some clue as to their whereabouts, they take her with them to an old barn, where they seek refuge. Hunger overtakes them and Brace goes out, obtains food, but is shot just as he is about to enter the hiding-place. Through the vigilance of the police they are unable to escape from the barn and they then decide that it is best to take the little girl home. McClure brings her to her home just as Sergeant Williams comes in. The thieves are again sentenced to a term in prison.

GLIMPSES OF COLORADO IN WINTER (May 21).—In this film we get some fine views of Colorado Springs and the mode of living there. We then take an auto trip around a winding mountain until we come to the picturesque ruins of the ancient Cliff Dwellers, where real Pueblo Indians show us through the ruins of their ancestors. We then go to the sacred spring of the Indians called Manitou Spring. Other interesting views of Colorado and its vicinity are shown, and the film ends with a view of Pike's Peak.

BRAGG'S NEW SUIT (May 21).—Mr. Bragg is pushed into a pile of mud by the foreman of a gang of laborers for interfering with his admonitions to his workmen. The foreman, realizing that he was to blame, gives Bragg his best suit of clothes. At the club that night Bragg creates quite a sensation with the new suit, and springs a marvelous yarn of bravery, of course, bringing a lady into it. Just as he is about to finish his narrative, the foreman, who has been seeking Bragg, comes upon the scene and tells the true story. Bragg is given the laugh and the club members help the foreman get back his clothes.

A RACE TO NEW YORK (Being the eleventh story of "What Happened to Mary"—May 23).—After being rescued in an unconscious condition by the lightkeeper of Martha's Vineyard, Mary's next concern is how to get off the island and back to New York. She knows now that Mr. Craig must have a powerful motive for trying to keep her out of the way.

The next day brings the supply boat to the island and Mary, after much intercession with the captain, is allowed to get aboard and sail for the mainland. Meantime John Craig and his son, still aboard the schooner from which Mary had previously escaped, are consumed with impatience.

Suddenly a cry of fire runs through the ship and great volumes of smoke pour through the hatchway. The boat is a furnace. They lower the small boats and John Craig suddenly finds himself in an open boat on the bosom of the Atlantic. Several hours afterward they reach Martha's Vineyard greatly exhausted, only to discover that Mary had departed an hour before they arrived.

Craig hires a launch and gives chase. Mary reaches the mainland first and is conducted to the railway station, where she boards a train for New York. Then Craig reaches the mainland, and, arriving at the station, learns that the train has just left. In desperation he hires an automobile and again a chase is on.

At Easton Junction, where Mary has to change cars, Craig manages to catch up with her, but Mary being in a crowd, he dares not molest her. He boards the same train and takes up a position several seats behind her. Now there flashes across Mary's mind a daring scheme. It is her only chance; she will try it. The train pulls into the station. She suddenly jumps up, leaves the car, and Craig tries to follow, but there are several passengers who have risen in the meantime, also to leave the car. While he is trying to push his way out to the platform, Mary manages to run the length of the car, board the other platform and disappear into the train she has just left. Craig, of course, thinks she is leaving the station with the other passengers and only discovers his mistake when the train is pulling out and he realizes that he has been outwitted by a slip of a girl called Mary.

THE TRANSLATION OF A SAVAGE (May 24).—Frank, the son of General Armour, leaves his home at Greyhope, Staffordshire, for America to attend to his Hudson Bay interests in Canada. Shortly after his departure his fiancee, Julia, Sherwood, writes him cancelling her engagement with him, and soon becomes the betrothed of Lord Haldwell. Frank is heartbroken and marries Lali, the daughter of a primitive trapper. Frank sends her to his palatial home in England. Consternation reigns when the uncouth girl arrives wrapped in a buckskin blanket and furs. The tedium of table etiquette and the wearing of beautiful clothes by the people, play upon the untutored soul of Lali, and for many a day she runs and hides herself in the hedges, clad in her buckskin raiment. But as time goes on she becomes accustomed to these different things and when Frank returns after a year's absence he is surprised to find his wife completely regenerated, and looking beautiful in the dress of the woman of to-day.

DANCES OF THE AGES (May 26).—With the two principals in a ballet of forty dancers that is a feast to the eye. Back of this novelty there is woven a simple tale of an old fashioned dancing master, in his little garret room, who still clings to the old fashioned dances of grace and movement. Over his bowl of milk and crackers his head sinks to the table and in dreamland he becomes the dancing master of renown once again. At a great banquet table he meets his old cronies who have come together to discuss the progress of their art and thus, before these gray-haired men, we are shown the Dances of the Ages.

On the table before them appear dainty, tiny figures who flit before their gaze; a corps of wonderful miniature dancers. They dip back in the annals of time to the pre-historic dance of primitive man, who creeps from his cave and delights his mate with his barbaric movements to the sound of her tum-tum.

Now we have the slow, crawling incense and weird, snakelike movements of the Dance of the Priest of Ra, before an Egytian temple, 1200 B. C. This fades away and time creeps down to 400 B. C. to the Grecian Bacchanalia, where garland maidens give forth their joy in the abandanment of youth and gladness. Then the ancient Orient of 200 A. D. comes before us with all the voluptuousness of that period of veiled maidens and Oriental splendor. Then the stately Minuet of 1760 is shown, quickly followed with the wild frolic of the Carnival period of France; then the Cakewalk in America and back again to France, where we see the Apache Dance, and now the dreamy waltz of all nations and finally we step upon the ladder of today and see the modern Rag.

This delightful picture closes showing the old broken down dancing master trying to keep pace with the times and squirming himself into the inartistic movements and hops of modern Ragtime dances.

AN UNWILLING SEPARATION (May 27).—Abner Brown, a veteran of the G. A. R., and his wife, Sarah, have never missed going on Decoration Day to the grave of their son who was killed in the war. Abner's legs become paralyzed as the result of a fall and as the old folks are unable to do their work, their married daughter and son take them to the city, the father living with the son, the mother with the daughter. This is their first separation and it nearly breaks their hearts. On Decoration Day Mrs. Brown calls upon her husband and wheels him to the graveyard, where he again meets his old chums. The children, having missed their parents, go to the cemetery, where they find the old folks and realize their mistake in separating them. The old couple are brought back to their home, a man is hired to do the work, and Abner begins to recover the use of his legs.

NEWCOMB'S NECKTIE (May 28).—Mrs. Newcomb, who is rather color-blind, buys her husband a very "loud" necktie, which creates much laughter in the office. He tries many times to get rid of it, but each time some good-natured person returns it to him. At last he tears the tie into bits, and bribes a corner loafer into having a fight with him outside of his home. Just as Mrs. Newcomb appears, the loafer disappears. She notices that her husband is unhurt, but that his "beautiful" necktie is torn to shreds. She is heartbroken and he professes great sorrow. But the grief of Mrs. Newcomb is not long lived, for the janitor's daughter presents him with a duplicate of the "beautiful" necktie.

THE HONOR OF A SOLDIER (May 30).—Private Stanley is saying good-bye to his wife and daughter when his tent-mate calls him to join the regiment, which is about to go into action. Just before the advance, Stanley notices that the heavy firing is in the direction of his home and he leaves the firing line, going to his home in order to save his family. A shell hits and bursts in his home and sets it on fire. He carries his little daughter to his mother, who lives in the same town. When the roll is called Stanley is missed and the Sergeant's squad start out to learn his whereabouts. Stanley, from his mother's window, sees the soldiers coming and his old mother tells him to exchange clothes with a civilian who has just died. He does and thereby effects his escape, but is caught in the woods and brought before the Sergeant. As they are unable to learn his identity, they send for his daughter; but the child intuitively realizes that something is wrong and says that the dead man in that house is her father. The Sergeant departs with his men and Stanley goes to the general's headquarters, tells the true story and is restored to his place in the company.

AN ALMOND-EYED MAID (May 31).—Toko was counting the gold in the claws of the avaricious father of Peter San when that young lady came running into the room where these two men were sitting, in answer to her father's call. She noticed the marriage contract on the table, and wondered if her father could be selling her. She snatched the document and tore it into shreds. The father handed Toko a whip with which to beat Peter San, and would have done so if it were not for the appearance of Frank Grant, who had watched the proceedings from the outside. Frank applied the whip plentifully to both men and then took Peter San to the home of his fiancee, Alice, where she was employed as a maid. Peter San tried to make love to Frank, but could not succeed and at length resolved to kill Alice. Frank and Alice were strolling arm in arm in the garden and saw neither Peter San creeping behind with a dagger in her hand nor Toko and the father behind the wall, intent upon killing Frank. Peter San saw it all, however, and as Toko was about to run the knife into the breast of Frank, she jumped between and received her death blow.

(Excerpt from Genesis, Chap. IV.)

13 And Cain said unto the LORD, My punishment is greater than I can bear.

14 Behold, thou hast driven me out this day from the face of the earth; and from thy face shall I be hid; and I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth; and it shall come to pass, that every one that findeth me shall slay me.

15 And the LORD said unto him, Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold. And the LORD set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him.

16 ¶ And Cain went out from the presence of the LORD, and dwelt in the land of Nod, on the east of Eden.

17 And Cain knew his wife; and she conceived, and bare Enoch: and he builded a city, and called the name of the city, after the name of his son, Enoch.

The Wife of Cain

An Original Romance of the Primal

In Three Parts

Written and Directed by Charles L. Gaskill

Ready for Delivery not later than June 10

The story is saturated with beauty and is highly dramatic; and, although full of profound meaning, it is easily comprehended. It deals freely with the terrible crime of Cain, his terrible punishment and final regeneration through the wondrous love of a wonderful woman. It pictures the elemental passions as they were in the beginning, now and forever—love, hatred, jealousy, anger, greed and unselfishness.

PATHEPLAY.

PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 21 (May 19).—New York, N. Y.—Thirty thousand women march here in the suffrage parade, led by Miss Inez Milholland.

Berck Plage, France.—The residents here have developed a fine sport in sailing "aero-autos" on the beach.

St. Louis, Mo.—Robert S. Brookings, of Washington University Corporation, Andrew Carnegie and Dr. Richard Barthold, President of the Peace Congress, arrive here for the fourth American meeting of the Congress.

Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.—An enormous tide sweeps in from the sea doing a great amount of damage along the shore.

New York, N. Y.—A special performance at a theater here of "Within the Law" is given before an audience made up entirely of blind people.

Naples, Italy.—The King and Queen attend the launching of the dreadnaught "Andrea Doria," at the navy yard.

Chicago, Ill.—Chicago has decided to welcome Frank Chance, the manager of the "Yankees," with a big reception.

Madrid, Spain.—Prince Charoon, minister from Siam to the Spanish Court, presents his credentials to the King.

Washington, D. C.—A group of scientists gather at the Smithsonian Institute to unveil a tablet to the memory of Prof. Samuel P. Langley, pioneer in aviation, who seventeen years ago, launched the first heavier-than-air machine in the history of the world.

Montpelier, France.—President Poincare attends the Congress of Mayors and is enthusiastically received.

Comic Section.—Jeff wins five dollars and gets paid—but not in cash.

And Many Others.

BULLFIGHT IN FRANCE (May 27).—This is the most thrilling film ever offered to exhibitors. With it an exhibitor has an opportunity to present a bullfight that has more thrills than a Spanish bullfight, without the distasteful spectacle of a wounded bull. The French bullfighters use no weapons, depending solely on their nerve and agility to avoid his wild rushes.

IN THE FOREST OF COCHIN-CHINA (May 27).—A very interesting study of the gathering of lumber in Cochin-China, showing the antiquated methods by which the work is carried on.

THE FUGITIVE (May 28).—Harold Hammond sees a young girl accosted by a masher and immediately goes to her defense. Instantly a fight. The masher draws his gun but Hammond is quicker and the masher drops. Hammond flees and no trace of him is found. Years afterward a girl visiting an Indian settlement in the wilds of Arizona is surprised to meet a white man living with the savages and becomes interested in his story. The story he tells proves him to be Harold Hammond, the man who so gallantly defended the girl to whom he is talking. She tells him that the man he shot recovered later and received the penalty of the law for his offense. Hammond has long dreamed of the girl and she, having long longed to reward him, gives him her heart when he asks it.

WHITE LIES (May 29).—Lillian Sinclair is the belle of a little country town and the birthday party at her home is well attended. Her most ardent suitors are two brothers, Bill and Dan Douglas. In the course of the evening. Bill discovers that Lillian is in love with his younger brother, Dan. He mentions this to Dan and Dan laughs it off, telling him, Bill, that he is going out West the next day. After the guests have gone, a sudden tempest arises and Lillian watches the pouring rain through the window. A bolt of lightning flashes before her and the girl is blind. The flash of lightning is the most realistic thing you ever saw. Under the doctor's care, the blind girl now spends her time dreaming of Dan. No word is received from him, but Lillian's broken-hearted mother lies artfully to her that Dan has written in a letter that he loves her. Waiting for Dan, the girl is gradually falling in health and the doctor decides that nothing but Dan's love will save her life. But the first news of Dan is a notice to his brother of his death. Bill still loves the blind girl and with her parent's consent he proposes to her as Dan. She accepts and is soon happy and well, although she never discovers the white lies.

THE SPIDER WHICH LIVES IN A BUBBLE (May 30).—The spider studied in this film is the only member of the spider family that takes to the water, its favorite haunts being stagnant pools or sluggish streams overgrown with reeds. The most remarkable thing about the water spider is its home, as it lives in an air bubble. By gathering the tiny air bubbles that are constantly rising to the surface of the water, the spider, by slow degrees, builds a bubble large enough for himself to live in and enjoy the many insects on which it preys.

TRANSPORTATION METHODS IN JAVA (May 30).—An educational film that takes us to far-off Java, there to witness the difficulties with which the Javanese have to contend in embarking and disembarking from the steamers: also the dangers of unloading cattle, as there are no steamship docks in Java.

THE SQUAWMAN'S AWAKENING (May 31).—Paleface Magee, who has married a squaw and almost forgotten civilization meets, one day, a white woman being made captive by two Indians. He forces the Redmen to release her and as she thanks him, all his old dreams and memories return, bringing with them a yearning to return to his own people. Magee's squaw discovers his affection for the white woman and attempts a summary vengeance. Thwarted in her plan, she gathers her papoose in her arms, returns to her tribe, leaving Magee with his new love to answer the call of civilization.

THE HUMAN VULTURE (Special—2 parts—May 30).—Louis Fox, a master criminal and head of a band of kidnappers, has befriended Sarah Culver, a widow, who, just leaving a hospital, is being dunned by a Mrs. Thomas to pay for her daughter's care while she (Mrs. Culver) was ill. Louis has a plan to kidnap the baby daughter of Arthur Lee. The child is heiress to a million dollars which will revert to the donor's relatives should anything happen to the child. Fox requires an accomplice and after he paints in glowing terms the luxury for her and her child if she joins him, Sarah agrees. Louis is watching the home of Lee, when he sees the latter leaving the house with a bundle in his arms. Lee goes to the garden and Louis follows. Lee buries the bundle beneath a tree and Louis marks the tree. The next day Lee visits the rendezvous of the the kidnappers and explains to Louis that his daughter has died and that he wants another child to take her place so that he won't lose the money. Louis agrees to serve him.

Sarah has promised Mrs. Thomas to pay her, but is unable to do so, consequently Mrs. Thomas brings Sarah's baby to Louis' house and as Sarah is away she leaves a note of explanation. Louis, in attempting to kidnap a child is caught by the police. Sarah returns to Louis' house and almost immediately Lee calls, asking for the child Louis has promised him. Sarah sees the infant and, not knowing it is her own daughter, she turns the baby over to Lee. After Lee has gone Sarah finds the note from Mrs. Thomas. She rushes to the door to overtake Lee. The door opens and the police, with Louis in hand, block her path and arrest her as an accomplice.

Twenty years later Sarah has been released from prison and finds work in the home of Arthur Lee, where she is taking orders from her own daughter, who believes that Lee is her father and that her mother is dead. About this time Louis escapes from prison and straightaway calls on Lee—object blackmail. Seeing young Helen Lee, however, Louis demands her hand in marriage as the price of his silence. Lee refuses. Helen's fiance and his father are guests at the house and Louis tells them they will find something of interest if they will accompany him to the garden. They go out, but in the meantime Sarah has removed the evidence and when the investigators reach the tree Louis' case fails. Sarah confronts Louis and threatens, if he does not leave the house immediately, to inform the police where they can arrest an escaped convict. Louis makes a hurried departure, leaving Helen in happy ignorance of her origin and with her lover's confidence unshaken by the charges of "The Human Vulture."

THE TOURIST AND THE FLOWER GIRL (May 29).—Harry and Lee are college chums. Lee proposes to his cousin, Lois, but she puts him off. Harry, who is spending some time in California as a tourist, one day takes a walk. Lois sees him, and is taken with the handsome stranger, and throws him a rose. He wonders where it came from. Later he buys some flowers. Lois is determined to know Harry, and pays a flower girl to let her wear her coat, hat and sell her flowers.

Lois sees Harry and offers him her roses. He is vastly attracted to her. Lois induces the flower girl to let her take her place for several days, and Harry and Lois get quite chummy. Harry discovers the deception, and bribes the real flower girl to show him where Lois lives.

Bribing the butler, he dons his uniform, telling the maid that he has taken the regular butler's place as the latter is sick. Lois and the pseudo butler meet in the garden, and observing that Lee is jealous, Lois asks Lee to go shopping for her.

Harry's awkwardness at serving tea causes Lois mother to scold him. The demands of the real butler for money to get drink causes a delay, and Harry is scolded again. Lee comes back and recognizes Harry through his disguise. The two college youths then set upon the tipsy butler and trounce him. Explanations clear the way for Harry's formal introduction to Mamma, who looks amiably upon Harry's suit.

THE BOOB (June 1).—Mrs. Jackson and her daughter Bertha, of the "400," receive a letter from their country relative, Seth Harkins, stating that he is sending his son, Bill, to the city. Mrs. Jackson, horrified at the idea of entertaining such a person, decides to have her maid, Felice, masquerade as her daughter.

Bill arrives. He is the typical country boob. He is met by Felice, who proceeds to entertain Bill by taking him to the melodrama and other places of amusement most suitable to him. Bill finally falls in love with Felice, but is called home by a telegram. Felice realizes that she loves him.

Several months pass. Bertha receives a letter unburdening his heart. He tells her that they have sold their farm for $50,000. Mrs. Jackson and Bertha keep his coming a secret from Felice.

Bill finally arrives. The change in him is marvelous. He is now a howling swell. Mrs. Jackson and Bertha are terribly surprised. They try to persuade Bill of the "joke" they played on him, but he pays no attention to them and rushes Felice to the minister,

ECLAIR.

THE FAITH HEALER (2 parts—May 28).—Robert and Louise marry and are very happy, but the finding of a bible in their room at the hotel while on their honeymoon, develops the fact that Robert "does not believe." His wife expresses her regret at this, but it does not lessen her love. Two years later the panic catches Robert and he is suddenly ruined. His brave little wife offers to seek employment, but Robert is manly enough to go ahead as a laborer.

Dissolute, careless Helmar is married to a sweet little woman who can abide him no longer. Becoming desperate she writes to a friend asking him to take her away, saying otherwise she will kill herself. Helmar surprises his wife writing this letter. She attempts to conceal the note, but he forces her to show it.

Helmar offers his wife a revolver to carry out her threat, but her nerve fails. Picking it up, Helmar leaves the house, intent on suicide. He goes to the river when the thought comes of a better way to drop out of his wife's life. He leaves his coat and hat on the bank and buries himself in the army.

Helmar's wife, believing him dead, welcomes the attentions of her friend. Helmar sees her in an automobile with him. Helmar exclaims "I wish to God I were blind, so I might never again see the face of a woman." A few weeks later in battle, Helmar is blinded by the explosion of a shell. This terible visitation of the wrath of God makes of Helmar a strong believer and he devotes his life to the poor, opening a small mission, to heal the feeble and sickly by prayer.

Meanwhile Robert and Louise have been struggling through the years, unable to regain their last position. Then came sickness to their little Clara. On her way to the drug store to have a prescription filled, Louise slipped quietly into the little meeting house and stood for a moment until the gathering began to disperse—then—when the Faith turned toward her—she recognized—Helmar their former friend. Rushing forward, she made herself known to the blind man and then led him away to their little home, where her child was lying ill. Taking the beautiful little girl by the hand, Helmar prayed fervently and his message was heard. Clara regained her strength. One of Robert's former business competitors died and his will had bequeathed his entire fortune to Robbert. Helmar now went to live with Robert and Louise and Clara. One joyous day, the unfortunate man regained his sight. When wealth came again to Robert and Louise they began a search for Helmar's wife. They found her repentant and unhappy. The day Helmar regained his sight, his wife was brought to the home and there was a happy reunion.

A ROMANCE OF THE RAILS (May 29).—Charles Blake, a young engineer, passes on his daily run the home of Kitty Burke, and flirts with her. At last Charley stops his engine in front of Kitty's home and speaks to Kitty while she is arranging flowers in the yard.

Charley wears Kitty's picture in his watch fob. Lingering over it he hesitates too long and rushes to the round house. The superintendent, finding him late, places another engineer on his engine. Charley is discharged for back talk.

Meeting the engineer who took his engine, he quarrels with him and throws him from the cab. Thinking the engineer dead he rushes into hiding. Evening comes; he starts for Kitty's home by a circuitous route and comes upon a burglar. The police had been watching and come upon the scene, thinking Charley one of the burglars. A fight ensues; Charley gets away. The policeman falls and the thief gets away. Charley comes to Kitty's home and he explains all. A detective opens the locket and recognizing Kitty's picture start on the trail. They find Charley at Kitty's house, but he breaks away. The thief, who has been wounded by the policeman, crawls along the fence by Kitty's home and she sees him. Later the thief exonerates Charley.

Time passes. Kitty received a letter from Charley, who has secured work on a stock ranch in California. In her joy she rushes to telegraph him to come back, that he is vindicated. One week later Charley's old engine, decorated with ribbons, forms a background for a wedding party of which Charley and Kitty are the principals.

A WISE JUDGE (May 11).—Mr. and Mrs. Snap quarrel, as married folks sometimes do, and when the threat of a separation comes, each is too angry to take back the words spoken in haste. They feel too proud to retract later, The result is that an order is requested from the court, legalizing their separation.

But Judge Lynx thinks that he knows enough of human nature to be sure that this couple really does not desire a divorce. He tries a little plan of his own. Mrs. Snap is distressed for a moment by a terrible coughing spell, caused by the judge, who has thrown some powder into the fire. Immediately Mr. Snap rushes to the rescue and before they realize how it all happens, there has been a reconciliation.

Husband and wife return to their little home and agree to live in peace with their charming little daughter.

Will Sheerer, Julia Stuart and Clara Horton make some excellent comedy out of the laughable situations in this half reel.

THE MANUFACTURE OF STEEL (May 11).—On the same reel with this little comedy is found a splendid scientific subject, the various processes in the manufacture of steel being very clearly and entertainingly shown. The scenes in the steel mills here shown are not only instructive, but very beautiful. These scientific subjects have been proving very popular, and this is one of the best in the series.

HE LOVES TO WATCH THE FLIGHT OF TIME (May 18).—Watching the dial of a taxi-cab is like a fall on a slippery pavement. It is funny, only when the other fellow suffers. But Dada Newlywed is a game little father, and when he found that it tickled Snookums to see the numbers flash—well, he just wouldn't let his little darling howl and so he and that beautiful wife just rode around all the afternoon with the precious one.

Once or twice they thought they would quit, but Snookums set up a howl, and so back they climbed for another little ride. Finally Dada had a brilliant thought, and so he told Mr. Chauffeur to drive into the country. And what do you think?—when they were out about five miles—Snookums, the little bunch of sweetness, went to sleep.

And was Dada going to take chances on his waking up again—not on your life! He might want to see those numbers flash some more—and so Dada planked down forty odd simoleons for their "joy ride," and he carried "Snookums" back to his little trundel bed.

THE CUTTLEFISH (May 18).—This very interesting scientific study is found on the same reel with the latest Newlywed. This subject is quite instructive, since it is from the cuttlefish that India ink is made by natives in certain sections. Some very unusual scenes are shown, in which this fish defends itself from enemies by throwing out this thick, inky substance. This makes a reel which is certain to prove very, very popular.

GEM.

BILLY'S HONEYMOON (May 27).—Billy Quirk and his sweetheart, Dolly, plan to elope. However, troubles follow fast and furious. Dolly refuses to leave her pet dog behind. This causes a number of complications that sorely taxes the groom's devotion. They are put off street cars, out of hotels, and forced to climb trees and fences, while Billy's friends, who have got wind of the affair, track them in hot pursuit.

While the young couple are trying to elude their friends, the bottom falls out of the box in which the dog is concealed, and the pup runs away. Finally, after many ludicrous happenings, the baggage is collected, the dog returned, and amid a shower of rice and old shoes, the Quirks start on a real quiet trip.

CRYSTAL.

WHERE CHARITY BEGINS (May 27).—Helen, daughter of Mrs. Morris a wealthy widow, devoted her time to teaching at St. James Settlement House helping the sick and needy in the tenement district. Helen's mother at home alone, longs for companionship while her daughter is in the Settlement. Mrs. Morris becomes seriously ill and is attended by Dr. Gerald, Helen's ardent admirer. Helen neglects her mother and lover to devote herself to the care of Mrs. Dawson whose daughter is entertaining her beau, another of Helen's proteges.

The trained nurse neglects Mrs. Morris while her patient cries in vain for a drink of water. Helen returns home to find her mother unconscious on the floor while the nurse is flirting with the butler. Fully awakened by the incident, Helen resigns from the Settlement Club and vows to devote her time and companionship to her own mother and lover.

CLANCY THE MODEL (June 1).—An artist engages Clancey, the laborer, for a model for a painting. He is made to pose in a Indian suit. Clancy finds a bottle, and drinks freely, soon showing signs of an Indian uprising. The artist flees and Clancy climbs the fire-escape and enters the flat of Capt. Smythe of th etown militia, who is boasting of his bravery. Clancy chases him down stairs and makes him change clothes with him, and do a war dance to the consternation of a lady caller, who faints. He finally runs into the arms of the law, and is taken to jail, where he has a chance to reflect on his boisterous conduct.

HOOKED (June 1).—Mr. and Mrs. Short invite "Frenchy" home to dinner. A telephone message calls the husband to his office, leaving the guest to entertain the good looking wife, who looks good to Frenchy. The next day Short buys two boxes of candy one for his typist, the other for his wife. He encloses a card in the latter box, thanking the girl for working hard for him the previous night. Frenchy, who has called, switches the boxes. When wifey finds the candy and note, she becomes very cool to Mr. Short. Next day, when she sees the stenographer and discovers her to be a plain girl, she knows her suspicions are groundless, and she plans with her husband to get even with Frenchy.

When the latter calls again, Mrs. Short tells him that her husband plans to kill him. Frenchy hears him coming, and hides in a closet. Short fires off his revolver, nearly scaring the hidden man to death. He bolts for the street, and a policeman gathers him in.

NESTOR.

ON CUPID'S HIGHWAY (May 28).—Eddy and his chauffeur come to the rescue of Louise and her maid, Corinne, whose automobile breaks down. Lee soon puts matters right, and Corinne gets her fuzzy hair all mixed up with his as he tinkers about. Eddy naturally keeps Louise company and cards are exchanged. Arriving home papa puts a veto on the prospective call of the impecunious young lawyers, as he wants a titled man for a son-in-law.

One evening papa goes to the club, and is introduced to Lord Chester, and asks his lordship to call. While papa is thus being entertained, Eddy has called and is enjoying a tete-a-tete with Louise. Corinne spies Lee and introduces him to the butler and the cook and they all have a good time.

The following day his lordship calls, Louise however, has no use for titled personages with Eddy outside honking his auto horn. She excuses herself and escapes, taking Corinne with her. Papa agrees to pay the lord $100,000 the day he marries Louise.

His lordship, receives a letter from his mother, telling him to try and pay the mortgage on their estate. He follows up his suit with determination and Louise is forced to accept his offer.

The invitations are sent out and Louise's little sister, Lois, is summoned home. She meets the lord, and they are mutually attracted. Eddy gets desperate, and persuades Louise to elope with him.

His lordship can stand his false position no longer. He tells Louise to elope with him.

The parties all meet at the marriage bureau and again tumble upon each other at the parsonage. Explanations ensue and eventually all the couples appear before a puzzled and angry papa and mamma. Lord Chester gets his check and saves the family estates, and everybody is happy.

They Bring the Crowds

A DOUBLE SACRIFICE (May 28).—Jim and John Marsh, twin brothers, are totally unlike in nature and appearance. Jim is healthy, while John is sickly. Their father is a ranchman. May, the daughter of Ranchman Holt, has grown up with them. May is much attached to Jim and pays a good deal of attention to John from sympathy. He is hopelessly in love with her, but refrains from showing it.

On their birthday, Mr. Marsh gives the boys each one thousand dollars. John banks his, but Jim embraces the chance to see the outside world. Two years pass and Jim has had a good time, but no money. He receives a letter from May telling him that his brother John is failing fast and asks for him. Jim returns and his father berates him for squandering his money. Jim is astonished at the change in his boyhood sweetheart, May; it is not long before they are deeply in love with each other. Jim proposes and is accepted and asks Mr. Holt for his daughter. Mr. Holt tells him that when he can show him one thousand dollars that he has earned he can have May.

Upon his return home John notes his downcast demeanor; he persuades Jim to tell him what is the matter and upon learning the truth he persuades Jim to take his thousand dollars. Mr. Holt is puzzled, but is a man of his word and Jim rides away to buy the ring.

Marsh has bought a bunch of cattle from Holt and has to deliver his thousand dollars the same day. During the night one of the cowboys steals the money. Marsh comes to the hasty conclusion that Jim has taken it. He goes to Holt to explain the delay and learns that Jim had one thousand dollars and their suspicions become certainties. They ride off for the sheriff for Marsh intends to punish Jim. May overhears them and runs to John for advice. He tells her of the money he gave Jim and hands her the check stub. She gives him a good kiss and hurries off and intercepts the sheriff. They return to thank the sick man, but find that he has peacefully passed away.

BE IT EVER SO HUMBLE (May 30).—Joe, a stage driver, is engaged to marry Ruth, a beautiful singer and the pride of the town. Mr. Morton, an operatic impressario, attends a concert at which Ruth sings. He knows he has found a genius. He calls and makes her a direct offer that staggers her. Not knowing what to do she asks for time to give her decision. He and the horrified Joe drive off. A little way out Joe asks Morton to get down and see something. He accedes. Joe takes him up a path to a pretty little new cottage. He tells him that it is his gift to Ruth. It does not make much impression on the hard business man. A sudden rage comes upon Joe and he strides out after Morton and chokes him. He might kill him but for a gentle touch on the arm. He looks around and sees Ruth with her hat and her grip—she has decided to go. She would kiss him, but he says, "No, not till you return to me."

Ruth makes a success but does not find happiness. One night she has her triumph, and flowers and costly presents are sent to her dressing room, but one little box containing half withered violets appeals to her most. They are from the home that was to have been hers. The revulsion comes and Ruth throws up the fame for love and returns to the little cottage.

POWERS

THE END OF THE TRAIL (2 parts—May 30).—Bruce, a cowboy, loves Dolores, the elder daughter of Ranchman Hicks, Hicks' foreman would like to claim Dolores, but she does not fancy him. He awaits his chance to get even with both of them. Dolores goes to town to study singing. Hicks is worried because the drought has decreased his bankroll and Ridgeway, the money lender, takes the ranch as security. Hicks tells Ridgeway to call upon his daughter in the city and this he does, finally taking advantage of her.

Time goes on and Dolores returns to find her father very worried over money conditions. She hears that the man who loaned the money will come to claim the ranch. She surprises Ridgeway and her young sister together and sending the girl away she confronts Ridgeway. Their talk is overheard by Carlos, a half-breed, who owes a debt of gratitude to Dolores and the foreman. Bruce would kill Ridgeway, but Dolores begs him not to for her sake and her father's. Carlos goes secretly after Ridgeway after picking up Bruce's gun. Bruce whips the foreman who sneers at Dolores and the foreman arrives at the ranch house at the same time that Ridgeway does. Ridgeway sees the half-breed after him with a gun and hastily persuades the whipped and tattered foreman to put his coat on. The half-breed kills the foreman thinking it is Ridgeway, and Bruce arrives in time to pick up the gun and be suspected of the crime. He is jailed.

The half-breed rescues Bruce, and a providential happening enables Hicks to pay Ridgeway off. The latter goes to some Mexicans and persuades them to help him try and get Paquita, the young girl. They succeed in this, but circumstances cause the sheriff, Bruce and Carlos to arrive in time to save her and to arrest the Mexicans. Ridgeway leaves the others to their fate, but is tracked by Carlos and meets his deserts.

SECRET SERVICE SAM (2 parts—May 26).—The chief of the secret service warned his detectives to watch for Mme. Trebillic and two noted spies, suspected of shadowing diplomatic ataches. Secret Service Sam was given charge, a congenial assignment as it enabled him to see Mayre, the girl he loved.

Secret Service Sam had a non-commissioned aide in a boy who looked upon Sam as a composite of all the great detectives. The lad determined to do a little shadowing. One night he saw a scrubwoman enter the diplomatic building. The flash of diamonds on her white fingers convinced him she was a spy.

The head scrubwoman suspected the new comer, but a large bribe silenced her and as the watchman locked the doors, the spy got busy with the safe. The boy climbed the fire escape to better watch the spy. Suddenly looking up from her work, the woman saw the boy through the windows. Covering him with a revolver, she dragged him into the room. She bound and gagged him and thrust him into the wardrobe. Something was wrong, however, with the combination so she waited until morning to overpower the girl who opened the safe.

In the morning Mayre arrived, and opened the safe. The spy silently stole away with the portfolio. When the chief arrived he accused Mayre of the theft. She protested her innocence. Sam the first to arrive was shocked to learn that his promised wife was suspected. Mayre was taken away to await action of the grand jury. Sam remained behind to gather clues. He summoned the scrubwoman and noticed the diamond ring of the female spy upon the rough finger of the head scrubwoman. He at once put her through the third degree, but could learn nothing.

The female spy telephoned her success to her comradies, and tickets were engaged for a European steamer, but their auto broke down almost on the sailing hour.

Sam heard the bound boy writhing in the wardrobe. Locking the door upon her he liberated the boy who fainted before he could tell of Mayre's innocence. The spies reached the wharf, but the steamer was gone. They hurriedly hired a motor boat to overtake it, and hastened full speed down the bay.

When the boy regained consciousness, he told of the disguised spy, and the scrubwoman was put under arrest. Then Sam who had obtained a line on the spies, set off with the boy in a taxi. Hiring a tug the detectives set out in pursuit of the fast disappearing motor boat. One of the spies jumped overboard with the papers. Secret Service Sam leaped after him. There was a rough struggle in which Sam was victorious and he arrested the spies. Returning to the city, Sam reported to his chief who gave orders for Mayre's release. Sam got a promotion and the boy promised a great future as a secret service man.

LOVE, LIFE AND LIBERTY (2 parts, May 27).—Capt. Mario of the Spanish Army rescues Anita Ametza from insult. The beautiful Cuban girl, finds her admiration deepened to love when Mario saves her life in a military attack. Anita is escorted home by her uncle, Major Ametza, and one of his men, Capt. Zertuchia. Zertuchia asks the major's permission to remain at his home, and attempts to make love to reluctant Anita. After Zertuchia has departed, Anita's old father sends her with his uniform to his brother. On her way she meets Mario, who has just had a thrilling escape from two Cuban soldiers, and the beautiful girls begs Mario for love of her to don the Cuban uniform. Mario sadly refuses and Anita departs.

Zetuchia repulsed as suitor by Anita insults the girl. Anita's father orders him from the grounds.

Anita rides away to inform her uncle of Zetuchia's conduct. Meanwhile Zetuchia goes to the Spanish headquarters and convinces the Spanish major that Anita's home is the headquarters of the insorrectos. Receiving permission to destroy the home he leaves with a detachment. They kill the poor old father and mother and set fire to the lovely home. The faithful servant, Pedro, puts up a desperate fight with Zetuchia, stabbing him in the hand.

Changing his uniform again, Zetuchia learns that Capt. Mario has received a wound in one hand and is pursued to Major Ametza's garden. Anita has received a letter from Gen. Gomez, in answer to her uncle's request giving Mario a captain's commission if he will fight for the Cuban cause. Anita gives the pursued Mario a Cuban uniform and tells him to don it, binding up his wounded hand. When the Cuban cavalry, led by Zetuchia, enter the garden, Anita denies all knowledge of Mario's whereabouts. Zetuchia orders the house searched; Anita is frightened as Mario, refused to accept the Cuban commission saying that he must first resign his captaincy in the Spanish Army.

Zetuchia's men find Mario and lead him forth. Anita slips the commission in her lover's hand and he, realizing his predicament, hands the commission to the Major who orders his release. Mario writes his resignation to Gen. Weyler and rides away to deliver the letter. Pedro and Anita's sister have made their way to Major Ametza's home, where they tell the heart-broken Anita and the major, of the murder and outrage. Pedro describes the man who led the attack as one wearing a Spanish uniform, who received a wound in the hand. Anita believe Mario guilty. Mario is ambushed by Zetuchia and tied to a tree. Anita, in a frenzy, swears on the crucifix that if he wil ldeliver Capt. Mario to her she will marry Zetochia. The latter shows her the prisoner. As the Cubans are about to take Mario's life, Pedro saves him by recognizing Zetuchia and denounces him as the murderer. Zetuchia is taken away to prison and Mario is left with his love.

Mario and Anita are being married, when Zetuchia, having escaped from his keepers, confronts the bridal party, and holding the crucifix before the frightened girl, reminds her of her oath.

The priest tells them that Anita must keep her oath made on the cross. Anita bows her head, but Pedro, slips behind the convict and stabs him to death. Thus Anita and Mario are united.

THE HONOR OF THE REGIMENT (Two parts, May 31).—Jack and Frank, both captains, love Jane, the daughter of an American general. Jane favors Jack. Jack is a dissolute character, who has compromised Mollie, the sister of a sergeant in the regiment. She firmly believes that Frank will wed her. Her brother discovers Frank's perfidy and would kill him, but is prevented by Jack, who persuades all parties to keep silence for the honor of the regiment. The contretemps are responsible for Jack's missing an appointment with Jane. She is very angry at his tardiness, and going out, passes near the spot where Jack is comforting the miserable Mollie. Frank takes advantage to point out the compromising scene to Jane, who is convinced that Jack is false, and refuses to even say good-bye. Mollie accompanies her brother to the islands as a nurse. Jack believes Frank's assertion that he is engaged to Mollie. Nita, a native girl, is rescued from insults by Mollie and Jack. The American soldiers are ambushed by Filipinos. Jack prevents Frank from running away and is hit on the head by the coward. Frank commands the troops to retreat in disorder. He escapes the general slaughter. He is court-martialed, but says that Jack gave the odrer and is exonerated, while Jack's name is dishonored. Jack is found by Mollie, and later Nita saves them. Jack is taken to their cabin and tenderly nursed by Mollie. His mind is a blank. Her pity turns to love.

Jane hears of Jack's disappearance and, heartbroken, goes to the Philippines to act as nurse. She is told that Jack is dead, and will have nothing to do with Frank, who tries to court her. The sergeant, Mollie's brother, escapes, and knowing that he will inform American headquarters of their whereabouts, the Filipinos surround the Americans. Jack wanders off, and seeing a cave enters it. It leads him through the hill to the basin beyond. The excitement clears his brain and memory returns. He reaches the troops, and leading them through the secret passage, they turn defeat into victory.

Jack, wounded, is found unconscious by Jane. Mollie finds them and overhearing Jane's impassioned words, knows the truth. The sergeant finds them all there and Frank, knowing his end is near, shoots at Jack, the bullet killing poor Mollie instead.

WHY BABE LEFT HOME (May 18).—"Babe" Jordan was a farmer's son, and principally distinguished for his size and his appetite. The latter trait led to many quarrels with his father, and finally he was driven out into the world to shift for himself. He tried to get work in a nearby city, but failed, until his massive proportions came within the range of observation of a restaurant keeper. Then he was employed as an animated sign to testify to the good quality of the eating house, The job suited him exactly, and he probably would have been there to this day had it not been that one of the waiter girls flirted with him. She led poor "Babe" on, finally agreeing to meet him at the church, which he took to be an acceptance of his matrimonial proposal. He found, however, that another man went with her to the church and was married to her, It broke poor "Babe's" heart and he went back to the farm expecting to die. His father, however, forgave him, and set him to work which made him very unhappy.

"Babe" was a good hearted fellow, and he liked the restaurant keeper. He was not one of those men who would leave an employer in the lurch, and although his heart was broken he secured a substitute sandwich man, before he hit the trail for the farm. "Babe's" intentions were good, but the new living testimonial only held the job a few minutes. The reason was that he was a better "before taking" ad. than as an example of the after effects of food.

"Babe" never left the farm again, so he does not know how much the restaurant keeper hates him, and he probably never will know, for the restaurant keeper is unaware of his address, although he has tried frequently to find him.

A BUSINESS WOMAN (May 20).—When a wealthy manufacturer died, he left all his property unreservedly to his widow and his choice was a good one. The woman had excellent business ability, ran her late husband's factory herself, and year by year made it a better paying proposition.

She had two children, a boy and a girl, and they had all the luxuries that they could desire. Both graduated from college, returned home, and calmly permitted their mother to struggle with life's burdens alone. More than that, they were not grateful, and were constantly lamenting because they were "wasting time" in the dreary little town when they might be leaders of business and fashion in New York. On numerous occasions they urged their mother to let them go out into the great world and finally she consented, making each a liberal allowance. The boy secured a position in Wall Street, and dreamed of the time when he would call J. P. Morgan by his first name. The girl had talent as an artist, engaged high priced instructors, and made many friends of whom she was extremely proud.

Some months later, the window, who had been engrossed in business awoke to realize that her children needed attention. The girl had a suitor, a foreign nobleman, who, as she said, "was willing to overlook" the lack of social position, The boy had become the favorite of his employer and was offered a partnership for the trifling sum of $50,000.

The business woman was a real business woman, and her suspicions were aroused. She hired detectives and made investigations. The count was a plebian barber and a fortune hunter; the 'business man" was a crook. The widow carefully collected evidence, unmasked the barber and drove him away, then communicated with the postal authorities, and had the satisfaction of furnishing conclusive evidence of the crookedness of her son's "friend and employer," after which she told her children she was tired of their foolishness, compelled them to return to their home town and become her aids at the factory.

If these two young people had had a foolish mother they probably would have been penniless before many years. But as she was a business woman she showed them their errors and they grew up to be good members of society.

IN THEIR HOUR OF NEED (May 23).—Some of the influential members of a little country church were dissatisfied with their minister. They pointed out that he was old fashioned, and growing more and more feeble, forgetting the fact that he had spent all his life in their service. The leaders got the rest of the congregation into line and finally a committee broke the news to the old pastor that his service was to terminate, "a young, active minister" having been secured to replace him. The old man grieved bitterly, but was of too kind a nature to hold resentment against any man. He greeted his successor courteously, admonished him to take good care of his flock, and then wearily departed. A relative offered the minister and his daughter shelter, but forced them to work like laborers on his farm, while all the time he took credit to himself for his self-styled charity. The minister's daughter had been engaged to the young village doctor, but returned his ring, telling him that her father needed her undivided attention.

The new minister was a great success in the village. His sermons were bright and snappy, he took an active part in the social side of the church, and for a time the general opinion was that the change made was most successful. Then trouble came. The village was smitten with cholera, quarantined, and practically became a detention camp. The doctor stuck to his post loyally, the young minister, in cowardly fear, vanished during the night. And thus was the flock left without a shepherd. It was not for long, however, for the old minister in his place of exile heard the sad news and returned with haste to the village. He was not afraid of death while his people were in peril. He nursed the living and cared for the dying, then was stricken himself. For a time it seemed that he too would pass away, but he recovered, and one day there was an interesting ceremony in the little village church. The trustees who had driven the old minister away now escorted him into the building in triumph, led him to the

RELIANCE.

AFTER THE MASSACRE (May 17).—Dick Martin and Sue Brown are sweethearts. With many others they start for the Golden West in a wagon train. Before leaving, Dick presents Sue with a locket with his picture in it. He puts it around her neck. Later the wagon train is chased by a band of Indians and the whole party massacred except Dick, who is left for dead, and Sue, who is carried away by Red Arrow, the son of the tribal chief. Dick rises from the ruins of the wagon train. He has been struck on the head and all memory of the past is gone. He wanders away on the prairie and finally falls unconscious. He is picked up by a couple of cowboys who take him to a round-up camp where he is treated kindly.

Meanwhile, Sue has been taken to the Indian village. Red Arrow, her captor, is beloved by the Indian maid, White Fawn, but he has no further use for her now that he has seen Sue. He demands of the chief that Sue become his squaw. The old chief consents. Sue is indignant. Red Arrow sees the locket Dick has given her hanging from Sue's neck. He appropriates it to himself and hangs it around his neck. He then tells White Fawn to keep Sue a prisoner until she consents to be his squaw. Both girls are indignant, but White Fawn dare not refuse.

A few days pass. The girls have become great friends. One day, the Indians learn that a large party of pale-faces are within a few miles. Red Arrow is sent in the guise of a friendly Indian to learn how strong they are. He goes to the round-up camp and begs for food, which is given him. Meanwhile, he is sizing up the camp and sees there are too many whites for the Indians to safely attack.

As he is leaving, the chain of the locket becomes broken and it falls to the ground. Dick, still mentally unsound, is standing near and sees it fall as Red Arrow strides away. He picks it up and recognizes it. Unknown to the cowboys, he follows Red Arrow to the Indian village. As he is gazing down at it from a near bluff, he sees Sue among the tepees. His memory comes back. He realizes that he cannot rescue her alone.

While crouching there, White Fawn, who has been catching a stray pony, almost stumbles over him. He fears she will betray him, but she reassures him. She sees the locket in his hand and recognizes it as the one Red Arrow has taken from Sue.

She offers her horse and tells Dick to ride to the round-up camp and bring help to rescue his sweetheart. He hastily writes a note to Sue, gives it to White Fawn and rides away. White Fawn takes the note to Sue, who is overjoyed. Red Arrow becomes suspicious of the two girls' actions, and says that the next day he will take them far away where no one can find them. At dawn the next morning, White Fawn and Sue steal from the tepees and ride away. They are seen by the Indians who immediately give chase. Meanwhile, Dick has reached the round-up camp and notified the cowboys. They start out to rescue Sue. They soon sight the girls pursued by the Indians and there is soon a running fight. Red Arrow is slain and Dick goes after the girls who have veered to one side. The Indians are put to flight and the triumphant cowboys return to shore where they are met by Dick and the girls, and all safely return to the round-up camp.

LONDON ASSURANCE (May 19).—Young Grace Harkaway, by her uncle's order, is commanded to marry Sir Harcourt Courtly, an elderly fop. She meets and falls in love with this gentleman's son, Charles, who has been posing as a student, but is in reality a roysterer and one of the gayest young bloods in town.

Young Courtly and his friend, Dazzle, plan with Lady Gay Spanker, a belle and noted huntsman, to draw out old Sir Harcourt, who has fallen in love with her, so that Grace may be freed to marry the man she loves. Sir Harcourt believing that Lady Gay reciprocates the affection, plans to elope with her. Grace's uncle overhears their conversation and indignantly changes his plans regarding Grace who is permitted to marry Charles. Sir Harcourt discovers that he has been made a fool of by Lady Gay Spanker, who returns to her husband with the combined thanks of the happy pair.

EARLY OKLAHOMA (May 21).—In the early days of Oklahoma, Joe Turner, his wife and two children settled on a little farm in the southern part of the state. The hardships were many as the ground was new and the Indians still aggressive and heartily detested the white man. Joe Turner's wife was a particularly attractive woman and one day, while Joe was away plowing, Crazy Bear came to the house and tried to make love to her. Joe suddenly arrived upon the scene and promptly kicked Crazy Bear off the place. The half-breed's enmity was aroused and going to an Indian village a few miles distant he incited the Indians towards the whites by giving them his own version of the affair and filling them with whiskey.

The following morning, when Joe was in the fields, Emma sent the children out into the fields to play. A few hours later a rancher rode frantically up to Joe and told him the Indians were coming. Joe hurried to the house and ordered Emma to get the children and jump into the wagon to ride to safety. Emma searched for the little ones, but they could not be found. The Indians came in sight of the house and Joe was forced to put Emma into the wagon, and, giving the horses a cut with the whip, shouted to her to "ride for her life and find the rangers—that he would stay and try to protect the children." Emma rode desperately out upon the prairie. Crazy Bear and his Indians came along. They saw the galloping team, so Crazy sent part of the Indians after the wagon while the rest went to Turner's house. Joe hid in a nearby woods, but the Indians caught sight of him. He took refuge in a big tree. For hours he held them at bay. Meanwhile the children heard the firing and ran to the house. When they came near it they saw the Indians and hid in the prairie grass. Crazy Bear also saw them and in his frenzy had the Indians set fire to the prairie. The children were panic stricken and started to run. Crazy Bear started after them. In his path was a bear trap which Joe had set the night before. Stepping into it, Crazy Bear was consumed by the flames. To escape the fire and the Indians, the children hid in an old well which was hidden by the tall grass.

Meanwhile, Emma was making a desperate ride to find the rangers. At last she came upon them. She told her story and they started on the back trail. When they arrived at the house, they found the prairie a mass of flames. The rangers put the Indians to flight and rescued Joe. Together he and Emma watched the devastating fire feeling sure that the children had either been killed by the Indians or burnt in the fire. After the fire, they searched the smoking stubble for what they feared to find. They stumbled over the charred remains of Crazy Bear and as they hopelessly reached the old well the two little girls glanced cautiously out and were at once seized in the embrace of their anxious parents.

THE RIVALS OUTWITTED (May 18).—A very stout lady and a very thin one, living in the same boarding house, are both very much in love with Jim, the star boarder. He is secretly engaged to Ethel Phillips, who keeps a physical culture school. In order to create more business for Ethel, Jim hands the two ladies her card. The fat woman decides to take lessons at once, thinking Jim would love her if she were thin; and the slim lady also decides to take lessons that she may become plump and thus win Jim's love. In the school many amusing incidents happen—for the rivals always manage to get in each other's way. Ethel thoroughly enjoys it all having been let into the joke by Jim. On exhibition day, the star performance is a fencing bout between the rivals in which each tries to kill the other. Later, they hurry to dress so as to be the one escorted home by Jim, but when they get downstairs they see him walking off with Ethel. Realizing the hopelessness of their love they fall into each other's arms in despair.

about the estate accompanied by her six months' old baby and its nurse. She stops and speaks kindly to Lass and her little family. Picking up one of the little dogs, she playfully puts it in the carriage with the baby and petting the little animal, returns it to its mother. She continues upon her walk. This same little puppy strays away from its little brothers and sisters and reaching the railroad tracks, it wanders into the next village, where it is met by a crowd of youngsters that are gathered about the station. They playfully abuse the little animal.

Old Mr. Gladwin, who has a one horse cab and who depends upon the commuter for his livelihood, sees the boys ill-treating the dog and quickly rescues it. Finding that it belongs to no one he takes it home, first consulting his horse which shows that he approves of the dog's intrusion into their home. The dog, now known as Shep, soon becomes fast friends with Mr. Gladwin and his horse, John, and the three are inseparable companions.

Three years pass and a change has taken place in the hacking business, owing to the demand for automobiles. Gladwin finds it almost impossible to get a fare. He is soon reduced in circumstances and at times deprives himself of food. Before long he breaks down. One evening, while waiting for a train he faints while sitting on the box of his hack. During his following illness Shep is constantly at his bedside. He runs to the drug store and brings medicine for the man. On one of these trips he comes upon a child who has fallen on the track and is stunned. Unable to move her body and seeing the train in the distance, he runs madly towards it barking, causing the train to stop and the trainmen and passengers to alight to ascertain the reason of the barking. They follow him to the child. Mr. Jameson recognizes the little girl as his own and takes her home after inquiring about the dog and its master. The trainman knowing Shep gives him the information. He visits the old man and offers him medical aid and a position on the estate in reward for the dog's act. Gladwin accepts on condition that he may take both dog and horse with him. Jameson consents to this and the three move upon the estate, where Shep, unknown to the household, meets his mother and the old horse is given a place in one of the best stalls of the barn. Mr. Gladwin is soon well and happy in his new position with his two animal friends.

A CHILD OF WAR (2 parts—May 30).—John Judson, a blacksmith, has a tearful parting with his wife and daughter, Mary, before he leaves to enlist in a regiment of the Union cavalry. During the battle Mrs. Judson, Mary and their servant, Black, put their goods into a wagon and ride away from the scene of action. Unknown to the mother or the servant, Mary, who has been riding on the tailboard of the wagon, jumps off and runs after the doll she has dropped, and is lost. Nightfall brings a cessation of the hostilities between the Unions and Confederates, and Judson is placed on guard. He hears a noise, and receiving no answer to his challenge, fires. A cry of pain rents the air, and, going in the direction from whence it comes, finds that he has shot his child, who has wandered into the bushes. He deserts his post and brings the child to his wife, who, like the other residents, has returned to the village, their confidence having been restored by the strength of the Union troops. The child's wound is dressed and upon Judson's reappearance at his post, he is court-martialed and sentenced to be shot in the morning.

Mrs. Judson, accompanied by Mary, goes to the Colonel to plead for the life of her husband. The orderly will not admit her, and while he is trying to calm the distracted woman Mary passes him and enters the room where the officers are in consultation. The eloquence of the lisping voice is more powerful than the tears of a frantic wife, and the Colonel's heart melts, and he lays aside the questions of tomorrow's battle to listen to the child. Judson is pardoned and restored to the ranks.

AMERICAN.

ON THE BORDER (May 29).—Chiquita danced merrily to the sound of her tamboureen and the soft twanging of guitars. The dance finished, a rippling clapping of hands greeted the performance.

Bill Reeves, a handsome cowboy, fresh from the range, applauded with extraordinary fervor and then called the matron. An introduction followed and between intermissions, the young couple chatted gaily.

But tragedy hovered over them. Pedro, the dark-skinned Mexican waiter, nursed a hatred of all "gringoes" and a deep love for the gentle Chiquita. As he passed to and fro beside the table, his eyes glittered with hatred and he swore an oath that handsome ranger should not have his Chiquita.

In the days that followed, Reeves was a daily visitor at the Mexican cafe. Love sprung up between them and blossomed rapidly. One night Pedro traced them home and witnessed the good-night kiss. The next day Pedro plotted. A bottle of poison, carefully tucked into his sash, was poured into Reeves's drink. Then, panic-stricken he sneaked down an alley, chattering with fear. The hand of fate held Reeves in its grasp. Only the continued dancing of Chiquita prevented the draining of his glass. And then she came and sat beside him, and he, forgetful of everything, even forgot to drink.

The keen-eyed sheriff, strolling leisurely about, spied the slinking Pedro. On his knees fell the craven wretch until the sheriff jerked him to his feet and rushed him to the cafe. And then Reeves, with cup raised to drink Chiquita's health, was stunned into speechlessness by having the cup dashed from his hand.

HER BIG STORY (May 31).—Beatrice Nevin, the "Union's" utility woman, did "space" writing for a living which is another way of saying that Beatrice was very poor.

Joel Hammond, the business managing editor, grew very fond of Beatrice for he was a bachelor and a much abused newspaper man. The owner of the "Union" was a mysterious personage whom the staff discussed in whispers. Beatrice then was seized with a mania to pry into the city affairs. of the "boss" and see what story she might uncover.

From then on she shadowed the mayor and neglected her regular work, and one day when Joel could no longer stand her charming beauty, he kissed her and they plighted their troth then and there, although Joel, as managing editor warned her not to go too far on the Big Story.

One day the mysterious boss, George Huestiss, owner of the "Union" motored to the mayor's home, Later, with Beatrice hot on the trail, the mayor came out with Huestiss and they dismissed the chauffeur. This aroused Beatrice's suspicions and climbing through a window, found herself in the deserted library of the mayor's home. There she found the papers which revealed the big story and there she heard foot steps which sent her scurrying behind the curtains. A moment later Huestiss and the mayor entered. Not finding the papers they grew excited and in the search discovered Beatrice. Then she made her mistake, telling them that she had the story and that the Union that night would print it. They laughed at her and Huestiss discharged her on the spot. The mayor attempted to grab her, but, eluding him, she bowled him over with a statuette and fled through the window.

Back she raced to the office and hammered out her story. Then she took it in to her sweetheart, Joel and he read it with a frown and tried to tear it up. Then Huestiss entered and ordered Joel to destroy the story. But Joel, seeing his sweetheart's waning faith in him, threw all to the winds and resigned. The opposition paper that night carried the "Big Story" and Joel crept through dark alleyways to the dreary rooms of Beatrice. Love settled the editorial difference of opinion.

ASHES OF THREE (2 parts, May 26).—Bud Halworth was a stupid, sullen and brainless man, despised by the villagers. He knew no father and had an indifferent mother. A short distance from the cabin where lived this youth, resided an intelligent, manly boy named Ed, with his mother. On the breast of this youth was pinned the star of a sheriff, and away he went into the woods to hunt a "terror" who had been killing people and destroying property for weeks past. But not long after his departure he was brought back with a bullet hole through his heart. That afternoon the mother of Bud Halworth died, but the boy was too dull to realize the significance of her death. The death of Ed had played so much upon the mind of his mother that she was just about to throw herself over a precipice when she was caught by Bud, who had followed. In the following days she began to love Bud with a mother's love, which brought a perceptible change in him. One day he rose quickly from the door-step on which he was sitting and ran into town, where he heard news of the "terror." Seizing the guns from the sheriff's belt, he bolted into the woods, pounced down with terrific force upon the "terror," bound him and brought him into town. The sheriff pinned the star upon his breast and he ran home to show it to his "mother." This brought vague memories to the shattered woman's mind of her dead son, and she fell dead. When they had buried her, the villagers saw, silhouetted against the setting sun the beautiful form of Bud Halworth, despised among men, standing at the brow of the dangerous precipice. The stoop of his shoulders was gone—fire had come into the big, handsome eyes—a new being had been born—from the ashes of three—a man was made.

KEYSTONE.

TOPLITSKY & CO. (May 26).—Oi! Oi! Such a business! Toplitsky has a wife. He also has a partner, and he believes that the partner is casting glances at his wife, not consistent with the terms of a business partnership. The jealous husband snoops around and finally convinces himself that he has grounds for a divorce. He sends for his lawyers, and a conference is held. The partner, while out walking, comes face to face with a bear. Evidently recognizing the fact that the man is hungering for affection, the bear makes a lunge for him. The man runs for his life, with the bear in hot pursuit. Hard pressed, he sees a window open, and jumps through it, finding himself in a bedroom, and he dives under the bed, where he lies, exhausted and trembling with fear. The lawyers have been acting as peace-makers with their client, and they have finally convinced him that he should forgive his wife. With his heart overflowing with forgiveness and love, Toplitsky, followed by his legal advisers, goes to his wife's room to apprise her of the change in his mind, and there finds the object of all his woe—under his wife's bed. After the battle has subsided, the partnership is dissolved.

THE GANGSTERS (May 29).—An amusing burlesque of gang fighters. The police go after them, one by one, and each guardian of the peace is caught and despoiled of his clothing and compelled to return to the station. The police put a dummy officer on a plank extending out into the water, and when the gangsters go after him the live police close in on them and a battle royal takes place in the water.

BRONCHO.

THE DRUMMER OF THE EIGHTH (2 Parts—May 26).—The Durands and Browns are neighbors. Jack Durand and Betty Brown are sweethearts, and Billy Durand and Mildred Brown, the young brother and sister of the lovers, enjoy the romance. In the spring of 1861 the war clouds are gathering. Jack enlists in the Northern army, and Billy is broken-hearted because he cannot accompany his big brother. He has become quite an expert drummer, and when the troops leave town he runs away and joins them as a drummer boy, under an assumed name. Jack receives word of his brother's enlistment, and endeavors to find him, but two years elapse, and he gets no trace of Billy. A terrific battle takes place. Billy is captured by the Confederates, and the setting sun brings about a cessation of hostilities. Billy makes his escape from the guards, and dashes away with bullets whistling about his head. He is slightly wounded, and is forced to take refuge in the house where the Confederate officers are discussing the plans for the following day's battle, and, concealed in a trunk, he keeps both ears open. At midnight the conference ends, and Billy, after many narrow escapes, makes his way back to the Union quarters.

Billy reports to the Colonel that the Confederates would attack the Union right wing in full force at dawn. The Confederate guards had reported to the Colonel, however, the story of the elusive figure that had flitted past them, and fearing a spy had overheard their plans, it is decided to attack the left wing instead of the right, as originally outlined. The right wing of the Union army is strengthened, and at dawn the left wing is surprised by a sharp attack and half the Northern soldiers are killed in a terrible battle. Jack secures a leave of absence and goes home. Billy is taken sick, and writes to his mother that his regiment is leaving for his home town, and asking her to watch for him. The family are overjoyed to hear from Billy, and anxiously awaits the arrival of the regiment. Great preparations are made to receive the little hero, and mother cooks Billy's favorite cakes. The regiment arrives, and Billy is carried to his mother's home by a squad of soldiers, who reverently lay the casket in which the boy lies, and force back the lumps in their throats at the grief of the mother—for Billy has died.

IN THE WAKE OF THE BRAIN STORM (May 13).—The Marquis of Dartmouth, spending an idle hour in a motion picture treater, is startled to see on the screen, walking with a man, a woman who amazingly resembles his wife. Their attitude is affectionate, to say the least.

Wild with jealousy, he purchases a copy of the film to reassure himself that it cannot be she. The film, however, shows what he did not want to see.

Returning to his country estate, he watches his wife closely. There is nothing to confirm his suspicions.

Obsessed with jealousy, the marquis waits for something to substantiate the evidence of the film. His wife one day happens to leave on her desk this note: "My dear Helen:—I have paid bitterly for the past. I beg you not to refuse to see the 'exile,' who is due to arrive at Beddu Station at 4:30. You know I love you. Roger."

The marquis, infuriated, restrains himself with difficulty.

The jealous man had heard his wife give the order for the carriage to be brought. Quickly the marquis goes outside, where the horses are standing impatiently. Under the harness of one animal he slips several matches, which he calculates at a later moment will explode and cause him to run amuck. After his wife had gone, the marquis is stricken with remorse. As he is trying to still his conscience, he is visited by the man whom he had seen with her on the film. It was her brother, who, because of some boyish indiscretion, had been renounced by his family, excepting only his sister, who had retained her kindness and affection for him.

Realizing the enormity of his crime the distracted marquis dashes off on his horse in pursuit of his wife.

Meanwhile, the horse, frightened, had dashed off madly. Despite the efforts to control him and his mate, they plunge on toward a high precipice. The coachman is thrown out. The carriage overturns, the marchioness thrown under the wheels. Here, with but a faint spark of life remaining, she is found by her conscience-stricken husband. She recovers to forgive him for his act of insanity.

LUX.

PLAYING WITH THE FIRE (May 23).—Harry Rever, a young artist, searches in vain for a suitable model for a picture which he is painting. He meets Lady Wilson, and she consents to sit as a model. Two months pass happily, and the picture nears completion. Meanwhile a great love has been awakened in the hearts of the young artist and his fair young model. Hadji, Rever's Hindoo servant, has also conceived a wild passion for the white woman—a passion tainted with all the lustfulness of the Oriental. It is part of Hadji's duties to take care of the lion which Rever uses in his picture.

Rever and Lady Wilson are happy in the possession of each other's love, and finally Rever asks Lord Wilson's consent to his marriage with his daughter. The proud old nobleman refuses his consent, and the lovers are parted.

In the meantime Hadji becomes more and more jealous of his master. At last he decides to put into execution the wild plan that has frequently occurred to him. He lets the lion loose upon his master, and then listens with joy to the sounds of the dreadful struggle which follows. Having felled its prey, the lion is attracted by the slight noise which Hadji makes, and it turns upon him. Hadji has played with the fire, and is now powerless to defend himself against the onslaughts of the infuriated beast. Thus he pays the penalty of his jealous crime with his life. In due course Revere's picture secures for him great fame. He gradually recovers from his injuries, and now that he is a famous man, Lord Wilson consents to his marriage with his daughter.

SOLAX.

THE HENPECKED BURGLAR (May 28).—Henpecked, an undersized man, decides to take his big strong wife to the theater. So he buys two tickets from the pretty ticket seller and gets into an altercation with the burly manager. Brave everywhere except in his wife's presence, he easily vanquishes his opponent.

As Mr. and Mrs. Henpecked are leaving the restaurant in the hotel that evening, Henpecked is possessed of a sudden peremptory thirst. He makes an excuse to get away from his wife, telling her to wait a few minutes. The minutes lengthen into hours and at last the irate wife goes home to prepare a warm reception for her tardy spouse's arrival. Meanwhile Henpecked has had a hilarious time.

While he is away, a burglar enters his home and ransacks the living-room. Henpecked is sneaking in on all fours at 4 a. m. and is covered by a desperate housebreaker. Seeing that his victim is in a dress suit, the burglar surmises that it is "Raffles, the gentleman burglar," and forces Henpecked to rob his own house.

Finally Mrs. Henpecked hears the racket and is investigating, when the burglar pounces upon her. Henpecked is forced to gag and bind his own wife—he is torn between delight at her silence and the gnawing fear of her release.

The burglar decided that they have enough booty and calling on the man he thinks is "Raffles" to follow, he exits. While he is gone, Henpecked releases his wife who pounces upon him just as a policeman enters with the burglar in his grip. The burglar has told him that his pal was "Raffles." Mrs. Henpecked interferes and drags her husband away from the bluecoat. Henpecked would rather take his chance on the clemency of the bench than with his maddened wife, so he declares that he is Raffles and demands that he be arrested. So the officer drags him off and saves him from Mrs. Henpecked's vengeance.

"THE KING'S MESSENGER" (May 30).—Miss Priscilla Handy, an elderly maiden lady, sits reading her Bible in her room. She closes the book, removes her jewelry and prepares for bed. She places the Bible upon the table at her bedside, blows out the candle and drops asleep. Bill Briggs, a burglar, enters the room, finds the things upon the table, and wrapping them in a handkerchief, escapes with them. He takes them to a bench in the park near a stone wall and there proceeds to examine his loot. Finding the Bible, he opens it at a place marked the twentieth chapter of Exodus, and the first thing his eyes alight upon is the commandment, "Thou shalt not steal." To him comes a vision of himself as a child at his mother's knee, and he drops the Bible on the bench. Hastily gathering up the jewelry, he returns it to the owner, closes down the window and vanishes.

Tom Rainey, a workman, is being evicted by John Ferguson, his landlord, and swears vengeance. Arming himself he repairs to the park to lie in wait and with drawn revolver he hides near the bench. His eye falls on the Bible and he picks it up to read the Commandment, "Thou shalt not kill." Into his mind flashes a vision of a gallows with himself standing beneath it, and an Angel of the Lord pointing to the mark of Cain on his forehead, while the wife and child kneel weeping. Throwing away the gun, he flees from the spot, just as Ferguson comes by, unharmed. Ferguson sees the Bible and examines it out of curiosity. His eyes alight upon the passage, "Thou shalt have no other Gods before me," and he sees a vision of himself hoarding gold and feverishly counting it while the wan figures of women and children plead with him for bread. With a shudder, he drops the book and covering his face with his hands, staggers away.

Other telling incidents illustrate:

"Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife."

"Thou shalt not commit adultery."

"Honor thy father and thy mother that thy days may be long in the land," etc.

"Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor."

This morality play ends with:

Miss Handy going by, prim and precise, but worried. She finds the book, recognizes it and clasping it in her hands, with delight, moves off. She comes to the steps of a church and there accosts an acquaintance. As she stands there, with the Bible in her hands, there pass in, one at a time into the church, Bill Briggs, Tom Rainey, John Ferguson, Mary Clemons and her child, Charles Michael Brown, who pauses on the steps, then removes his helmet and enters. Miss Handy wishes her friend farewell and with a bright smile, follows them.

KINEMACOLOR.

THE BETTER SUCCESS.—A story dealing with the lives of two farmer boys. At the beginning, Wallace is tired of the drudgery of farm life and determines to go to the city. There he meets with success and marries the cold, heartless daughter of a rich man.

Meanwhile, John, the other brother, has married a sweet little country girl, and we see them in their happy home life with their children about them. No children have blessed the loveless union of Wallace, who has become a power in New York. Husband and wife drift apart, Wallace is finally caught in the whirlpool of Wall Street, and in order to save himself, uses funds intrusted to his care.

In a panic on the Stock Exchange, Wallace is not only ruined himself, but brings ruin on others. He rushes home, tells his wife his story, and begs her help in replacing the funds he took. She refuses, and the desperate man goes to his brother, whom he has long neglected, but he is followed, and shortly after he rushes into the quiet country home, begging for protection, the officers of the law enter. Before they can arrest him his overtaxed heart gives out, and he falls dead at the feet of the brother who represents "The Better Success."

TOO MANY MAIDS.—Father's fad is fishing; so to ingratiate himself before asking for Victoria's hand, Dick takes dad on a fishing excursion, but by his awkwardness manages to spill the old man into the water. Thereafter he is forbidden the house, and in order to facilitate courtship, Victoria exchanges costumes with her maid and thus manages to meet Dick outside. While recovering from the cold, which is the only thing he caught on the fishing expedition, dad takes a stroll in the park, where he spies Dick making love to a lady's maid. With his kodak he takes a snapshot, but on showing it to Victoria as proof of Dick's perfidy all he gets is the laugh. A little later he sees apparently the same maid sweetheart with a chauffeur. The next moment he sees the maid and Dick in another direction.

Convinced that the "bait" and water he swallowed on the fishing excursion, combined with the "cold cure" have made him see double, dad returns home, where he sees a rapid succession of mysteriously appearing and disappearing "maids." He is so grateful for an explanation that he gives his blessing.

ITALA.

THE DREAD OF DOOM.—Doctor Guido, on the eve of marrying the woman he loves, discovers that into his body there has been introduced accidently the germs of a deadly disease. He cannot manfully go on with his marriage knowing the physical price of such a predestinely woeful alliance. It is for him to disappear and wait for the death soon to come. His lot would be alleviated if he could but tell his fiance why he could not marry her. But there is one reason why he must leave her unknowing that his reason for breaking off the match was because he loved her more than love itself. That reason is that his sister is betrothed to the brother of the doctor's bride-elect. If Doctor Guido lets it be known that he is consumptive, his sister's fiancé may suspect that she too has tubercular tendencies, which suspicion might separate them. It is, therefore, necessary for him to seal his lips and go away under a cloud, leaving it to be thought that he had backed out of his pre-nuptial agreement.

WARNER'S FEATURES.

HIS LIFE FOR THE CAUSE (Feature Release, 3 parts).—Representatives of the big European nations meet and draw up a secret treaty affecting the Far Eastern countries. In order to safeguard the document, the Minister of Foreign Affairs places it in a safe guarded by ten automatic pistols, so arranged that anyone tampering with the combination will receive the full discharge of the pistols. If this secret treaty is adopted it will seriously interfere with the careers of the Mongolian residents of the capital city. Accordingly, Prince Frederick poses as a nobleman in order to steal the treaty and destroy it.

At a reception, the spy meets Banker Newell's daughter, whom he learns is engaged to Minister Carr, the custodian of the treaty. While at the card table, Banker Newell receives a letter of blackmail, which he drops in his excitement. The spy secures this letter and finds evidence of a crime committed by Banker Newell years before. With this proof, he forces the banker's daughter to pledge her aid to his cause, and arranges with her to enter Minister Carr's home and inveigle him into opening the safe. That night the spy struggles with Carr's fiancée, who has repented of her promise to betray her intended husband, in Minister Carr's room. As he tampers with the combination of the safe, the door swings open, the ten automatic pistols discharge their contents. Although fatally wounded, the spy seizes the treaty, and dying, reaches the Mongolic Club, where his death occurs. In Minister Carr's home, the banker's daughter is dead—a victim of political intrigues.

PILOT.

SCHOOL-DAYS (May 22).—Louise, a country girl, studious and very ambitious to go through college, finds the heat too oppressive to remain indoors, so seeks the shade of a large cherry tree. Being endowed with the usual vigor of a country girl, she climbs the tree and leisurely settles down to read. Professor Mooney finds chasing butterflies too irksome and goes to rest under the same tree. Occasionally a cherry drops on the Professor's head. He pays but little attention to them. A shoe falls by his side unnoticed, then a stocking drops upon the book he is reading. He absent-mindedly picks up the stocking, wipes his face with it, and then places it in his trouser's pocket. Soon he falls asleep.

In the meantime, Louise tries to climb higher in the tree, but her foot slips and her books fall, one of them dropping on the professor, followed by Louise, who lands plump on the professor's head.

Later Louise receives a communication from the professor, saying his board is willing to offer her tuition at half price, provided she is willing to assist in the chores. Louise is grieved to think she is unable to accept this kind offer, but her mother cheers her up by giving her some money she has saved, which is enough to carry her through at the half price rate. At school, Louise is the victim of all the practical jokes of the girls. She finally gathers sufficient courage to take revenge. In the dead of night, the night before commencement, she steals their corsets, ties them with the string and suspends them from the college chimney. This causes much dismay and distress among the girls, as well as lots of fun for the guests. No one suspects Louise is the culprit, but she confesses to the principal, who declares his love for her, afterwards disclosing who the culprit is, and announcing his engagement to her.

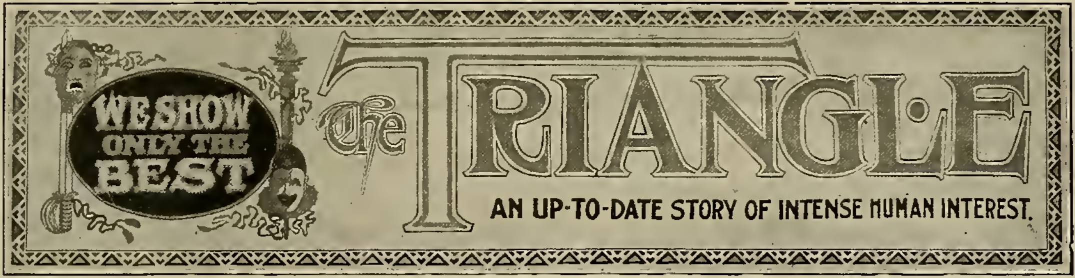
THE CALLING OF PETER AND ANDREW
Coming
121-123 4TH AVE. PITTSBURGH, PA.

Your lobby and your screen. Why don't you use them? Think of the hundreds of advertisers who would pay well for the privilege!

This Slide Thrown On Your Screen

would catch the eye of everyone in your house. We make it for all multiple reel releases and it sells for the ridiculously low price of 35c. It isn't of the ordinary kind, but an artistically colored slide made by people who know how. The exhibitor who won't pay 35c for the purpose of advertising his next feature practically admits his lack of faith in publicity.

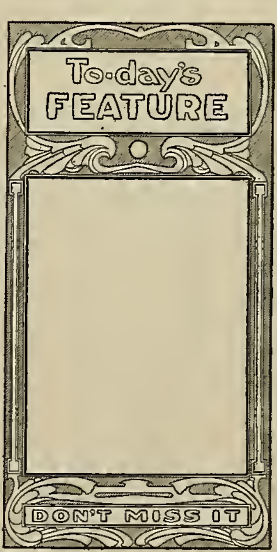
Where Else Can You Buy a Banner Like This?



WE SHOW ONLY THE BEST
The TRIANGLE
AN UP-TO-DATE STORY OF INTENSE HUMAN INTEREST.

For $1.00. 3 in. x 12 in. in size, made of heavy muslin, lithographed in five colors, hemmed on ends with eyelets ready for hanging. Made for all releases. Special banners to order. Weight 1½ lbs., parcel postage extra.

And Beyond That, We Carry in Stock the Finest Line of Regular Announcement Slides You Ever Saw at 25 Cents Each



To-day's FEATURE
DON'T MISS IT

Here's Something Swell For Your Lobby

A three-sheet muslin banner with an artistic border printed in colors and just enough white space in the center to take a regular stock one-sheet poster. This we sell at 50c and it's good indefinitely.

"We Have What You Want When You Want It!"

If it isn't in stock it won't take our big force long to make it up for you. Every exhibitor should be in touch with our thousand and one advertising specialties. Let's hear from you.

I DESERVE YOUR CONFIDENCE AND BUSINESS BECAUSE

I have equipped more complete motion picture theatres in the United States than any other individual—Exhibitors have paid me retainers to act as their consulting and advisory Engineer to prepare plans and specifications for new theatres and for reconstruction and improvement of projection, lighting, ventilation, seating, etc., in old theatres. Why do exhibitors pay me for advice? Why do exhibitors place their orders with me for complete equipments? Because I have had more experience than anyone else in working out the intricate problems of projection with special reference to perfect illumination. You know that your picture is your whole show. I know how to make that picture stand out on your screen clear, bold, brilliant and lifelike. It requires experience to do this. I am at your service. I have hundreds of letters like these:

Dear Sir: Union City, Tenn., May 1, 1913.
* * * I have given you several orders and have found you perfectly square and I am inclined to take your word for anything in the projection line and want you to tell me just what you think is the best * * *
Gem Theatre, W. C. Morris, Mgr.

Dear Sir: Heuvelton, N. Y., Nov. 10, 1912.
You are all right and know your business down "pat." I will recommend you whenever opportunity affords and will purchase supplies from you. I have a dandy nice picture. With best wishes from one of your satisfied customers.
Claude L. Preston.

143 Academy Ave., Providence, R. I., Feb. 17, 1913.
Dear Sir:
Everything worked beautifully and we would here express our appreciation of the prompt and efficient manner in which you serve your customers.
J. F. Cavanagh, Mech. Engr.

I want to help you, Mr. Exhibitor, to improve your picture or to equip your new theatre. My price is no more than that of any other reliable distributor, and I am sure that my experience and advice which is free to my customers, is worth many dollars and is of more value than confidential, special, would-be discounts, cut prices, etc., used by some of my competitors in pulling unwary exhibitors into their fold.

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:
24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

MOVING PICTURE MANAGER

Double Your Earnings

YOU Know that a Boy or Girl can sell twenty tickets to YOUR Theatre in the same time that it would take them to sell one newspaper or magazine, yet YOU depend entirely on Your ticket window. Had the newspapers and magazines over the country depended on the voluntary subscriptions, their circulation would be very small indeed.

May we send you full particulars of a NEW, UP-TO-DATE AND ORIGINAL WAY TO DOUBLE THE EARNINGS OF YOUR THEATRE?

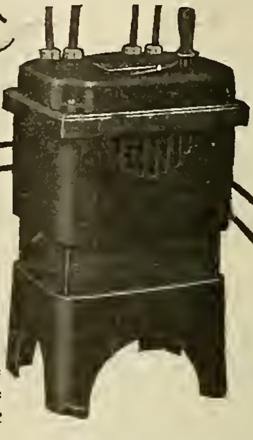
COMPENSARC

This Machine cuts 2/3 from your Light Bills



Mr. Manager

If you are on a 110 or 220 volt circuit and you are using a rheostat to reduce the voltage to 35 at the arc in your lamp, you are paying for 2/3 more "juice" than you are actually using. Can you afford to waste all this energy supplied from the line, over and above what you really need?

The Fort Wayne Compensarc

saves all this waste by reducing the voltage without losing any: makes a clearer, whiter, steadier light, and eliminates all danger of fires caused by overheated rheostats.

We have a little 22 page booklet "Compensarc vs. Rheostat" that we want to send you. It will tell you plainly how you can make a big saving and a better light. Send us your name and address.

Everybody Pull for the PLAYERPOSTER--It Will Pull for Everybody!

Demand the PLAYERPOSTER of your exchange man right now! Take no excuses; make him file your order. We'll be shipping the PLAYERPOSTER to the exchanges in about a week, and you'd better be right on deck with your order, if you expect them as soon as they come in. Everyone who has seen the advance proofs of the PLAYERPOSTER is congratulating us on its wonderful quality. Stuck anywhere in front of your show, it will pull for you. So next time you get to your exchange, forget about that feature you wanted until you've pulled for the PLAYERPOSTER. Let us roar into your ears again that it's a striking one-sheet portrait, in nature's colors, of the most popular Thanhouser players!

The Thanhouser 3-a-Week

Sunday, May 25: "A Pullman Nightmare," in which Lelando, the Terror of the Swoop-Swaps, rescues his lady love from the hands of the devilish train robbers.

Tuesday, May 27: "Carmen," the only genuine Thanhouser one, almost a year in process of production. So look for a lasting picture of the deathless opera.

Friday, May 30: No release; because of three-reeler of preceding Tuesday.

GETTING 3 TC 3 A WEEK?

Coming! Sunday, June 1: A comedy with a purpose, "A Victim of Circumstances," and later in the month, "The Snare of Fate." in two reels.

Arrow Shows Poster

NOTHING out of the ordinary about this—just an everyday affair with theatres advertising "Flying A" subjects. If you are losing profit steadily through mistaken notions of red-hot business attractors—let this picture and the lesson it teaches sink in. You can do what Vaudette does. Write Vaudette. Their answer will convince you!

"When Luck Changes"

(Release Monday, June 2, 1913)

A remarkably powerful Western of splendid situations, that will hold and appeal. A subject certain of an enthusiastic reception.

"The Wishing Seat"

(Release Thursday, June 5, 1913)

She was romanceful, and longed for a lover—so she sat in the "Wishing Seat" and wished! When Lo! Her wish was answered. Down to her feet rolled an artist from a neighboring bluff, feet over head and badly besmeared with his paint and the dirt of the mountain-side. But she didn't care how Cupid came, so long as he came!

"Via Cabaret"

(Release Saturday, June 7, 1913)

He loved the pretty cabaret singer, and when papa objected, he married her anyhow, just as you would do! And papa swore never to relent—and he didn't until a false friend entered the tangled skeins of the story and papa saw things rightly at last. A charming story.

GENTLEMEN:

—This is the beginning of the Universal's second year.

—In the one year it has existed it has gone through more storm and stress than any concern in the history of the business.

—It has fought some terrific fights.

—BUT IT HAS WON EVERY FIGHT IT HAS EVER FOUGHT! And it always will.

—This two-million dollar concern, the largest film manufacturing concern in the universe, has had some of the fiercest problems to solve that ever confronted any company in the business.

—BUT IT HAS SOLVED EVERY PROBLEM AND OVERCOME EVERY OBSTACLE THAT STOOD IN ITS WAY. And it always will.

—It has triumphed EVERY TIME, because it was in the right!

—The Universal has established a new standard of quality in film programs, especially during the past two months.

—It has left every other program on earth far, far behind.

—The Universal program is the program that is going to make the most money for exhibitors. There cannot be a doubt about it.

—The exhibitor who signs a contract for Universal service NOW is the exhibitor whose future success is positively insured.

—The Universal has a whole year's start on every other concern, and it intends to maintain that lead.

—The Universal now invites and urges you to inspect the Universal program at the Universal exchange nearest you.

—The Universal advises you to compare its program with any and all others, so that you can make up your mind IMMEDIATELY to supply your theatre with the best, cleanest and strongest film program in existence.

TRADE MARK

Two Record-Breaking Contracts

WITH THE

Interstate Films Co. and the Consolidated Film & Supply Co.

The Universal has just signed the two largest contracts in the records of the film business. One with the Interstate Films Co. (covering a large part of the Eastern territory) and one with the Consolidated Film & Supply Co., covering practically the entire South. Under the terms of the contract, these two huge companies are EXCLUSIVE AGENTS FOR THE UNIVERSAL PROGRAM IN THEIR RESPECTIVE TERRITORIES, and will continue to be FOR THE NEXT FIVE YEARS. They are likewise vested with power of attorney to seize all Universal films shown in their territories and not rented through the two companies named. This protects the exhibitor from being defrauded by dupers and infringers.

"A Dixie Mother"

Two Reels, June 4

A Wonderful Story of a Mother's Devotion, Which Saves Her Son From a Dishonored Grave, Restores His Courage and Causes Him to Die Like a Hero

Stung by the scorn of his warrior father, and lashed by the scarcasm of his sweetheart, Dick, a weakling and his mother's darling, enlists in the army. The exploding shells and the scenes of death all around him completely unnerve him, and he runs away, shot in the back by an officer who witnesses his cowardice. A squad is sent to his home, and the brave mother hurriedly writes a note which she places in the boy's pocket, wrecks the household furniture, and shoots herself through the arm. The note is an anguished call for help, affording extenuating circumstances for the desertion. With his manhood aroused by his brave mother, Dick proves himself a hero when guerillas really arrive, but is shot by mistake by his own father, who at first spurns the dying boy, thinking him a coward.

A War Story of Dramatic Worth, Presenting Scenes of Sensation and Pathos

The grizzled old pastor is succeeded by a younger man, who has a brother in the North. When war breaks out, the young minister acts as a spy for his brother, resulting in a crushing defeat for the Confederates. On account of his anti-slavery sentiments and other circumstantial evidence, the old pastor is tried, and condemned to die. The tearful prayers of a little girl for the preservation of the old man so affect the conscience-stricken spy that he confesses his guilt, and saves the old man from the firing squad.

Enthusiastic Endorsement from Ex-President Theodore Roosevelt

"In moving pictures of wild life there is a great temptation to fake, and the sharpest discrimination must be employed in order to tell the genuine from the spurious. My attention was particularly directed toward Mr. Kearton's work because of its absolute honesty. If he takes a picture it may be guaranteed as straight. With regrad to his pictures of the Masai warriors I can personally vouch for their fidelity to the actuality. His views of the charging lion, in which several nats.areive trampled and torn by the infuriated beasts, are wonderful—really wonderful! It is a really phenomenal record of a really phenomenal feat, and I congratulate Mr. Kearton with all my heart on what he has done."

Capt. Kearton secured these pictures after years of

Consider These Reasons Why You Need Every KALEM Release

REMEMBER above all things; Kalem's features are not made to satisfy anybody's whim. They are made for your patrons. Those are the ones we must please.

To this end the combined efforts of Seven companies are required to produce Kalem's Four Weekly Issues.

Kalem excels in selecting titles that command attention and arouse interest. Just look down the list of Kalem releases! We have no theories. The title must attract the person passing the theatre.

Kalem is the originator of large special paper for photoplays. The one, three and six-sheet Kalem posters are without a peer. Each depicts some stirring scene that has drawing power. This means business for you, Mr. Exhibitor.

If you are not showing every Kalem release you owe it to yourself to demand them. We welcome the Exhibitors' suggestions. This co-operation is responsible for Kalem's success. You cannot afford to miss one of these headliners.

The White Slave.

When a Woman Loves.

Saturday, May 31st, 1913

"The White Slave"

A beautiful story of the days before the War. A series of thrilling scenes, following one after the other in rapid succession, with a love story running all through.

Produced by the talented VITAGRAPH players, headed by Clara Kimball Young, Lillian Walker and Earle Williams. Two reels.

Monday, June 2nd, 1913

"When a Woman Loves"

The story involves two political factions, one of which is led by the Duchess Charlotte. She becomes fascinated with Marco Flamma, a young enthusiast, but he does not reciprocate her affection. The revenge she plans forces her suicide, and results in Flamma winning the lady of his choice. CINES-KLEINE, three reels.

The Law and the Outlaw.

The Accusing Hand.

Wednesday, June 4th, 1913

"The Law and the Outlaw"

One of the two most sensational "Westerns" ever released. Bucking bronchos and dare-devil cowboys in death-defying stunts. The outlaw (Tom Mix) chases a maddened steer, leaps on his back and actually throws and ties him without assistance. Sounds like pure fiction, doesn't it? Well, wait till you see the picture. SELIG, two reels.

Friday, June 6th, 1913

"The Accusing Hand"

A novel story told in a novel manner. Written by and acted under the direction of LUBIN'S popular producer-actor, Romaine Fielding.

"The accusing hand" greets the criminal at every turn of the road, and eventually draws a confession from him. "The silent third degree" in practise. Two reels.

THIS SOUNDS ALMOST TOO GOOD TO BE TRUE

On May 10th, our Dallas office received notice from an exhibitor in Pecos, Texas, to discontiue service. He stated as his excuse for giving up General Film Service that his patrons were "clamoring for new faces and new actors." We discontinued his service, with regret, of course. On May 14th he wired our office as follows: "My patrons don't like —— stuff. Ship me show at once and continue shipping every day." The only part of this transaction we cannot understand is the ability of the exhibitor to get along without General Film Service for even so short a period as four days!

Facts and Comments

ON another page of this number will be found a discussion of certain phases of the censorship question. We did not enter upon this discussion with a desire to force the issue, but merely to reply to a statement from President Neff, which is also printed in this number, together with the text of the censorship law recently passed by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio. In calling attention to the article mentioned, which we hope will be read carefully by all interested in the subject of censorship, we desire to make it clear that the only point of difference between The Moving Picture World and the worthy President of the National League is upon the question of censoring of motion picture films. As a leader of the movement to organize the motion picture exhibitor and to teach him the responsibilities of his calling, President Neff has proved himself to be the one man for the task. His success has been unprecedented and he has earned the confidence and esteem of the trade. The Moving Picture World hopes to see him continue to lead the exhibitors for some years to come. As the organization grows, changes in its methods of doing business may be necessary, but the continuance of Mr. Neff as its president will be a cause for congratulation. Yet, we do hope that he will come to accept the belief of The Moving Picture World, that it is best to "Keep the Picture Out of Politics!"

FROM our British correspondent it is learned that at a recent gathering of motion picture men in England, "Tay Pay" O'Connor congratulated the men of the trade assembled upon the pre-eminence of the British picture maker among his fellows of other lands. Our correspondent hints that this statement may cause a laugh on this side of the water. In his surmise, he is correct, especially since the representative of a large British company is now in this country engaging American directors and actors for the purpose of making British motion pictures. With the nucleus thus assembled we may hope to see some good British pictures before long.

UNDER the title "The Opening of a Chestnut Burr," Louis Reeves Harrison gives utterance in this issue of The Moving Picture World to some strong truths concerning the tendency of present-day producers of pictures to resort to the literature and the drama of the "Dark Ages" for their inspiration. The point Mr. Harrison seeks to drive home is that the picture-maker should derive his inspiration from present-day problems and not be forever rattling the skeleton of the past. He is right. What would happen to the literature and the drama of the day if it did not progress? Do our writers of the "best sellers" or the "dramatic hits" get their themes from dry and dusty tomes of forgotten lore? Then why should the picture-maker continue to delve in the dust heap! There are a lot of cheap, worn-out theatrical tricks working overtime in present-day pictures.

This brings to mind an interesting announcement made in The Moving Picture World of May 24, to the effect that one of the principal producing companies was about to try out a new plan for the development of scenarios. The plan most in vogue is to let a "director" pick a scenario that "appeals" to him and then trust to luck that he will make a picture out of it. No one expects him to follow the written script and few are able to recognize the original script in the finished picture. This is to be changed; the script is to be developed by a competent writer, as is the case with scripts for legitimate dramatic productions, and the "director" is to be instructed to do it that way. If this plan succeeds it will simplify the task of obtaining or educating directors and will put a premium upon intelligent authorship.

THERE are yet a few "old showmen" dabbling in the picture business who have not learned the difference between "grabbing some easy money" and building a lasting reputation for a moving picture theater. The remark is frequently heard: "Give me the sensational thriller with strong paper and I'll get the money." A lurid poster in front entices the unwary, who is tricked into witnessing some preposterous and impossible feat—a photographic trick—and is led to conclude that big feature pictures are fakes and to register a promise not to be caught again. Better the high-class picture that, though it fails to "pack 'em in and stand 'em up," will make fast friends for the house where it is shown. The latter is the sort of patron who will come again and bring his friends.

TOLEDO CAN'T HAVE MUNICIPAL "PICKSHOW."

Plans made by Mayor Brand Whitlock of Toledo, Ohio, to open a municipal picture show has been knocked out by the Ohio Supreme Court, which has ruled that there is no authority under the laws of the state which permits a city to enter into any private enterprise. It is claimed that this decision seriously affects the validity of the "home rule" amendment to the Ohio state constitution.

The Opening of a Chestnut Burr

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE critic who knows his trade must be able to discover the elements of success in a screen production before it is submitted to the public—he does not enjoy the advantage of noting the effect on an audience because the release is shown him in private exhibition—and to do this requires not only a knowledge of the essential conventions but ability to eliminate whatever in dramatic performance has become unessential because of swift progress in general intelligence. That progress is so dazzling to old timers that many of them do not believe their eyes—it is really alarming that the boy of today knows more than the man of yesterday—it is alarming to that man.

Grandma Drama is a conservative old lady whose thoughts linger fondly on the past, and she is very much exercised over the antics of her sportive descendent, Miss Photy Drama, already a general favorite, though she is just beginning to talk, who is so alluring in those actions that speak louder than words that oral language has proven superfluous. One secret of Miss Photy's tremendous popularity lies in the bright promise of her performance. She does not always people her strong scenes and situations with puppets arrayed in the frayed old garments of the wardrobe room but occasionally with fresh and living human characters.

Miss Photy's progressive spirit has made her a general favorite, but there are reactionaries in the family, directors who "have been" actor-gentlemen on the real stage and acquired tastes and habits of the theater that have become deeply impressed among the convolutions of their respective cerebrums and cerebellums, so, odds bodkins, Miss Photy must perforce stupefy herself with the half a crown's worth of sack that impaired Falstaff's digestion.

I am fond of Grandma Drama's family, actor-gentlemen-of-other-days and all, but the critic of today has to consider the audience of today and a large proportion of that audience has had classics rammed down its throat to the verge of nausea. A Great Humorist, now gone to join the Immortals, voiced the American spirit in his scorn of hypocrisy and his detestation of such humbuggery as that of speaking of past masterpieces with bated breath. People of the modern audience are easily bored by what Mark Twain characterized as the "goody-goody puerilities and dreary moralities" of old-time dramatic and literary favorites. They were mighty in a scope that was small.

As one of those who have tried to ward off influences tending to make the screen presentation a second-rate affair, the emptiest and shallowest form of entertainment provided for the people, I have bitterly attacked the exploitation of what is degrading, and I can not help regarding as next to that in injurious effect upon the popularity of moving pictures the indifference to present demand manifested in the continuous repetition of dull classic under the childish pretense of educating the people. When the public comes to be educated in this way it will be through the agency of those especially equipped by knowledge and training to give instruction.

Before presenting what may have once done good service, the producer should consider the present tendency towards a new and broader freedom of thought and action which is not at all in accord with past ideals. The endorsement of last century carries little weight in this one. The people of then were given no power to determine what should govern public taste in the NOW. We are becoming more and more inclined to exercise the right of private judgment; we are a century further along in experience, and it looks as though we will soon be several centuries further along in enlightenment.

Themes of conversation among the cultured few of only a generation ago, the various political, social and religious systems, are subjects of general discussion today. They are taken up by magazines circulating among tens of millions; they appear in the editorial columns and even the news pages of the daily press; there is on all sides and at all hands the rousing of a new world to life and problems of common happiness. The pictures may remain mute, but is that any reason why they should not become eloquent in their way? Is their special mission to be that of digging up what has long been so uninteresting that it has been shelved and its inherited merit unexplored except by those incapable of understanding what is going on in our midst?

No American writer has even been so dearly loved at home and so generally admired abroad as the one who dared flash the light of sane truth upon those "puerilities and dreary moralities" whose mouldy caskets are now being reopened for photodramatic material. Mummies of the past might be forever honored if left undisturbed—they cease to command respect when they are unwrapped. Comparatively modern works like "Ben Hur" and "Quo Vadis," one a Tale of the Christ, the other contrasting material decadence with spiritual beauty, are among the few immortals. As they survive, so may all works of motive so great as to stir the universal heart. They are ever new and help to prove that ancient setting must have themes appealing to modern interest.

Any setting, historical or romantic, may be used—it may even enhance a modern motive—but it takes a skilled dramatist to pour new wine into old bottles even when they are not cracked. The wardrobe-room costume photogavotte is the most hopelessly artificial and stilted of all. Inasmuch as it portrays no phase of life recognizable by sane people in front it might be the very thing for a lunatic asylum, where it would possibly be swallowed with the sweet and confiding faith of one-syllabled infants listening to hallowed melodies of Mother Goose.

The only redeeming feature of some of these ancient inanities is the attractive personality of leading players, many of whom are liked by the public for themselves quite as much as for their characterizations on the screen. Most of their opportunities are pitifully shallow—such must always be the case when the audience is less interested in what they are doing than in how they are doing it—but they have performed so well under distressing circumstances that we have come to regard them with the interest and sympathy we feel for badly-used friends. Their success, however, is the more enduring than it is "in the silences."

Enduring success is not possible for stories set amid conditions of no present interest and devoid of concept applying to present conditions. Without a modern idea, without a modern abstraction, without even a modern principle, they lack both illusion and those human factors which communicate throught, feeling and emotion to the audience. There is nothing "educational" about irresponsible adaptations; there is very little in them to stir the imagination; nothing in them relates to our most cherished fields of endeavor; nothing in them enables us to pass an evening of forgetfulness; they are devoid of vivid, direct and passionate appeal; they impress none but the ignorant and those who humorously regard motion pictures as The Opening of a Chestnut Burr.

That Censorship Controversy.

President Neff Endeavors to Justify His Position Favoring Official Censors—Copy of the Ohio Censor Bill—Editor's Comment.

FROM the first time that the proposition to establish a system of censoring motion pictures by act of legislature was broached, the Moving Picture World has been arrayed on the side of the opposition. It has stated its reasons for that opposition at different times and, we believe, there is little more to be said on the subject. That its advice has been understood and followed, one has only to note the numerous "censor bills" that have failed of passage in the several state legislatures which have considered such bills during the past few months. Bearing this fact in mind the Moving Picture World believes that its stand on the question of "official state censorship" has been approved by the public in general and the trade in particular.

Notwithstanding these facts there seems still to be a small faction which affects to believe in the efficacy of "state censorship" and persists in urging that measure of regulation upon the trade. Of this faction President M. A. Neff of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America is the active agent and spokesman. As the Moving Picture World has always given both sides to every controversy a chance to be heard, it takes pleasure in giving space to a defense of the "state censorship" plan written by President Neff, in the following terms:

PRESIDENT NEFF'S STATEMENT.

Owing to the many editorials and misleading statements made from time to time in regards to the censor bill passed in Ohio, and the reasons for the same, I desire to make a statement: First, it is absolutely necessary to have either a national or a state censor board with legal authority to censor the pictures in the State of Ohio, otherwise, by reason of the passing of constitutional amendments in the State of Ohio, each city and town in Ohio would have the right to establish a censor board. If we had not passed a state censor bill in the State of Ohio, the moving picture exhibitors of Ohio might just as well close up their theaters, as possibly every town would have established a censor board and any one acquainted with the situation can well imagine what this would mean. Every film would not only be censored once in the State of Ohio, but possibly one hundred times, and each censor board would become a political asset controlled by little, narrow-minded politicians that would destroy the moving picture business in our state.

The Ohio censor bill passed provides that the members of the Ohio censor board may act with any other legally constituted board and establish a national censor board which would censor the pictures for every state in the Union, but would not be supported by donations from those directly interested in having pictures passed.

In the various reports that have been made by the various writers opposed to the censoring of pictures, they have never yet explained the position in Ohio thoroughly, but have condemned all censor boards unless they were supported by contributions, such as the National Censorship Board in New York, which has no legal standing and is supported practically by the New York manufacturers. Now, what the exhibitors want are facts, and here are a few of them: We first tried in every way possible to secure a legal national censor board, but found it impossible to do so by reason of the fact that the national government has no authority, whatsoever, to establish a censor board to censor pictures for the individual states. We then turned to the state for relief and after more than a year's hard work and planning and asking for advice from manufacturers, newspapers and others, no one could suggest a plan whereby the emergency might be met. It was then that I proposed that a few states pass a censor bill creating a censor board and that these few censor boards get together and form a national censor congress and censor the pictures for every state in the Union by securing the endorsement of all the states to accept the censoring of the pictures by the censor congress, which would be a very easy matter.

Ohio has passed such a bill and it will soon become a law and we are ready to work with other states in forming a national censor board and are ready to do our best to secure the endorsement of the censor board so established and which will be legal in every respect and once a picture is censored by the censor board so credited, every state that endorses this board will not have to pay a cent and the exhibitor and manufacturer will know that there will be no interference whatsoever with the pictures when they are sent into the various cities to be exhibited.

There is a vast difference between a self-constituted censor board with no authority and a national censorship board created as heretofore stated, with absolute legal authority. The pictures now being censored by the national censorship board are, in many places, being re-censored, whereas if censored by a censor board, as provided by the Ohio state censor bill, no one would dare to interfere with the exhibition of pictures that were so censored. It is not proposed to have forty-eight states represented on this censor board because it is not necessary. The other states would not wish it. I believe that all the people and the states want is to be secure and protected from suggestive and immoral pictures, and this would increase the picture business from 15 per cent. to 30 per cent. in every state. It is a step upwards and in the right direction, for we must have supervision for pictures that are manufactured, not so much for those made in this country as those from foreign countries that are shipped to us.

The censor bill proposed in Michigan was outrageous; it provided that one man and one woman should constitute the board and that $2.50 should be paid, not only for each film censored, but for slides. I did all I could to kill that bill. The bill in Kansas was almost as bad and I did what I could to kill that bill. The bill in Wisconsin I have not read. I was opposed to the bill in Iowa because it was not properly drawn and did not make the proper provision; it was vicious, misleading, unconstitutional and a detriment to all concerned. The bill in California I am opposed to most bitterly, also I was opposed to the bill offered in the State of Indiana. In fact, I have been opposed to every bill I have seen so far, with the exception of the one in Ohio.

I am in favor of a national censor congress composed of broad-minded, honest citizens who are paid a stipulated salary and are under the jurisdiction of some authority who has the right to ask for their resignation if the pictures get by that should not, or if pictures are condemned that should have passed. I fail to see where any conscientious person can object to the exhibitor having representation upon this board and I am sure that the exhibitors are willing to have the manufacturers and the press represented.

What we want is a censor board that means something and that will last and will uplift the business; that will not be too exacting or too liberal; that will not have the least taint of politics connected with it and that will not be for any class or classes, but that will discharge its duty fearlessly, honestly and to the best interest of everybody. We are forced in a position that we must meet and, up to date, there is not one of those who are opposed to a censor board who has offered, in my opinion, any relief to the exhibitor or the manufacturer and I, in my opinion, believe that if there is not some kind of supervision for the picture manufacturer, that the business will deteriorate instead of advance, and I believe that everybody will concede that the National Censorship Board, up to the time it was discovered that it had no legal authority, was doing good work, and if it had been possible, I, for one, would have endorsed the National Censorship Board and let it go on with the good work it was doing, but it had no legal standing and could not enforce the law. When this fact became known, the various cities took advantage of the situation until it has become such a danger to the exhibitors that we are forced to do something, and the only thing possible to do under our form of government, is to establish the national censor congress, created from a few of the states and to show the other states the wisdom of endorsing the congress.

I am open for conviction and any one that can show me a better plan, I assure them that it will be hailed with satisfaction and relief. My first consideration is for the exhibitor, but to be for the exhibitor, one must of necessity be for the people and look to the interest of the people that the exhibitor may continue to do business and prosper.

There is one thing that impresses me in all of the writings that I have read and that is that the National Censorship Board, established in New York, seems to be endorsed by the various writers. If some one will kindly explain how the censoring of pictures by the National Censorship Board will assist exhibitors and cause other boards to discontinue, we will then agree that the National Censorship Board can handle the situation, but so long as pictures must be re-censored after the National Censorship Board, of New York, has censored them, why waste the time censoring the pictures in New York? If the State of New York will pass a law legalizing the National Censorship Board, Ohio will be only too happy to either work with them or to accept the pictures they censor without further question.

I have just read the bill introduced in Illinois. I am absolutely opposed to the bill because it does not provide that the Illinois censor board may co-operate with other states in forming a national censor congress and there are other parts of it I object to that are too numerous to mention.

M. A. Neff, President.

The Ohio Censor Law.

For the information of the trade the full text of the Ohio censor law is published herewith:

(House Bill No. 322.)

AN ACT

Providing a Board to Censor Motion Picture Films and Prescribing the Duties and Powers of the Same.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio:

Section 1. There is created under the authority and supervision of the industrial commission of Ohio, a board of censors of motion picture films. Upon the taking effect of this act, the industrial commission shall appoint, with the approval of the governor, three persons, one for one year, one for two years and one for three years, who shall constitute such board. Upon the expiration of the term of each member so appointed, a successor shall be appointed in like manner for a term of three years.

Section 2. The industrial commission shall furnish the board of censors with suitable office rooms and with sufficient equipment to properly carry out the provisions of this act. The board of censors may organize by electing one of its members as president. The secretary of the industrial commission shall act as secretary of the board. Each member of the board of censors shall receive an annual salary of one thousand five hundred dollars per year. Such salary and expenses shall in no case exceed the fees paid to the Ohio board of censors for examination and approval of motion picture films.

The members of the board shall be considered as employees of the industrial commission and shall be paid as other employees of such commission are paid. The industrial commission shall appoint such other assistants as may be necessary to carry on the work of the board.

Section 3. It shall be the duty of the board of censors to examine and censor as hereinbefore provided, all motion picture films to be publicly exhibited and displayed in the State of Ohio. Such films shall be submitted to the board before they shall be delivered to the exhibitor for exhibition. The board shall charge a fee of one ($1.00) dollar for each reel of film to be censored which does not exceed one thousand (1,000) lineal feet; for any reel of film exceeding one thousand (1,000) lineal feet, the sum of two ($2.00) dollars shall be charged. All monies so received shall be paid each week into the state treasury to the credit of the general revenue fund.

Section 4. Only such films as are in the judgment and discretion of the board of censors of a moral, educational or amusing and harmless character shall be passed and approved by such board. They shall be stamped or designated in an appropriate manner and consecutively numbered. Before any motion picture film shall be publicly exhibited, there shall be projected upon the screen the words "Approved by the Ohio Board of Censors," and the number of the film.

Section 5. The board of censors may work in conjunction with any censor board or boards of legal status of other states as a censor congress and the action of such congress in approving or rejecting films shall be considered as the action of the board and all films passed, stamped and numbered by such congress, when the fees have been paid to the Ohio board, shall be considered approved by such board.

Section 6. Ninety days after this act shall take effect, no films may be publicly shown or exhibited within the State of Ohio, unless they have been passed and approved by the board or the censor congress and stamped and numbered by such board, or congress, as provided for herein.

Section 7. Any person, firm or corporation who shall publicly exhibit or show any motion picture within the State of Ohio unless it shall have been passed, approved and stamped by the Ohio board of censors or the congress of censors shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than twenty-five ($25.00) dollars nor more than three hundred ($300.00) dollars, or imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than one year, or both, for each offense.

Section 8. Any person in interest being dissatisfied with any order of such board shall have the same rights and remedies as to filing a petition for hearing on the reasonableness and lawfulness of any order of such board or to set aside, vacate or amend any order of such board as is provided in the case of persons dissatisfied with the orders of the Industrial Commission.

President Neff's statement calls for a reply. We regret that he has not brought forward more definite reasons for his statement that a measure such as he proposes is needed to save the motion picture exhibitor from elimination. He has said that such is the case, but no proof that his statements are borne out by conditions has been produced; neither does he advance a single argument or proof in his statement, foregoing.

Take, for example, the statement that possibly every town in the state of Ohio would have established a censor board if the Ohio law had not been passed; where is the proof that such action was imminent and, what is more to the point, what prohibition is there in the Ohio law that will prevent such action being taken in the future?

We have read the Ohio law several times and fail to discover a word that prohibits the municipal government of any city or town in that state from establishing a local censor. All that the law provides is the appointment of a State Board of Censors which shall inspect motion picture film and stereopticon slides to be shown in that state and receive a salary for its services; also, that any exhibitor showing a picture not bearing the stamp of approval of the board shall be penalized.

As for conditions in Ohio it has not been clearly stated that it was not possible for municipalities to establish censor boards before the passage of this new censor law. That it was possible for them so to do is proved by the fact that Cleveland did establish such a censor board before the law was passed. What Cleveland did, other cities might have done had there been a definite demand for such action on the part of the citizens of those other cities. That they did not so establish censor boards is sufficient refutation of the statement that there was great danger of the exhibitor being put out of business by local censor boards.

We are safe in declaring that, at no time, has there been the least danger that exhibitors in the state of Ohio would be even inconvenienced, much less put out of business, by local censor boards.

We further declare that there is nothing in the Ohio censor law, published herewith, that prevents the establishment of local censor boards in any city in the state of Ohio if the authorities of the cities so decide.

"The Censor Congress."

President Neff says that the ultimate end sought by the enactment of state censorship laws is what he terms a "censor congress," which is to be composed of delegated members of the censor boards of other states. The censor congress thus formed is to censor pictures for all other states without cost. This, he declares, will be "a very easy matter."

Will it?

In the first place every censor bill that has been offered in other states has provided that its board of censors shall be paid for its services out of the fees charged for censoring. If no fees are charged no salaries will be paid. The Ohio law provides that its censor board may work in conjunction with any other censor board legally constituted as a censor congress (See section 5), and the action of the congress shall be considered as the action of the Ohio board, when the fees have been paid to the Ohio board.

If the Ohio board's fees must be paid what about the fees of the boards of the other states that join in the censor congress; will they not have to be paid, too? In that emergency what becomes of President Neff's claim that films will be censored without cost?

Suppose that not more than ten states should join Ohio in the "censor congress" idea; at the rate charged as provided by the Ohio law the cost of censoring a single thousand foot reel of film would be ten dollars. But if the state censor idea became popular is it not probable that twenty, or even forty-eight states might join Ohio in its "censor congress" and then the cost would run up to forty-eight dollars per reel.

There is no telling where this thing would stop. Politicians are quick to accept suggestions that give jobs and pay salaries. We have sufficient examples of that already, for in every state where the censor idea has been proposed, jobs have been created and salaries ranging as high as $3,500 per year and expenses have been provided for the censors. Is it to be supposed that the politicians of other states will waive all these possibilities of jobs and salaries when Ohio especially provides that its fees must be paid to make the action of a "censor congress" legal in that state?

But upon what does President Neff base his claim that there would be no cost? Unfortunately he does not say. We confess that we do not know. There is not the least assurance given that any state or states would agree to recognize the "censor congress." The likelihood of their doing anything of the kind is remote. For years efforts have been made to secure a uniform divorce law in the United States, but, up to this day the matter is as far from solution as it was in the beginning. If the individual states will not come together on a matter of so great importance what chance is there that they would ever agree on the censorship question?

We are bound to conclude that the "national censor congress" is an iridescent dream.

But what about the Ohio censor law? As before noted it guarantees nothing to the exhibitor in the way of immunity from the activities of local boards of censorship, if established, and it does not prevent their establishment. It is empowered to inspect every reel of film that comes into the state for exhibition—approximately 150 per week. There are four points in Ohio where reels are received daily for distribution to exhibitors. The members of the board will have to distribute themselves among these points in order to prevent delay in the exchange service to exhibitors or that service will be seriously deranged. This is a matter that can be adjusted. But when the film reaches Ohio it is a finished product and any eliminations will have the effect of mutilating the picture, as is the case in Chicago and other towns that have censor boards.

Then there is the item of cost, not great, to be sure, but it's there and must be paid by someone. As the manufacturers are not interested they will not pay it. It will be collected from the exchange, and the exchanges, operated by practical men, will shift it over to the exhibitor in an increased cost of service, and there you are. The exhibitor pays.

If there is an exhibitor, or group of exhibitors, in Ohio unable to cope with local situations and who fear that they are going to lose their business through the activities of local censors and who further believe that this Ohio bill will prevent all these calamities, they ought now to be able to sleep o' nights, for the bill has been passed. But, if they believe all these things, their faith passeth understanding, for it is not so written in the law.

If editorial writers and others disagreeing with President Neff on this question of censorship have been unable to offer a solution other than that provided by the very efficient and capable National Board of Censorship, it is because they have failed to discover the emergency of which he speaks. Also, they are cognizant of the legal questions involved and the political dangers which would threaten the trade through the invocation of the law.

In the world's product of motion pictures, that of the United States is of the highest quality—it is the world's standard. That such is true, are not the honest honorable and competent men and women of the National Board of Censorship, who have labored earnestly for the past three years, entitled to our highest commendations? We are told that American pictures pass foreign censors almost without question; ought they not receive like consideration at home? If, as President Neff claims, it is the foreign picture that causes trouble here, are we not capable of doing the necessary house cleaning without an act of legislature? Also, remember:

KEEP THE PICTURE OUT OF POLITICS!!!

SOCIETY GIRL IN FILMS?

Count Mourik de Beaufort, a society writer on the New York American, gave Manhattan picture fans a scare last Sunday when he printed an interview with Adele Ray, a Thanhouser player, in which he claimed that she was none other than Evelyn Prevost, cousin to Mrs. John Jacob Astor and a society bud of the first water. Miss Rey's (or Prevost's) latest Thanhouser picture is "His Sacrifice," a drama released in June. The newspaperman stated that the young woman had gone into the photoplay field "to be useful as well as ornamental."

OUTDOOR PRESENTATION OF "HIAWATHA."

Following the close of the "Hiawatha" engagement at the Berkeley Theater, F. E. Moore, owner of the production, left Saturday night for his home in Middletown, Ohio. Before returning here Mr. Moore will visit the Indian out-of-door play, "Hiawatha," which opens in New York, June 9th, under the auspices of the Woman's Municipal League. The presentation will be at Fieldston, opposite Van Cortlandt Park.

Conditions in Germany.

The Horrors of Government Supervision of Picture Theaters Described—American Pictures Favored.

By W. Stephen Bush.

Berlin, May 4, 1913.

NO just estimate of the conditions in the German film industry is possible without taking into account the attitude of the German government toward the maker and exhibitor of motion pictures. The great amusement trust in Germany is the government. Practically two-thirds of all the theaters, and actually all the theaters in the big cities, are managed by financial agents of the government. Within recent years just about the time motion pictures began to be popular in our own country, there was a sharp advance in theatrical prices. From popular prices, averaging about 60 cents, the scale was raised to an average well exceeding a dollar. A good seat in any of the first-class theaters of Berlin is not to be had to-day for less than two dollars and fifty cents and there are plenty for three dollars and more.

At this moment appeared the motion picture. The thrifty Germans gave it an enthusiastic welcome. The exhibitors were wise enough not to go too far below theatrical prices, but just far enough to become formidable competitors. Prices ranged from 25 cents to one dollar, with a few seats at a dollar and a half. At once a very desirable patronage was transferred from the high-priced theater to the moving picture house. Small theaters started up all over the city, but the government treated them with contempt.

It was not long, however, before one after another of the old legitimate theaters changed from the drama to moving pictures. Presently new theaters were built rivalling in comfort and luxury the best of the legitimate houses and showing "straight" pictures to crowded houses. Now the government took the alarm. It was estimated that one big theater had taken in over $120,000 in one year. Perhaps the estimate was too high; but, at any rate, it was large enough to excite both the envy and the greed of the government. The latter had two ways of coping with the situation—its weapons were censorship and taxation. We need not be any too proud of the position which the showman occupies in the eyes of our own law, but he is a pampered individual indeed when compared with the German showman. The government issues its edict and fixes a rate of taxation strictly to suit itself and with no thought of the probable fate of the exhibitor. I questioned a number of exhibitors and moving picture experts here and they agree that the government takes about twenty per cent. of the gross receipts of the exhibitor. The taxation begins with every ticket which is sold at 10 cents and the ratio increases rapidly as the tickets increase in value. I do not think there are half a dozen moving picture theaters here charging as low as five cents, but many have now gone to 9 cents just to avoid the tax.

Even the tax, however unjust and arbitrary as it seems to be, has failed utterly to hurt the popularity of the pictures. The government therefore used the bludgeon of censorship. The principles and methods of German censorship baffle description. They violate every rule of fair play and ignore the plainest mandates of equity. Prussia is a semi-despotic country; there is supposed to be a representative government, but it never goes any further than the police allow. From infancy the Prussian is taught that the serious business of life is to drill and to be drilled. Implicit and unreasoning obedience to whatever the paternal government is pleased to ordain is second nature with the average subject of the Kaiser.

I asked an editor here: "If the police censor the pictures, who censors the police?" and he could not understand. The "divine right" business is paying big dividends in Germany.

Censorship is not only severe, but hopelessly stupid. The producer takes his film to a police official who orders a couple of hundred feet cut out. No reasoning is possible. The producer who would contumaciously argue the point with the police official might be arrested and dragged off to jail for insulting a representative of the government. I understand that an appeal is technically possible, but it is attended with so much red tape and so great an expense that the remedy is about as bad as the disease. There is no system in this censorship. The whims and the temperament of an individual decide.

One of the most notorious enemies of the motion picture is a man known as Professor Brunner. He calls the motion picture a "national peril" and arranges public meetings in which the motion picture, the producer and the exhibitor are denounced as public enemies. This is the very man who has been asked by the police to assist in censoring the pictures. He does not want to compromise with the pictures; he wants to destroy them.

To mention just one example of the depths of stupidity of German censorship. The Gaumonts have released a series of "comics" showing the adventures of a little boy. The government censored these pictures and suppressed several of them because "they seemed to encourage rebellion against parental authority." Pictures showing the most sordid and revolting conditions of the underworld and others chiefly dealing with the seduction of poor working girls by dreadful employers are passed without question.

It is little short of marvelous that, despite all these handicaps, the picture thrives here better even than in England. The chain of first-class moving pictures with large capacity and every possible improvement and convenience is constant food for wonder. The Cines Company and "Al" Woods, the American theatrical manager, own most of these theaters and are making them pay. All this is due to the American-made picture, without which no program is deemed complete. Almost all American manufacturers are represented in Berlin and if comparatively few of their products are advertised in the trade journals the cause must be sought in a well established market which takes care of itself.

American pictures suffer comparatively little from the censor. For the audiences here the screened description of American life, American customs and manners, American men, women and children seem to be specially attractive. While we often discriminate against the foreign pictures, the foreigners seem to be prejudiced in favor of our pictures. American comedies are in great demand.

This demand for American pictures has set the German manufacturers thinking. They are looking for the secret of our success. They realize that their product must, in quality and from a moral point of view, seek to approach American standards. Some have hired directors with American experience and others are looking for American directors and willing to pay the price. At present not one of them has a studio of his own. Studios are hired by the day or week and the expense is often shared by a combination of two or three producers. Only one or two of the manufacturers have permanent staffs of actors. As a rule, their product is good in photography; some of their artists are capable, but the differences in the taste and the demands of German audiences make very many of the German pictures ineligible for the American market. The German audience revels in detail. A death scene is reckoned a great sentimental luxury, which may be prolonged ad libitum. All "weepy stuff" is relished and must not be cut. Action is not deemed as important as sentiment. The German is cosmopolitan enough to find a source of wonder and delight in the foreign, especially the American picture, but he does like the native product best when it seems "to the manner born." It must also be remembered that in spite of the effective educational system which prevails in all Germany the people outside of the cities are like most people in Europe—well contented to move in old conventional grooves. They have simple tastes and very little pleases them. They are the very opposite of critical. With these audiences almost any picture will make a hit. This accounts for an awful lot of trashy things, wretched in photography and simply impossible in all other respects.

There are two things which are done much better here than on our side. I refer to music and to methods of presentation generally. Berlin has motion picture theaters in the finest parts of the city, which are wonders of artistic architecture and scientific management. When you enter one of these theaters, like Mozart Hall or the Cines Palace or the Kammer Spiele, you feel at once that you are a guest and the object of pleasing attention. The corps of ushers is well distributed and well trained. The visitor gets the idea that he is receiving individual attention. He is guided to a spacious and comfortable chair or a box; he gets a program for 2 cents and the usher either marks his program or tells him what picture is on the screen and how far it has run. If he wishes any kind of refreshment special waiters bring it at once and the price is very reasonable. There is a receptacle for glass or cup convenient to every seat. Your hat and coat are taken care of for a nominal sum. There are no swift or sudden changes from darkness to light or vice versa. The lights come on gradually and go out gradually. No noise from the operator's booth ever gets to the ears of the audience. All seats are reserved and numbered, the higher the price of admission the further away from the curtain. The attendants are courteous to a fault. The interior of Mozart Hall reminds one of an opera house (not "opr'y house"), in its comfort and luxury.

The crowning achievement of the German theater, however, is the music. Orchestras of fifteen and twenty pieces are not uncommon. The musicians are artists led by capable and experienced directors. The slightest detail is looked after. Every important psychological moment in the drama is effectively elaborated by the music and when a climax comes music aids motion in a most acceptable manner. I admired their music for comedies; it always fitted like a glove. No subject puzzles the musical director. I should imagine that music for a subject like the Ohio flood was not easy to select, but the accompaniment in the Cines Palace was strikingly adapted to the scenes on the screen. Awkward pauses are unknown. Nor are the show places the only ones exhibiting this fine regard for musical possibilities. The thing is typical of all moving picture theaters—large and small. Of course, the weekly change of program favors a proper selection and rendition of music, but I found that the music was just as good the first day of the program. I am firmly persuaded that the musical feature of the entertainment goes a long way toward reconciling the public to the big prices.

I cannot say much for the projection, which is on the whole little better than ordinary. All European pictures seem to be printed on poor stock and often reminded me of those terrible non-inflammable films which we saw in the latter part of 1909. Few films I saw were in perfect condition. The only exceptions were some of the feature films.

The film market in Germany is in a most bewildering condition—confusion worse confounded. Pathe and Gaumont are dealing with exhibitors directly, releases are by no means regular and then there is the exclusive film, generally a feature of three, four and five reels and sold on the State rights or world's rights plan. I was told that "Quo Vadis" was rented at 10,000 marks ($2,500), for two weeks; another sensational film fetched a rental of 17,000 marks (over $4,000), in Leipzig, for a period of one month. There are a number of independent directors who form temporary alliances with distinguished artists of the big legitimate theaters and sell negatives to certain syndicates. This, too, helps to bedevil the market.

The exhibitors are well organized in Berlin and other large cities of the empire, but the national union is not strong and has but little influence. They are, as far as I have been able to observe, an intelligent body of men, with a proper realization of their responsibilities. They are greatly alarmed just now at the threatened action of the government, which in addition to levying an exorbitant tax, intends in October to take up the question of exacting a special yearly license. If this plan is carried out many places will have to close. The government will treat the theaters like we treated the saloons under the old high license system. If no proof of their necessity is forthcoming no license will be issued and of the necessity the government will be the sole judge.

In spite of all present troubles and allowing for further displays of hostility on the part of the government, I predict a great progress in Germany. There are only about 3,000 houses in the empire now, but I would not be surprised to see this number trebled in a year or so. There is no reason why this market cannot yield as fine returns to the American producer as the British market. Nothing more is needed than ordinary American energy and a proper understanding of conditions.

For the benefit of other American moving picture men who may hereafter be tempted to visit here, I venture to set down a few observations which will, I trust, help them to understand some of the strange native customs. I must take special notice of the German elevator. In its normal state the German elevator dwells in sacred seclusion. It is strongly and safely locked up and the possession of the key to the elevator is the last and crowning emblem of janitorial dignity. When uncouth foreigners like myself wish to use the elevator—natives refrain from it out of regard for its sacred character—notice is given to the janitor, who in the exercise of a sound discretion may or may not admit the applicant. In any event, the news that the elevator is about to be used travels rapidly through the neighborhood and soon crowds of small boys and girls assemble and witness the unlocking and ascending of the elevator. The elevator ascends with imposing dignity and often attains a speed of a floor a minute. When you get out, the elevator immediately descends and is again locked up. If you fancy that upon your tipping the bell the elevator will re-ascend and bring you back to the ground floor you have a great lesson to learn. In the first place there is no bell. In the second place the elevator is not to be lightly molested. It has taken you up—please expect no more, walk down. What a sublime example of patience our German friends are setting us here. In the mad rush of elevators "up and down" we often are betrayed into violent comment on the slowness of the elevator service and are prone to speak rudely to the elevator man or the starter. We thus frequently compromise our dignity. Our German cousins would much rather walk down than imperil their philosophic calm.

I would also warn you away from what the Berliners call their circular system of suburban transit. It is fair, but false. Apparently it costs three and a half cents to ride in any direction for a distance of four stations. In the cheaper cars it is only 2½ cents. Naturally you feel elated. At this rate you can ride continuously for a year and never touch your savings bank. You ride, say a distance from Grand Street to 14th and blithely walk off, giving the ticket taker your ticket and a look of hauteur. He sternly orders you to halt and explains that you have gone one station beyond the limit of your ticket. Things begin to look black. Passengers gather and view you with ill-concealed suspicion. Nobody has a kind word for you. You really begin to lose sympathy for yourself, when another uniformed railway employe leads you to a ticket office where you have to pay an additional 7½ cents. You mentally retract all you ever said about the Interborough and thereafter trust yourself to taxis, which are quite cheap. Marvels of cheapness are the electric stages. For two cents you can ride indefinitely. I gave a conductor three cents, for which I was rewarded with about a dozen rapid military salutes. I then tried him with four cents and he ignored every other passenger on the car for the rest of the journey. No doubt I could have bought the car for a dollar, but the cost of transportation might have killed my profit. The conductor gazed after me with wondering eyes and a last salute. I am only a poor film man, but I am always willing to do my share in sustaining our reputation as a nation of reckless spenders.

SUPERVISION OF PICTURES IN BAVARIA.

In the Kingdom of Bavaria, which is a part of the German Empire, all motion picture films are under the control of the Royal Police Commission of the city of Munich, and an application for approval stating all particulars regarding the picture must be made to that commission before it may be shown in any house in Bavaria. Under this provision the Police Senate of the city of Nuremberg has adopted an elaborate set of rules providing for the examination of pictures and other forms of entertainment to be offered to the public. Children under sixteen years of age are forbidden to enter picture shows under any circumstance, but to provide for children, special exhibitions are permitted, the program of which must first obtain the approval of the City Magistrate. Exhibitions for the young may be given only on the afternoons of Wednesday, Saturday, Sunday and holidays, and in the winter from October 1 to May 31, between the hours of 2 and 5 o'clock, and from April 1 to September 30, from 2 until 6 p. m., and must not exceed an hour and a half in length.

BRITISH NOTES.

The fifth annual trade dinner has been held this week at the Hotel Cecil. Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M. P., a well-known and popular journalist, was the principal guest and nearly 500 town and provincial trade representatives attended. The observation which accompanied the toasts and speeches were most social and of general interest and a commendable fact was that no one attempted to analyse the recent trade crisis. The suggestion was made in the course of the proceedings by different speakers that Mr. O'Conner was an eminently suitable person to represent the Industry in Parliament. Unfortunately Mr. O'Conner's reply to the principal toast was slightly misrepresentative; one of his remarks which stuck in the throats of the few Americans present being "today the Industry in England is at a point far in front of the Industry in other parts of the world."

A custom growing in favor in this country seems to be the sending out by film manufacturers of artists of repute as exhibition turns. Only the other day Signor Castellain, the Italian giant who plays Ursus in "Quo Vadis" appeared as an additional attraction at the Albert Hall in London, where this film was first exhibited in the metropolis. He gave an address in latin. The precocious youngster known as "Willie," who figures conspicuously in Eclair films, is also visiting various picture theaters in London and the provinces, while from another source I hear that Mr. Maurice Costello is to be substantially induced to face the music by the management of a picture theater in London which specializes in Vitagraph subjects. The Vitagraph globe trotters are due in London shortly, but the probability of their appearing on a public stage either collectively or individually, seemsomewhat remote as I am informed that similar offers were made in New York some time ago without success.

In connection with the International Exhibition at Liverpool a Kinematograph section has been organized and several American and English concerns are being represented. Later in the year smaller trade exhibitions are to be held in Leeds, Manchester and Glasgow. In fact the recent London display has aroused in provincial centers a keen determination against being relegated into the background of trade enterprise. From present arrangements I should think that some of the country exhibitions will be able to give a few points to the town show. But then this should not be any occasion for surprise as it is often acknowledged by members of the London trade that some of the best novelties emanate from the provinces. Even "Quo Vadis" was shown in the country a month before in London.

A camera lens at £215 is attracting some attention at the establishment of a London dealer.

Ragtime, which is just now an obsession in London is to affect the moving pictures here at last. For months it has invaded picture theater orchestras, but so far had not yet reached the screen. One of the first observations of Mr. W. Stephen Bush, the well-known writer of the Moving Picture World, when he reached London a few days ago was "Good heavens! I thought I had escaped it when I left New York, but I seem to be in for it worse than ever." Its newest guise, however, is the ragtime kinema revue consisting of a long compendium of screen representations of the American freak dances. Three different ones will shortly appear in London.

The moving picture is being employed by certain societies in this country as an argument against animal vivisection. It is claimed that much of the multiplication of experiments could be obviated by filming first experiments and circulating copies of the films to the various pathological institutes where the experiments are actually performed.

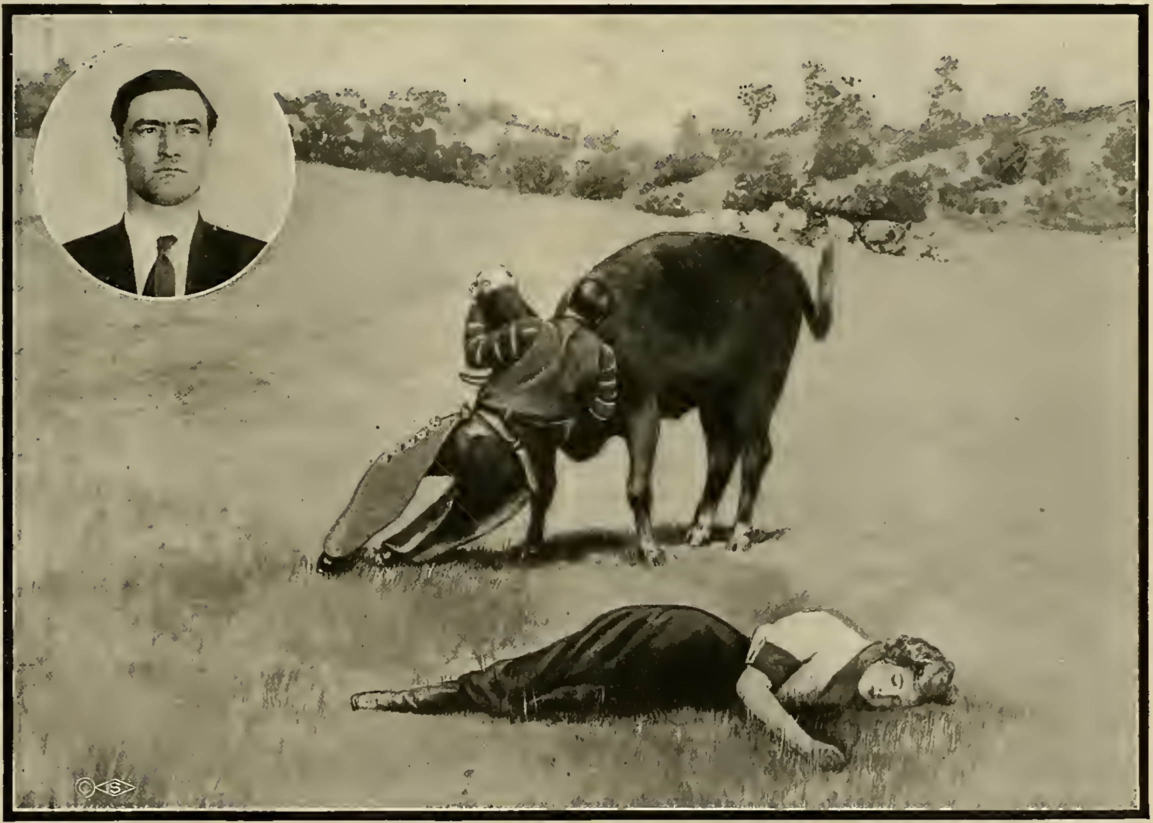
"Kinoplastikon," described on the program and by the press as moving pictures without a screen was first shown in Britain last Friday, at Mr. Chas. Urban's Kinemacolor theater, the Scala. It is an imported novelty from Vienna and has enormous possibilities. To term it screenless, however, is not accurate as the films, carefully vignetted, are projected in the ordinary way by an ordinary machine on to a semi-transparant screen of fine mesh work. Behind the screen is an illuminated stage scene with stage furniture in relief. The illusion produced resembles—but for a deceptive intermittent flicker—that of real people on a real stage. The Scala Theater has secured sole rights of the novelty so that Mr. Urban may be the person to introduce it to America.

TOM MIX "THROWS THE BULL."

On June 4th, the Selig Polyscope Company will release, as a special, a two-part film which promises to go down in picture history as a triumph unequalled in Western realism. The picture in question is entitled "The Law and the Outlaw." It is melodramatic in both theme and construction, and serves to introduce several extremely sensational incidents, the like of which have never before been recorded in pictures. Tom Mix, the daring and resourceful cowboy actor of the Selig organization, plays the role of "Dakota" Wilson, an outlaw. One scene shows "Dakota," while handcuffed, make his escape from a posse of sheriffs by jumping from his horse and tumbling down an almost perpendicular cliff. Another scene shows the rescue of Ruth Watson (Myrtle Stedman), from almost certain death, by "Dakota." She is about to be tossed on the horns of a maddened steer when "Dakota" on horseback overtakes the bull and, leaping from his horse to the horns of the steer, "bulldogs" and throws the frenzied beast. Still another scene shows "Dakota" fall from his horse and undergo a severe dragging when one of his feet becomes entangled in a stirrup.



Scene from Selig's Two-Reel, Western Dramatic Feature to be Released as a Special on June 4th. Circle shows Tom Mix in the Role of "'Dakota" Wilson,' the Outlaw."

Changes in Universal Directors

At the First Annual Meeting of Stockholders David Horsley Retires—Robert Cochrane Becomes Secretary-Treasurer.

THE first annual meeting of the stockholders of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company was held last week at the offices of the company at 1,600 Broadway. The following directors were elected: Carl Laemmle, William H. Swanson, Robert H. Cochrane, Waldo G. Morse, G. E. Kann, S. S. Steiner and Leo Hirschfeld. Later Mr. Laemmle was elected president, Mr. Swanson vice-president and Mr. Cochrane secretary-treasurer. David Horsley, who retires from the board of directors, will, it is understood, remain in the service of the company as superintendent of factories.

Carl Laemmle.

William H. Swanson.

J. C. Graham is to be the general manager of the company. Mr. Graham has been in charge of the New York City exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation. He entered the moving picture business about six years ago as a partner of H. E. Aitken in the Western Film Exchange of St. Louis, Mo., and has been associated with Mr. Aitken in all of the latter's enterprises since that time, joining him in the organization of the Mutual Film Corporation. He was an equal partner with J. V. Ritchie in the purchase of the Reliance Company from the New York Film Manufacturing Company about a year and a half ago. Mr. Ritchie, so far as we are able to ascertain, still retains his interest in the Reliance Company and the Mutual Film Corporation. Mr. Graham leaves the Mutual with the best wishes of all his former associates for his success in his new field.

Mr. Laemmle, Mr. Swanson and Mr. Cochrane left New York at the end of the week to attend a meeting in Chicago of the Independent Exchange Company.

As announced in the advertising columns of The World last week, the Universal Company has signed five-year contracts with the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, of which William Oldknow is the general manager and controlling five exchanges, and the Interstate Films Company, which operates six exchanges and which will open a seventh on June 1. Mr. Oldknow was the president of the Independent Company. As our Chicago dispatch points out, he failed to attend the meeting of the organization in Chicago.

President Laemmle returned to New York Wednesday morning. When seen by a World man he said that the change in the board of directors of the company did not indicate any alteration of policy. He said there would be a continued endeavor to make better pictures, that there is absolute harmony among those who control the company, and that he never had been so enthusiastic as to the prospects of the company as he is right now.

"Our sales in Europe are increasing steadily," said Mr. Laemmle. "This is the true barometer as to our progress and as to the regard in which our work is held, as you know on the other side we are in competition with the whole world. I have just received a report on 'Sheridan's Ride,' written two weeks before that picture was to be released on the other side, which shows that in England alone five more prints had already been sold than were disposed of in the United States and Canada."

Mr. Laemmle was asked as to the relations between the Universal and Mr. Powers. He replied that so far as he knew they were friendly. "At the time Mr. Powers sold his stock in the Universal to Mr. Swanson and myself, he made a contract for all of his exchanges to buy the Universal product for three years, and he is to-day one of our best customers," said Mr. Laemmle.

Mr. Laemmle received a dispatch on Thursday morning stating that the negotiations between the Universal and the Independent Exchange Company were approaching a climax and that there was every indication of the signing of a contract eminently satisfactory to both parties.

NEGOTIATIONS IN CHICAGO.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

The opening session of the stockholders of the Independent Exchange Company was held in the Hotel Sherman, Monday, May 19, from 2:30 p. m. to 5:30 p. m. This meeting, like that held from 9:00 p. m. to 9:30 p. m., the same day, was held behind closed doors.

Both sessions were practically devoted to routine business. Frank T. Bailey, vice-president of the company, occupied the chair. On reading the roll call it was found that William Oldknow, of Atlanta, and connected with the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, was not present. It was then moved and carried that a wire be sent Mr. Oldknow requesting his resignation as director and president of the company. Mr. Oldknow's absence, it is understood, created considerable surprise, as he is represented as having formerly been one of the most ardent and radical supporters of the Independent Exchange Company's policies.

On learning of the presence in the hotel of William H. Swanson, Carl Laemmle and Robert H. Cochrane of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company., a committee was appointed to invite these gentlemen to the meeting to be held Tuesday forenoon, at 11 o'clock, to discuss the contract issue between the two parties. The other business of the session was strictly routine. Judge George H. Trude, general counsel for the Independent Exchange Company, was present to see that the proceedings were conducted in a strictly legal manner. The company being an incorporation of the state of Maine, all proceedings outside that state must afterward be duly ratified by proxies in that state.

William H. Swanson was seen in the hotel late in the evening and, in a conversation, showed a disposition to minimize the importance of the policy of the members of the Independent Exchange Company. He claims that the Universal has practically gotten control of the entire country with the exception of some unimportant districts, and that business can be carried on by that company successfully, should a break occur. He maintains that exchange men dealing with the Universal have made more money than they ever did before, for any stated period. He holds that to permit exchanges which use the Universal product to stop at a certain maximum number of reels weekly would practically make it impossible for the Universal to conduct business with a profit. Indeed, he goes so far as to say that it would mean bankruptcy to the manufacturers associated in the Universal. He referred to the liberal policy of the Universal in originating the supplying of feature films, without extra cost, for exhibitors. This policy, Mr. Swanson believes, has not only greatly benefited the exhibitors, but also the exchanges.

The New Yorkers present at the Hotel Sherman were: Carl Laemmle, William H. Swanson, R. H. Cochrane, Pat Powers, Ingvald E. Oes, C. Lang Cobb, Jr., and John Tippett of Union Features.

The members of the Independent Exchange Company present were: P. A. Powers, Frank T. Bailey, Portland, Oregon; M. Markovitch, San Francisco; B. V. Powell, Oklahoma City; J. W. Morgan, Kansas City, Mo.; E. Fitzgerald and J. Blankmeyer, Detroit; D. Chatkin, Toledo; I. McMahon and Jerome Jackson, Cincinnati; C. Olson and J. Schnitzer, Indianapolis; A. S. Davis, Pittsburg; W. Allen, Calgary; J. Allen, Toronto, and C. R. Plough and Joseph Hopp, Chicago.

Carl Laemmle left for New York on the 20th Century, Tuesday, May 20. It was a promising sign of reconciliation between the contending parties that Mr. Swanson and Mr. Cochrane remained to discuss the points at difference with the members of the Independent Exchange Company.

The conference lasted throughout the morning, and an evening session was held at 9 o'clock. While the exact wording of certain clauses of the contract had not been agreed upon, owing to the varying conditions in the several exchange districts, a closer understanding had been reached than ever before since the present difficulties arose, and it looked with regard to the wording of the contract as if all the points under discussion will be amicably adjusted before the end of the month.

Another session will be held between the members of the Independent Exchange Company, Wednesday morning. Joseph Hopp, secretary of the Independent Exchange Company, stated at this writing that if the spirit now prevailing is continued and is acted upon, that it will put an end to further politics and discussion of the matters at issue between the contending factions.

THE HOLY CITIES OF JAPAN.

An entirely new class of subject is this showing the holy cities of a land from which this class of picture has never before been prepared. Besides filling the title of the film, the pictures, which are tinted, give a more than usual insight into the inland beauties of the land of flowers, as also of the customs of the people free from foreign taint or suggestion, so often found in such pictures.

Nikko or Halsittio, The City of Temples—This is not an extraordinary picture of noble buildings, but a typical well built Japanese locality, probably above that which distinguishes a village. The Buddhas of Gammagofugi are a peculiar array of deities; a long line of them are arranged in a manner similar to so many "Billikens" and about as intelligent looking. The Temple of Nara, the cradle of the Japanese monarchy, is an exceedingly pretty piece of landscape, as a religious resort, natural simplicity seems to be its leading feature.

The Temple of Lanterns and the Sanctuary, serves at least the purpose of showing why Japan is the land of lanterns; the stone pillar kind are placed side by side like a balustrade; while the hanging iron-work variety are suspended in unlimited numbers. The nature of worship and the types of pilgrims are very realistic. Prayer Vendors give an idea of the fact that the poor pilgrims buy the prayers they cannot make, and merchandise is made of the very essence of religious service. Types of pilgrims gives the impressions that they are not of the wandering, weary, footsore variety; pitiable in their heathen ideas, yet very picturesque in their native colored dress. The educational value of this film lies in the fact that this Eclair production is illustrative of the scenic beauty of Japan, and descriptive of the Religious Habits and Customs of the People. W. H. GRAND THEATER, VALDOSTA, GA.

A very nice little moving picture theater in a little town is the Grand theater at Valdosta, Ga. The house is 90 feet long and 36 feet wide. Its seating capacity is three hundred. The music is furnished by a five-piece orchestra. As will be seen by the accompanying photograph, there are hand-painted designs over the box office windows and over the doors, which give the front a very pleasing and elegant appearance. Hand painted pictures and designs also decorate the interior. The admission prices are five and ten cents.

THE DEAN, YORK, NEB.

We publish herewith a photograph of the Dean theater at York, Neb. It can seat 430 persons, and has a stage big enough to accommodate a company of fifteen to twenty. The basement under the stage contains the heating plant. The house is nicely decorated, and it has one box on each side. The decorations are in plaster of Paris. When the managers, Messrs. Ballenger & Ballenger, ran the tornado and flood pictures they did a tremendous business, the people being packed outside for the width of the sidewalk and for about twenty or thirty feet on each side of the house. Business generally, however, is good, and the proprietors are very well satisfied with their house in a city with only 8,000 population.

"Mary Stuart"

Three-Reel Edison Adaptation from the Drama by Frederick Schiller.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A BEAUTIFUL spectacle, characterized by exhaustive attention to detail and splendid acting, this photodrama ranks with the best of its kind. The settings are admirably chosen; the Throne Room interior crowns the designer with glory, and the handling of those taking part in the large ensembles reflects great credit on the director. The costumes are among the most elaborate and becoming of any ever shown on the screen.

All the members of the Edison Company seem to be at their best, but the opportunity goes to the principals. Marc MacDermott's interpretation of the Earl of Leicester and Bigelow Cooper's of Sir Edward Mortimer are beyond compare, but the Mary Queen of Scots of Mary Fuller and the Queen Elizabeth of Miriam Nesbitt stand out like two exquisite cameos. Miss Nesbitt is almost too beautiful in this part. She gives the great Queen too much grace and charm for the expected role and not enough severe intellectuality—the patron saint of England's period of intellectual activity made illustrious by Shakespeare, Bacon, Ben Jonson, Spencer and Sidney was a commanding spirit of high mental attainments rather than pleasing in appearance, but I suppose Miriam N. cannot help being what she is.

Mary Fuller has never appeared to better advantage. Her natural loveliness is adequately framed and her acting will surprise her best friends. When she was a slip of a girl, her principal asset was a pair of dark eyes that could send a wireless thrill, but she has developed along safe and sane lines, preserving her natural endowment, gaining grace of movement with increased strength, and her recent work shows what is very rare in motion picture performance—pure spirituality of character interpretation. There has been some character-building going on within herself during her years of steady work.

The story of Mary Stuart is one of the few of its kind that might engage the sympathy of a modern audience, especially where the eyes of those in front receive all the appeal, and this telling of it is as good as any I have ever seen—it is superior in the above enumerated effects—but today's world of restless activity is peering into depths undreamed of by a majority of those engaged in producing moving pictures, into the nature of true political freedom, into new systems of living that transcend those of days gone by, into the emergence of a new type of human life, and the stage is struggling to give these expression. I hope that moving pictures are soon to lead and not to follow the stage in the relief of privations, the organization of happiness and the increase of social welfare.

The Edison Company is such a fine one, is capable of doing such good work as the public is ready and ripe to appreciate that I have high hopes for them—their trend is all right. What I have said all along about adaptations applies to this case as to nearly all others. A vast amount of pains and good taste have been applied to showing us a jealous woman making vile use of her power in killing another from motives of private vengeance. The same exhibition of splendid settings and splendid acting could be used to enforce a powerful motive affecting people of today to the greater advantage of all concerned, and it will be only a question of time when this will be done. Whatever the setting the photodrama of grand modern motive is bound to come.

PICTURES IN MALAYSIA.

There are fourteen picture shows in Malaysia using almost every European and American make, which are ordered from London or the manufacturers. Some of the companies buy the films outright, but most pictures are leased. Picture shows are exceedingly popular with all classes.

SELIG'S "CHANCE DAY" PICTURE.

Selig's topical special, entitled "Baseball's Greatest Spectacle—Frank Chance Day," which will be released during the present week, will show, in addition to the incidents and events of the Chance Day celebration, close up, specially posed views of all famous American League players, owners and managers. A battery of five Selig cameramen were on hand Saturday, May 17th, securing views of the principal events.

"The Governor's Double"

Two-Reel Patheplay.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

Of conspicuous merit in this production are some exquisite settings—they are all of a high order, both interiors and studio scenes—and the remarkable acting of Paul W. Panzer in the title role. The needful relation between drama and performer has never been better illustrated than in this case, where there is a startling disproportion between the exciting cause and the ultimate result. Panzer pulls the story through by sheer force of his native endowment. He is a capable actor who has lacked opportunity. He has probably demanded action and character in the parts he takes—that is pretty nearly what the audience demands in the visualized play—but has had to content himself very largely with action alone.

Scene from "The Governor's Double" (Patheplay).

As Governor of the State of New York—the capitol building at Albany is shown to be the scene of his activities—he is both dignified and intellectual, radiating force in the difficult impersonation. As the "double who undid" the governor, a convict pardoned by the executive, he is equally at home. He faces himself under artful double exposure and depends upon his skill rather than his makeup to indicate the character contrasts. He makes it plain in the last scene, when the Governor's fiance is about to wed the ex-convict that clothes do not make the man, however much they may have to do with the gentler sex. When face to face, the intellectual force of the real governor in the stripes and the low bluff of the pretender are set forth in masterly style.

Scene from "The Governor's Double" (Patheplay).

The settings for the church wedding in the last scenes reflect high credit upon their designer. There is something very inspiring in the delightful proportions of such a beautiful picture, something that almost defies analysis. It is difficult for any of us to define the pleasurable sensations aroused by what conforms to our standard of excellence. I suppose one of the greatest charms of beauty lies hidden in its rare expression, another in the insistent demand for perfection that impels us all towards improvement of ourselves and others—especially others. Beauty in the picture plays is especially attractive to those who have little of it in their daily grind, who go to the exhibitions for rest and for relief from strain. Mr. Fred Wright has exquisitely adorned all he was given to work upon.

The play itself is too much of a strain upon credulity to deserve the intelligent pains taken with it. We are asked to swallow too much. The governor has himself arrested for burglary in order to investigate prison conditions and finds himself, after being sentenced for five years, in a cell with a man whom he has just pardoned, who looks exactly like him, and he fails to notice the remarkable resemblance. When the pardoned convict visits the Capitol, he is mistaken for the Governor and assumes the latter's place. In addition to these severe strains, we are compelled to gulp hard when the girl about to marry him fall's on the neck of the ex-convict. How the latter manages the thousand and one details of his position and affixes his signature to important documents is left entirely to the imagination.

There are some high moments in the play, notably that of the sudden death of the judge, who was in the secret of the imprisonment, at the very instant he was drawing up a release, but screen stories do not go over that are seriously at fault in logic of construction. The ordinary spectator may not be able to give a reason for his disappointment in them, but he realizes that something is wrong. The play was aimed higher than it hit.

MISS MAY ABBEY.

The above picture serves to introduce a new and most pleasing personality, Miss May Abbey, who is now playing leads in Edison pictures, the particular scene portrait being from "The Evil Thereof," one of the soon-to-be-released Edison productions. Miss Abbey has made a decided hit. She has had wide experience as an actress in the legitimate, and brings to the pictures not only the result of that training, but also a natural bent toward expressive pantomime.

REJOINS THANHOUSER AFTER RECORD TRIP.

Photographer Carl Gregory, who made a 9-500-mile trip through the Western States for scenic subjects for the Majestic Company, is back at New Rochelle in his position as senior cameraman of Thanhouser Film Corporation. Due to his success in commissions of a similar nature, Gregory was "loaned" for the trip, which brought his camera into action in the States of Montana, Wyoming, Oregon, California, Arizona, New Mexico and Colorado. His views of "Life Among the Navajos," said to be intimate and unusual, are issued Tuesday, May 27th, by Majestic.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

F. O. NIELSON, proprietor of the Parkway Theater, N. Clark and Diversey Blvd., this city, had a pleasant surprise Thursday evening, May 16th. Unknown to him the first anniversary day of the opening of the Parkway had come around; but although he had overlooked the fact, his loyal employees had not. Two magnificent bouquets, each containing 200 red roses and 200 white carnations, were presented Mrs. Nielsen and himself, just before the curtain rose on the first picture presented. A printed letter, containing the following expressions of good will, accompanied the flowers:

"Here's to the Parkway Theater! May the succeeding years be as prosperous as the past one has been under the excellent management of Mr. Nielsen. We, the employees of the Parkway Theater, of which we are justly proud, wish to present Mr. and Mrs. Nielson with a little token as a reminder of the first anniversary of the opening of the Parkway Theater, and, to show our appreciation of your courtesy and kindness extended to us during the year, we have selected what we thought were the most beautiful symbols of love and esteem—carnations and roses."

The note was signed by: Monte A. Gloss, operator; Mrs. Inez L. Slusser, organist; Miss Olive Bergeron, Pianiste; Mrs. M. Gloss, cashier, Stevens Theater (also owned by Mr. Nielsen); Jos. J. Steffen, head usher, and Chas. McKiel, fire guard.

After the closing of the theater, Mr. and Mrs. Nielsen were escorted by the above named to the Winona restaurant, where an elaborate supper had already been arranged in their honor. It was no tame affair, as the viands were most appetizing, and Mumm's extra dry, sparkling Burgundy and liqueurs were added to aid digestion.

Rothapfel's Presentations Commended.

S. L. Rothapfel, director of presentations at Saxe's Lyric, Minneapolis, is held in high esteem by all classes of theater goers for the art and consistent treatment bestowed on every subject of his programs. All the professions are well represented at every offering made by the Lyric. The governor is a regular attendant and he is always accompanied by members of his family. University professors are frequent visitors at the Lyric and have always a kind word to signify their appreciation. The following letter from the Rev. Ulysses S. Villars, pastor of the Prospect Park Methodist Episcopal Church, will serve to show the esteem in which Mr. Rothapfel is held by the clergy:

"I must ask your pardon for tardiness in acknowledging your courtesy in giving me the opportunity of seeing 'From the Manger to the Cross,' at the private presentation last Tuesday. As you know, we were enthusiastic over the 'Passion Play,' but to my mind there is no comparison to be made between the two. I have great confidence in your judgment and 'good taste,' but I confess I was not prepared for such a reverent, sympathetic and appreciative presentation of the life of Our Savior as is shown in these pictures. I wish I could be as sure of the good effect of the sermons we preach as I am of this remarkable production. As I have opportunity I am urging my friends to attend, for all, clergy or laity, must be impressed and inspired by it. It is the most remarkable production of the kind I have ever seen.

"You know my opinion of the Lyric and your ideals in its management, and I feel that you have added greatly to the debt the people of this city owe you in presenting 'From the Manger to the Cross.' I only hope their appreciation will be substantially expressed.

"Please accept this expression, utterly inadequate, of my cordial sympathy with your methods and the sincere hope for success of your enterprise."

Chicago Film Brevities.

Arthur Mackley, one of Essanay's Western producers, stopped over in this city last week on his way to visit his old home in Scotland. Mr. Mackley attended the regular private exhibition for exhibitors, at the Essanay exhibition room, First National Bank Building, Monday, May 19th, and received a big hand from those present. He will spend several weeks at the old home in Scotland.

On the week of May 12th, the Studebaker Theater was added to the list of those of the large houses showing moving pictures. During that week the Sarah Bernhardt film, "Adrienne Lecouvreur," and M. Mounet-Sully in the Greek tragedy, "Oedipus Rex," formed the program.

R. C. MacMullen, formerly owner of the Colonial Theater, Joliet, Ill., was in the city last week. That theater is now owned by the Colonial Photoplay Theater Co., of which Mr. MacMullen is president and manager, and F. L. Scheidt, secretary and manager. The Colonial was remodeled recently, and now seats 500 people instead of 275 as formerly. "The Prisoner of Zenda" was shown at this house, May 14th and 15th to the largest and most fashionable audiences yet seen there.

Julius Bernheim, of the Laemmle Film Service, this city, is evidently quite a baseball fan. He advises me that the first game between the Laemmle Film Service and the General Film Co., took place recently at 47th and Bryant Ave., south. Both teams were in good form, and each were certain of beating the other. After the first two innings, however, it could be easily seen that the Independents had the best of it. The game ended with a score of 14 to 6, in favor of the Lake street boys. Fred S. Meyer, manager of the Laemmle Film Service, and H. W. Stubbins, of the General Film Co., are now negotiating for a return match, which will take place in the near future. Mr. Bernheim also sends me the score of the last match, but there is no space for it. This is not a sporting journal.

Last November the Iliad Amusement Co., of Kansas City, Mo., showed an Independent film at their theater, Linwood Blvd., and Troost Ave. For this its license was cancelled by the Motion Picture Patents Co. Recently an agreement was reached by which the theater has resumed the service of the General Film Co., in the Broadmour, Iliad and the open air theaters at 31st St., and Troost Ave.

RITCHEY ON THE POSTER PROBLEM.

In an effort to help the moving picture exhibitor compete successfully with the local theater in the attractiveness of his lobby display, Manager J. V. Ritchey, of the Reliance, is paying particular attention to the quality and artistic value of the "paper" bearing the Reliance oval. Manager Ritchey, who was an exhibitor on a large scale before he entered the producing field, is particularly anxious to obtain posters that are as far removed from the old "ten, twent, thirt" style of melodrama paper as Lillian Russell is from "The Cherry Sisters." "The idea of advertising a high-class picture production equal to 'Ben Hur,' with posters smacking of 'Nellie, the Beautiful Subway Guard,' is all wrong," says Manager Ritchey. "If the lobby display of the average picture theater was equal to the class of picture productions presented on its screen, there would be no ground for argument. The Reliance puts itself on record as a believer in high-class, artistic posters, worthy of the films they advertise and invites criticism and suggestions from the men who use them. No trouble or expense will be spared to obtain posters equal to those used by the greatest Broadway stars and I firmly believe that any effort in this line will benefit the moving picture art as a whole to a greater extent than most people seem to realize."

CORRECTIONS.

On page 844 of last week's issue the synopsis of "A Romance of the Rails" was given as an Eclair. This is an error, as the subject is a Frontier production. There was also an error in the Mutual Weekly synopses, which are to be found on page 852 of last issue. The line bearing the name "Mutual Weekly No. 20," which should have read right after the last item in "Mutual Weekly No. 19," reading—"Los Angeles, Cal., Feeding Young Alligators," was erroneously omitted. A synopsis of "Mutual Weekly No. 20" is printed elsewhere in this issue.

AMERICAN MAKES TWO-REEL FRENCH COSTUME PLAY.

Something distinctly out of the ordinary is promised by The American Film Mfg. Co., in a two-reel French costume play soon to be released. Jack Kerrigan in the costume of a French cavalier is quite the Jack Kerrigan of the sombrero and chaps, yet quite another person, too. Admirers of the handsome picture idol will be delighted with the new Kerrigan.

The Man in the White Cloak

Great Northern Feature.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

MOVING pictures afford the most effective medium of presenting a visualized story in which a ghost plays one of the leading roles. When "The Man in the White Cloak" steps from the ancestral portrait of an old castle to relieve the sharp necessities of his descendents in the flesh, Lady Hamilton and her only daughter Mabel, last of a noble race, he reveals a secret that he created long generations before, and he does it in a way that will make most of the spectators in the little shows wish that their ancestors had been as wise in their generations.

Scene from "The Man In the White Cloak."

The two helpless ladies find themselves in sore straits at a time when creditor's are pressing them hard, and the younger sends for her fiance, an intelligent young physician. He applies himself to the restoration of the mother's health—she is prostrated over the prospect of having the ancestral castle sold over head to satisfy clamorous money-lenders—but he is unable to do more than this—the people of the neighborhood have been so abnormally healthy that his practice is far from lucrative. A young lawyer forming the third side of the triangle, of which the doctor is one and the young lady an attractive hypotenuse, proposes to relieve the situation if Mabel will be his wife, but she refuses to be bought and paid for.

Scene from "The Man In the White Cloak."

This plot is appropriately set amid venerable surroundings and is made interesting when the ghost, "The Man in the White Cloak," his shadow, not his substance, "of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless," begins to play his part. When the creditors of Lady Hamilton and her daughter Mabel are led by the latter's rejected suitor to foreclose and sell the art accumulations of ages, ancestral portraits included, the young physician is visited by the disembodied spirit of one illustrious progenitor of the noble line, none other than "The Man in the White Cloak," and guided to a secluded spot. He is there instructed to unearth a hidden treasure. The young doctor digs down as never before. He uncovers a secret passageway and descends into the bowels of the earth. He has, however, been seen by the rejected suitor, the attorney, and it becomes plain that his subterranean pathway is not to be one of roses.

Hero and villain descend a mouldy staircase to gloomy depths below, hero carrying a lantern and villain following stealthily. Hero pushes in a spring door, fastens it open and passes on to a vaulted chamber containing a casket of jewels. Villain stumbles over the fastening, and the door closes, imprisoning both. The two men enter upon a fierce struggle. Over their heads an auction sale of the fine old property is going on, and Mabel is wandering in search of her lover. The fight between the doctor and the lawyer—admirable choice of profession for hero and villain—carries them to a party-wall between romance and reality—a mere structure of brick and stone separates them from a throng assembled in the Hall of Portraits.

Mabel grows weary in her search, leans her head against the wall and hears the sounds of struggle. She halts the sale and sets the crowd to opening sufficient space in the wall for the contestants to crawl through. High point of truth in the story is where the lawyer hangs on to the treasure box, but he is beaten in the end, and a happy conclusion puts an end to the tremendous suspense.

JACK KERRIGAN AND VIVIAN RICH IN AEROPLANE FLIGHT.

Jack Kerrigan and Miss Vivian Rich had a novel ride in an aeroplane at Ventura, Cal., last week. The flight occured in connection with the making of a single reel subject. The famous Gilpatrick exhibition of flying at Ventura was utilized. This was Kerrigan's first flight.

THOMAS COMERFORD JOINS ESSANAY COMPANY.

Thomas Comerford, well known in motion pictures for his ability to handle the different characters assigned him, has joined the Essanay Eastern Stock Company. Mr. Comerford, prior to his engagement with another film manufacturing company, played in Lincoln J. Carter productions for over a quarter of a century.

Music for the Picture

BY CLARENCE E. SINN

THROUGH courtesy of Mr. E. C. Zane, of the Bijou Dream Theater, Chicago, I offer the following musical suggestions for the two-reel Ambrosio feature film:

CHILD LABOR TRAFFIC.

Part One.

1. "Sympathy Waltz" (by Mezzacappo) until title: "The Wicked Guardian, etc."
2. Waltz Lento until: "The Plot."
3. Short waltz or allegretto (one scene); an accordeon is being played in this scene by street musician. Sound effect can be introduced ad lib. At change of scene:
4. "Dream of the Flowers" (Chas. Cohen-Sam Fox), until she writes letter.
5. "Chiffon" (From suite "My Lady's Boudoir"—Witmark), until Andrea meets her.
6. "In the Shadows" (Finck) until title: "Under the Pretense of Seeking Employment."
7. Semi-mysterious until: "On the Track."
8. "La Rose" (Emil Ascher) until end of reel.

Part Two.

1. "Dream of the Flowers" until: "A Lesson in Misery."
2. Plaintive till Andrea enters supper room.
3. Agitato; pp. at first and crescendo for struggle until change of scene.
4. Short waltz until child is seen a prisoner.
5. Long "hurry" music. I used "Narcissus Overture," by Schleppegrel, beginning at the Allegro moderato and repeating this movement until she receives telegram; then:
6. "Dawn of Love" (by Theo. Bendix) until last scene.
7. Four bars of Wedding March to finish.

THE LADY AND THE MOUSE (Biograph).

1. "Lilacs" (Feist) until title: "Boredom and Inefficiency."
2. "Bees" Novelette (Remick) until: "On the Road."
3. Any slow Reverie until title: "More Readjusting."
4. "The Mouse and the Clock" (Whitney-Witmark) until: "A Change in Climate."
5. Pathetic music (long) until: "Later."
6. "Pansies" (Bendix) or any waltz lento until: "The Change In Climate."
7. Waltz until end of reel.

AN EXCITING HONEYMOON (Pathe).

Part One.

1. "Wedding Glide" until title: "We Want You To Put On Lady Rowley's Robe."
2. "Malinda" (Remick) until drinking scene.
4. Agitato pp. and mf. until: "An Inveterate Gambler."
5. "Apple Blossoms" (Kathleen Roberts) until: "We'uns Want to be Quality Folks."
6. "Kiss-Me-Quick" (Novelette), by Emil Isenman, pub. by Fischer, until title: "Fleeced."
7. Semi-mysterious until he drops his head on table.
8. "Simple Aveu" until: "Goree Remembers Too Late, etc."
9. Semi-mysterious until: "Let Me Ride Ahead."
10. Agitato until shot.
11. Plaintive until: "Epilogue."
12. Religioso until finish.

THE COURAGE OF A SOLDIER (Bison).

Part One.

1. Indian characteristic music until: "The Peaceful Hopis Appeal."
2. March until change of scene.
3. "Love's Dream After the Ball" (Czibulka) after introduction. For one scene.
4. Same march as No. 2, until Indians go out of gate.
5. "Spring Dreams" (pub. by Feist) until council scene.
6. "Oy-an-ee-tah" (Indian song from "It Happened in Nordland," by V. Herbert) until all in fort.
7. March until treaty is shown.
1. "I'd Like To Go On a Honeymoon" (from "The Red Rose," by Bowers) until title: "At Last We Are Alone."
2. "All Alone" until: "Go 'way Man, etc."
3. "One Drink More" (one scene), when colored woman powders her face.
4. "Oh, You Beautiful Doll" (Chorus) once through.
5. "Honeymoon Song from Honeymoon Trail." When Lord Rowley gets into auto.
6. "Goodbye, Everybody," until second auto drives on.
7. Galop or lively march until they walk up gang-way to boat.
8. "Goodbye, Everybody," until boat is seen moving out.
9. "On the Mississippi" until end of reel (lively).

Part Two.

3. Chorus of "Which He Didn't Expect from a Lady" (from "Peggy," by Stuart).
4. "Is There Anything Else That I Can Do for You" (Remick).
5. Lively music throughout the picture.

This picture is a bright, rollicking comedy, and the more lively and "snappy" your music, the better. Popular stuff preferred.

A SPLENDID SCAPEGRACE (Edison).

1. Allegro (4th movement) of "Morning, Noon and Night" overture by Suppe. Subdued agitato for one scene.
2. Any popular intermezzo until title: "Selling the House of His Forefathers."

10. Sentimental until: "The Chief Divides His Forces."
11. Several scenes of hurry and agitato music; when Chaplain lays powder train, softly till explosion—ff. until: "Seeing the Fort Attacked."
12. March, one scene.
13. Hurry p. and f. Can alternate marches with agitato when cavalrymen seen riding. When army rides into fort.
14. March. When Lieutenant enters.
15. Pathetic until end of reel.

DANCING ON THE SKY-LINE OF NEW YORK.

While photographing a cabaret show in Kinemacolor on the roof of a ten-story building, the Samarin troupe of Russian dancers were posed on the three-foot parapet, 175 feet above Seventh Avenue, with only the spires of the Cathedral and the blue sky as a background. After the dancers had been taken in such steps and poses as were suitable to their precarious footing, Frantz, the acrobat of the troupe, volunteered to "do some stunts." There, on the celebrated "Skyline of New York," he did back-somersaults, hand-springs and hair-raising pirouettes.

"Her Big Story" (American)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

ADAPTED from Richard Washburn Child's magazine story. "Her Big Story" has been cleverly produced by the No. 1 company of the American. In this effort the American photoplayers have invaded the sacred precincts of the "Fourth Estate" without a tremor, and, to their credit, it must be said that they have succeeded in portraying the scenes in a country city editor's office, during rush hours, with considerable fidelity. That city editor chap, as drawn by W. T. Tedmarsh, is no slouch. He is a martinet, and he must be, whether dealing with a fair utility girl, whose coffee and sinkers depend on space writing, or with the cub reporters who pound out copy with the regularity of stone breakers. The fair space writer, of about nineteen summers, has the willful tendency at times to go over the city editor's head to the managing editor; and the latter—sadly must he be credited with the weakness—breaks occasionally all the canons of his caste by indulgence in calf-like looks and in undisciplined osculations. All of which shortcomings were unknown to the city editor and contributed much to the sum of his tribulations.

Scene from "Her Big Story" (American).

Warren Kerrigan carries the part of this particular managing editor with natural grace and aptitude. His work affords another example of his ability to figure prominently in a story of dramatic merit and requirements. Miss Charlotte Burton, who has been allotted the character of Beatrice Nevin, the space writer on the Union, is a young lady of promise in the photodramatic field. From what I learn she sinks her personality most realistically in her characterization of a part; for Jack Richardson nursed a badly bruised forehead for several days, as the result of the impact of that statuette, thrown in his face, point-blank, when he posed as the mayor of the country city and had just been bribed by the "invisible boss," whom the space girl was tracking for her big scoop. Jack Richardson impersonates the mayor well; but his non-observance of good manners, by using a tooth pick while conversing with the banker, or invisible boss, shows a lapse for which there can be no excuse. George Periolat, always consistent in his multiform character parts, impersonates the "invisible boss" and banker with fine conception.

One cannot fail to notice the good quality photography of the interior scenes throughout this film, as well as the clear well defined exterior views. The American's photography, while praiseworthy heretofore, shows a distinct advance of late.

Beatrice Nevin is a space writer on the Union. This paper is owned by a banker who pulls all the political strings in the country town. Beatrice is anxious to get an assignment covering the exposure of this "invisible boss," whom only a few can identify. She shadows the mayor of the city and traces him to the home of George Huestis, the rich banker. Learning that the mayor will make another call on the banker the day following, Beatrice gains admission to the house a short time before the mayor arrives and hides behind a curtain in the room where the banker and the mayor meet. There she witnesses the bribery of the mayor by the banker. A slight noise made by Beatrice leads to her discovery; but she succeeds in fleeing from the room with proofs of the mayor's duplicity and of the banker's bribe-giving.

She writes the story and gives it to the city editor, who immediately takes it to the managing editor. The latter is the only one on the Union's staff who knows that the owner of the paper and the rich banker are one and the same. "The story must be killed," he says to the city editor. That worthy thinks it a crime. Remembering the blow that such a step will mean to Beatrice, whom he loves, the managing editor instructs his subordinate to give the story to the rival newspaper. Then he resigns his position and calls on Beatrice to plead his love case.

"Her Big Story" will be released May 31.

"THE WISHING SEAT" (American).

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

AN engaging little comedy, very prettily told, will be released by the American, June 5, under the title "The Wishing Seat." Miss Pauline Bush and Warren Kerrigan take the leading parts most acceptably, and that clever actress, Miss Louise Lester, and the reliable George Periolat appear in the character parts.

There are several beautiful exterior views in this film and the photography is of fine quality.

A young lady author entertains at her charming country residence. She invites, in pairs, a long list of love sick young people, and to appease Mother Grundy she has also on her list of guests an elderly couple, who serve in the capacity of chaperones. The young people have the time of their lives, and every nook and arbor of the delightful country seat has its pair of spooning lovers. But the hostess is not among these happy ones. She chances to be loverless, and she seeks the wishing seat, hewn out of the solid rock, where she wishes for "a nice man."

Scene from "The Wishing Seat" (American).

Now fate had ordered that a young artist, handsome and stalwart, at this very time, was busy at work on the hill top overlooking this wishing seat. And it also happened that he accidentally lost his balance and plowed down the ascent head foremost, crashing through the brush that concealed the wishing seat and landing beside the startled young lady. Henceforth, during the stay of the visitors, another pair of spooning lovers was added to the former list. The discovery of the secret of the hostess is very amusingly shown in the pictures, and the smiles reflected there will doubtless be seen on many thousands of faces as the scene is thrown on the screen.

S. S. HUTCHINSON RETURNS TO COAST STUDIO.

S. S. Hutchinson, president of The American Film Mfg. Co., returned to the Santa Barbara producing headquarters after a brief stay in Chicago. Mr. Hutchinson expects to spend considerable time in California this summer, directing the production of some coming two and three reel features.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

THE airdome managers have their men at work preparing for the summer season. The few warm days we had recently, on one of which the thermometer indicated 87 in the shade, caused a belief that there would be an early opening for these places, but the hopes have been dispelled and it is doubtful that open-air business can be done in less than three or four weeks hence, excepting, of course, places that can be converted by the manipulation of roofs and sides, and there are not many of them. It is a certainty that should provisions be made by the grace of the Board of Aldermen for the increased seating capacity of the smaller houses the managers will include in their alterations arrangements whereby the houses may be converted to meet the freaks of the weather. It is figured that they will be better able to hold business than they can with artificial means of ventilation and the "squatters" on lots who pick up the dimes during the summer and flit away in the fall will be reduced considerably in number. Complaint is not made against the regular airdomes that are operated by men who understand the business and are obliged to close their winter houses. The opposition is aimed at the speculators who spend little in converting lots and injure the business by giving the people inferior pictures.

A case in point is that of three young men employed in brokers' offices. A relative of one owns a lot situated in a locality where several picture houses are doing good business and some of them are equipped with artificial ventilation for the summer season. The combined capital of the trio will provide for the fencing, flooring, etc., of the place and give a seating capacity of over 2,200. The seats and projecting outfit have been arranged for on a cheap rental basis and the film service is to be secured as near the minimum as possible. The only person having any knowledge of the business will be the operator. As the clerks hold positions that enable them to leave their offices early every day during the summer, particularly on Saturdays, they will assume charge of the place, even to the box office and the piano. Relatives will substitute for them in case of delayed arrival. "You see," said one of them, "we fit in nicely. All of us have a business training and can handle the box office to a nicety, and Jim, here, is a terror at the piano. I am a good baritone and occasionally can run in some good stuff. We have watched all these picture houses closely and know they are making money, and we can get a good piece of that with a place where people can sit comfortably in the open air and be entertained at a small price. No, we will not build a theater on the lot. Apartment houses are going up in the fall and we are going to make what we can while the lot is vacant."

Well, aside from the regulations governing the establishment and management of the place, there is no law to prevent them from doing so, but it is a bitter pill for the regulars in the neighborhood—the men who depend upon their places as a means of livelihood. And yet exhibitors are charged with being dogs in mangers when they cry out against such undertakings.

What a change there is in the line of gossip along the White Way these days! Heretofore the professional people, when discussing the closing of the regular theaters and the outlook for the next season, have taken delight in telling their fellow thespians of the gilt-edged contracts in hand, or at their option. Little of that now. An actor was heard remarking: "This picture game has my goat. It has put a crimp in all my calculations. I don't know whether next season is to be the stage or the studio for me. When I asked Mr. ——— about the prospects for next season he told me to be patient; that the policy of the house had not been decided upon."

That is quite true. It was learned last week that one of the largest theatrical syndicates in the city will quote rental on any house it owns for a bonafide motion picture undertaking and, with but one or two exceptions, all the houses may be leased. This was supplemented by a well authenticated statement that if the people who have been sounding the situation do not take definite action soon it is more than probable that the syndicate will convert some of its places into photoplay houses. One member of the syndicate said less than two weeks ago, "I have been convinced for some time that the motion pictures are steadily making inroads on our territory. I combatted the idea for quite a while, but you cannot get away from the fact. Why, the higher class of people are becoming almost picture crazy. Look at the Astor Theater! Actually packing them in with a continuous run of a feature picture. True, it is exceptional in respect to magnitude of production and length, but other big picture theaters are filling the seats when we cannot drag the people in. No, we have not decided to become directly identified with the photoplay, but we have the project under serious consideration. Much depends upon pending overtures."

Another member of the syndicate said: "A critic stated editorially the other day that one of the greatest dangers to dramatic art in New York is the city's over-supply of theaters, which is constantly increasing. It debases the standard of the stage and tempts managers to become merely gamblers with public whim. That is what we all say. There is but one outlet, and that is to convert some of the houses to the picture scheme and retain others for the preservation of dramatic art in its old time form. It is bound to come. The indications are that many changes will take place next fall, perhaps earlier. Stick a pin in this. When the larger theaters are transformed they will not become houses like those generally known as picture theaters. The managers will conduct them on a show-man basis. By that I mean pictures will not be changed every day, or three days, or even every week. Strong features will be selected for a continuous run. I feel satisfied that motion picture studios can turn out subjects that will run as long as six months if properly handled. I have in mind a number of plays that had runs of a year, and even two years, in this city, and I cannot see why they could not be made attractions for months in picture form. My confidence in this is strengthened by a comparison of the expense entailed in stage productions with the cost of the picture productions."

Continuous exhibition of feature films as outlined by the latter manager was taken up with a film manufacturer with a view to ascertaining his impressions on the effect such a policy would have upon his end of the business. He was optimistic. "I think the idea a good one," said he. "We film manufacturers have been doing missionary work against great odds for years and it is very gratifying to find it bearing fruit. All such ventures tend to popularize the photoplays and we certainly cannot object to that. The greater the hits by photoplays on Broadway the more extensive and impressive becomes the advertising of photoplays throughout the country. And this does not stop at any particular line of plays. It benefits the business as a whole. There are still many people in all cities and towns who have not yet become settled in the opinion that the photoplay is a real, legitimate form of entertainment. They go to see them, but have a feeling that something is lacking. When it becomes heralded through the States that the people are flocking to see photoplays in the great New York theaters this—well, I might call it, feeling of dignity will relax, and the skeptics will become regular patrons."

"But will not the productions be curtailed and your source of revenue correspondingly decreased?"

"No. The scheme proposed will bring into the field additional outlets that will be in a class by themselves. They will not be competitors of the regular photoplay houses. To the contrary, they will bring them new patrons and therefore justify the output. I would qualify my answer as to the effect upon production, however, by saying that the new scheme will be a most important step towards putting inferior films off the market and leaving it to the much talked-of 'survival of the fittest.' The advancement of photoplay art required for the big houses will necessitate a corresponding advancement for the benefit of the smaller houses. Quality and character must follow to retain the newcomers."

"HIAWATHA" IN OHIO.

The Fort Defiance Feature Film Company, of Defiance, Ohio, have procured the exclusive Ohio rights for exhibiting "Hiawatha." Already a heavy demand for bookings has been received and the success of the out-of-door play in this State promises to be repeated in the picture production.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Things We Like.

THERE are several things that we like about the programs of the Princess Theater, Henderson, N. C. As Manager S. S. Henderson says, there is room for improvement—there always is—but he has a way of talking that carries conviction. For example, take this:

> MR. PARTICULAR MAN:
> We want your confidence. We cannot get it unless we show you, and that is what we will illustrate every day you visit the PRINCESS. We will give a private performance any time during the day for the particular man or woman who has never visited a photoplay.

We do not imagine that many persons will ask for a special performance, but we do believe that many who might not otherwise be attracted would regard that offer as convincing without asking its fulfillment. Were we running a house we should be glad did someone take us up on this proposition, for every time it happened we should have the best sort of a booster.

Another good line is:

> IF "STEVENSON SAYS SO"
> and you find it different
> GET YOUR MONEY BACK.

We constantly preach time, place and cost. Possibly the place does not matter here, but the program carries this definite information:

> PRINCESS PERFECT PICTURES
> THE TIME WE ARE SHOWING:
> Matinee..........2 to 5:30 P. M.
> Night..........7:30 to 10:30
> THE ADMISSION WE CHARGE:
> Adults..........10 cents
> Children under 12..........5 cents
> THE PICTURES WE SHOW
> are the best in the world. We use "Licensed" films, the best, because it takes money to produce the best.
> THE PATRONAGE WE WANT:
> Ladies, Gentlemen and Children. Others must conduct themselves as such or the price of admission will be returned to them and they will be asked to vacate.

That last may seem a bit strenuous to some exhibitors, but the Southern manager knows that it is not easy to get the better people without assuring order and the people most likely to have their feelings hurt are the ones least desired—since a choice must be made.

Now for the Faults.

The program is long and narrow, four inches by nine, and has plenty of space for the advertising—of which there is plenty—as well as the program. But the program space is not always used to the best advantage. Some stories are fully described and others passed over with bare mention. "The Belle of North Wales" is merely "A story produced in North Wales by the Kalem Company." Surely the fact that the story was produced in North Wales is worthy of more than passing mention when there is all sorts of white space in the program division. On the other hand "The Minister's Temptation" gets nine lines of descriptive matter, though from an advertising viewpoint the Kalem story is more important. Unless all subjects are treated alike and given a certain number of lines, the greater attention should be given the stories best worth bragging about. It will pay Mr. Stevenson and any other manager, to get some sort of temporary index that will last until the quarterly index is published in the last issue for March, June, September and December. Primarily, the purpose of the program is to advertise the coming attractions and too much care cannot be given to making the announcement attractive. Mr. Stevenson cuts the program off top and bottom with three point rule. Now, if he will run the same for the side rule, he will have an even better arrangement, keeping the ads in the one point rule he now uses.

But three issues have been published and they are excellent for starters. The whole issue suggests a desire to cater to the comfort of the patrons and it is convincingly stated. Mr. Stevenson does so well in this direction that we would like to see him give more time in preparing the program proper. He has promised to send more of the issues and we hope that he does.

We Welcome Mr. Arnold.

S. A. Arnold, of the Lyric Theater and Airdome, Mena, Arkansas, was just dozing. Mr. Arnold writes:

> Inclosed you will find small throw-away that I have used which is a copy of an item that I ran as news in our daily.
> Personally, I am opposed to the giving away of prizes and never make use of them, but sometimes in order to get new business it is necessary to offer some inducements and this scheme is starting off O. K. and promises to pay for the car with the new business I am getting.
> In giving this prize I am advised by my attorney that it is not a violation of the laws, as there is no drawing so it can't be considered a lottery.
> I expect to open my airdome within the next few weeks and will send you then some of the ways I expect to advertise it. One thing I can promise you in advance in my airdome, there will be no cry of "peanuts, candy, five a bag," etc. My theater is a place of amusement and will be conducted as such, where I will see that the people are entertained and not annoyed.

Mr. Arnold's house seats 600 and the airdome 1,000 and he is less in need of outside revenue than the man with the 300 house, but he is right in his stand against vending through the audience. It is a nuisance even when it is permitted only between films. The auto scheme is entirely out of the lottery class, being one of those voting contest schemes. We show the copy and the coupon.

> LYRIC WILL GIVE AWAY $1,000 AUTO.
> COUPONS WILL BE ISSUED BEGINNING MONDAY NIGHT, APRIL 28, AND FINAL AWARD WILL BE MADE JUNE 4—THE RULES.
> The Lyric Theater has arranged to give away, on June 4, a $1,000 Flanders automobile, this fine gift to go to the one who holds on the latter date the largest number of coupons.
> Beginning Monday night, April 28, with each adult ticket bought there will be given one coupon, and to the individual who on June 4 has the largest number of these coupons will be given the automobile. These coupons will be in different colors for each week, and those secured by the contestants each week must be turned in at the box office on the Monday night following, otherwise they will not be counted. These coupons must be tied in neat package or placed in a sealed envelope, the package or envelope bearing the name of contestant and number of coupons enclosed. These will be turned over to a committee of three business men, who will verify the count and credit each contestant with the correct number turned in.
> Positively no announcements will be made of the number to the credit of any contestant until the day of award, and no one will be allowed to solicit coupons in or near the theater.
> CONTEST STARTS TONIGHT!

"Visit New York."

A late Cameraphone Bulletin has a capital catchline for the series of New York City pictures the Kalem Company is now using on the ends of its comedy reels. To the man out of town "New York" has a magic sound and this headline attracts attention to good copy:

> VISIT NEW YORK WITH US ON MONDAY.
> The Kalem Company has a man who enjoys prowling around New York City with a camera and making pictures of anything or anyone that is a little bit out of the ordinary. Two of these films have been marked up for us on Monday. You may be quite well acquainted with your New York, but we really think you will see something new in these pictures.

Just for that matter the Kalem New York stuff is new to most New York people.

Program Stuff.

And talking of programs, here's a rather good one for the theater papers. It is contributed by Melville M. Ross, of Newark, but happened at the Princess, Ashland, Ohio. A fan had taken a friend who had never seen pictures to the performance at the Princess, and as they were leaving the theater the novice turned to her friend: "Do all these players remain in Ashland over night, or will they have to take a night train?"

It taxes the imagination a trifle but Mr. Ross says it's a true story.

Display Might be Better.

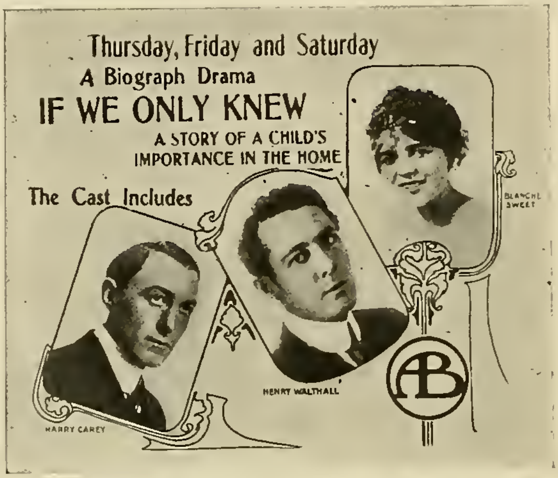
John B. Ashton, of the Princess and Ellen Theaters, Provo, Utah, sends in the joint program used for the two houses, the Princess programs being on the left hand pages and the Ellen on the right. It is eight pages and colored cover with two red and black inks. The front is attractively done, though a stronger and brighter red might have been used, but the advertising in the white pages shows up better than the programs. We think that as a rule the across page make up, with the advertisements heavily ruled off from the program, is a better arrangement than the up and down column. Better still, would have been the two programs on the right hand pages and the advertising on the left, though this last is open to the objection that there is nothing to carry the eye over to the left hand pages. If we had to use the straight column make up we would box in each title with three point rule to make it stand out. A little talk with the printer will bring better results with very little additional cost or none at all.

It is not enough to send your copy to the printer. You'll have to follow it up and keep after him until some good make-up is evolved. Mr. Ashton knows what's what, as his cover page shows. The rest is a matter of time and experiment. We should like to see at least one page devoted to chat of films and film players. This should be in eight point or seven point on an eight point slug or body.

The great trouble with the program as it stands is that the titles of the releases are too small to fight the larger type used in the advertisements. An immediate improvement can be made by throwing the Princess programs to the left, to the outer column, or bringing the Ellen programs in so that they stand beside those of the Princess.

Real Slides.

Rex W. Midgley, of the Liberty Theater, Salt Lake City, Utah, sends in a wrinkle that should appeal to those who want the best. This takes a little time and trouble, but the result is so far superior to the usual lettered slide that it's worth the trouble and more to the man who doesn't like the makeshift and who can afford better, not that this idea is so tremendously expensive, at that. We show a cut that does not do justice to the original which is a photographic print from a slide made from the recent Biograph player poster, with some type lines and a trade mark from the bulletin and a few original type lines.



Mr. Midgley is fortunate in having his printer and slide man in the same person, and this helps much in making up effective combinations, but even where the printer and the slide maker are in different establishments effective results can be had. Mr. Midgley's slides cost him but sixty cents each—plus brains.

The Stencils.

An operator in New York, who is also a sign painter, offers to solve the stencil problems for the Haynic theaters and others. He writes:

> I do not make a business of cutting stencils, but I will make sets if desired of heavy paper coated with shellac that, if properly handled, will last a lifetime. I can make them in any size letter desired at one and a half cents an upright inch, that is to say an eighteen inch letter will cost seven dollars a set, plus the cost of parcel post.
> I am an operator as well as a sign painter and the man I am now working for will not buy the material for signs though I am willing to paint them for nothing.
> I will furnish a sample to any manager desiring a set for his own use.

We think that a sign painting operator should have no trouble in finding a manager who would appreciate his double talents. Anyone interested in the stencil proposition can have the address for a stamped envelope.

Still on Earth.

J. M. Blanchard, of the People's Theater, Sunbury, Pa., is another to rise from a supposed grave and show that he is still on earth. We are beginning to believe that in time even Wesley will bob up again. Mr Blanchard had "The Prisoner of Zenda" the other day and announces:

Daniel Frohman
James K. Hackett
—in—
The Prisoner of Zenda.

We think the printer must have left out the word "presents," for Mr. Frohman does not appear in the picture. Mr. Blanchard put in an eight-piece orchestra to play the special music supplied, and he sold reserved seats, wisely realizing that the subject would attract many people who would gladly pay an increased price for increased comfort. At that there were seats at five cents, which is too little for a five-reel special. We think he would have made more money and at the same time would have gained greater prestige with seats at from ten to twenty-five cents. The day of the five cent show is passing and with a splendid production and a nationally known star this would have been the time to educate the patrons to the higher prices with the assurance that a return would be given for the increased price. Mr. Blanchard took half-pages in the paper for the special and then did not feel called upon to use every square inch of it for type. Instead there was a dignified announcement of the subject in the center and four small boxes in the corners. As a result he does in a half-page what a full page of type would not have done. He drives home the big points and lets them do the work. It takes nerve sometimes to pay for white paper at so much an inch, but if space is better than type, it pays better to use the space.

Postals, Too.

He also sent out postals to a select list. These carry the name of the theater at the top, followed by a cut and this text:

> We take pleasure in presenting
> Mr. James K. Hackett in the > PRISONER OF ZENDA
> at The Peoples' Theater
> Wednesday, April 9th
> BOTH MATINEE AND EVENING
> A feature will be made of the music. An eight-piece orchestra under the direction of Mr. Kissinger is at work on this music and it promises to be a real feature.
> The picture is not equaled, the story is one of Romance and Adventure. A limited number of seats have been reserved and are on sale at Smith's Book Store. The number is limited as only half of the house is reserved.

The lines are so displayed that the name of the attraction stands out. It is one of the most intelligently balanced advertisements we have seen in some time.

Another attractive advertisement carries the titles of the big releases in white against a black ground. This necessitates the making of a cut, but there is a return in prominence that pays for the trouble. Another effective device is to double lead in a hairline rule under each line of an eight point story of the film. For a change it is better than full-faced type because it is unusual. We reproduce a few lines:

"Three Wise Men"

A curious and exceptional miracle picture, with, among others, two wonderfully beautiful scenes after famous paintings; first "The First Christmas" and the other even more widely known, "Behold I Stand at the Door."

Don't Irritate.

Now that the hot weather is here and you've got to keep people interested to get them into your house, do not irritate them with supposedly catchy lines as "Is it hot enough for you?" Don't mention the heat, talk about the cool interior of your house. The time-worn question adds to the aggravation of the sweltering passer-by and doesn't help you any. Do something different.

Get a big packing box and build a false bottom a couple of inches from the top. Fill this lid with cheap palm leaf fans, cover it with wire netting and turn it on its side in the lobby. Then put out a sign.

We don't need these inside—that's why they're here.

That's far more likely to get you business than some heat-inducing line, and it will send your patrons into the house with the feeling that they are going to be cooled off.

Cool off here or inside.

will appeal to the feminine trade and a thermometer with the mercury faked to stay at freezing would look mighty good on a hot day. Get one of these large spirit thermometers such as are given out with advertising on them. Break off the lower end of the bulb and let the fluid run out then run a fine silver wire or even a colored broom straw up the tube to the proper point. Replace the bulb guard and below the outfit put up a sign

If you don't believe it, go inside and see.

Most people will stop to see how hot it is and have it impressed upon them that the house is cool. The sign should not be so large as to give the sell away.

An electric fan with ribbons tied to the frame work will catch the eye. A sign that reads will do the rest.

There are a lot of catchy ideas that will suggest themselves to you if you think along those lines, but think for cool signs, not warming ones.

The Dinner

THIS is about your last chance to get a ticket for the dinner. The dinner list will close, Thursday, May 29th., and reservations cannot be made after that.

The dinner will be held at Keene's Chop House, West 36th Street, Saturday evening, May 31st. Tickets are two dollars each and may be had of the members of the Inquest Club or of the Dinner Committee, Box 70, Madison Square Station. Write for your ticket now.

Got a Real One.

The Inquest Club has another honorary member. He is John Edmund DeHoff, who is a real coroner down in York, Pa. With a Coffin, a coroner, a minister, two physicians and several reporters, the Inquest Club is pretty well provided, except that John W. Kellette suggests that we need an undertaker. If Hughie Mack will make proper application he will be declared in.

Now It's Johnston.

Calder Johnston, lately of the Morning Telegraph, has been appointed editor for the Universal company. This is a statement of news, not a tip to address all your scripts to Mr. Johnston personally. That will not help any.

That Lubin Change.

Thinking writers will see in the announcement of the new system in vogue at the Lubin studio something more than a belated recognition of the Editor. It is good news to every man who writes good stories to know that his matter will be passed upon by persons competent to judge literary work, but there is another side to the matter. It is a recognition by one of the leading licensed firms that literary merit does count for something, that the well written story counts for more than the poorly prepared plot with one or two big scenes designed to appeal to the dramatic instinct of the producer. Now the story must still have its big moments, its strongly dramatic situations, but it must be a story, as well, a complete and comprehensive narrative that can be sent to the director in proper form and so well balanced that production cannot throw it out of proportion. There is still the danger that working from the script the director may make fifteen hundred feet for a one part story, a third or more of which must be eliminated in the cutting room, but this is no more than is done now and at least the director will not be left free to make all sorts of changes and "improvements" as his fancy may dictate.

Still more important is the emphasis the move gives to the conditions in other studios. It is not altogether guess work to predict that other studios will fall in line in a short time. The close observer can tell from the pictures on the screen just what studios give the director absolutely free choice in the selection and handling of his stories and those in which the Editor and production manager have more to say.

In his efforts to bring about the more rational condition, Mr. McCloskey deserves the thanks of every thinking photoplay writer.

Last Excuse.

The April Photoplay Author came along a little late for Mayday parties but still not more than a week after April had passed. We had grown accustomed to looking for a late issue and an excuse, but it appears that the May issue will be published in May, and the June issue much earlier in June than the middle of the month. Certain arrangements have been made looking toward greater permanancy—and promptness.

The April issue lacks the continuation of the Pop Hoadley series because the copy for that issue was among the stuff burned when Pop lost his Hoboken home by fire, but Arthur Leeds, William Lord Wright and others well known, contribute readable articles and a new writer, Bailey Bartholdy, argues cleverly but unconvincingly for the crime story.

Envelopes Once More.

Two letters came in during the past week on the everlasting subject of envelopes. One writer wants to know why we say ten and eleven envelopes when a nine and ten will do. The other writer stated that she had been sending out her stuff in photomailers but that an editor told her to use No. 10 envelopes. She adds:

> Will you also let me have your opinion as to the proper weight of paper to use. The paper on which this is written is what I regularly use. One editor, of whose views I fortunately heard before I submitted any work to her, has poor vision, and therefore gets very much peeved if a photoplay submitted to her is written on paper thin enough for the clear type of the sheet on top to be blurred by the typing on the sheets below. What weight do you recommend?

That's a bit "catty." Very possibly the editor lost her clearness of vision trying to read stuff written on paper so thin that the work below showed through, and her nearsightedness should not be thrown up to her. No practised writer ever uses a paper so thin that the type matter on the second sheet shows through the first. It saves two or even four cents in postage, but it spoils temper and eyesight alike and there is not an editor in the country who will read stuff written on sleazy sheets or onion skin. With some paper stock it is possible to use a paper lighter than twenty pounds to the ream, but it better not to make the experiment.

Twenty pound paper means paper that weighs twenty pounds per ream, 17 by 22 inches. It may be linen or bond, but it should be tough, opaque and of a good finish. It should be all paper and not loaded down with clay or other filling that permits it to crack across the moment it is folded. As a rule, bond paper is the best and as a general thing it should cost not less than sixty cents. We use a twenty pound bond that costs $1.25 a box or $4.40 for two thousand sheets at one time. The paper we use for carbon copies is of the same weight and value but of a different color.

White paper is preferred, but a buff, light yellow, light blue or light green may be used. As a rule, if color is wanted, it is better to purchase a whole ream and have it cut, but specify that all sheets shall be 8½ by 11 when cut or half is likely to be 11⅛ and the rest 10⅞. A black record ribbon should be employed.

Envelopes should be No. 10 for the returns and the larger No. 11 for the going envelopes; those in which the script is mailed to the studio. The smaller No. 9 can be made to do, if the script is properly brief, but it requires very exact folding and is clumsy. To send an 8½ by 11 manuscript in a photomailer requires the 10 by 12 size. It is a torment to postmen, is liable to be subject to second class handling, no matter how much the postage paid, and is bulky and unwieldy in the studio. If you follow a trade use the tools of that trade. You would not start out to be a carpenter with a stone for a hammer and a penknife for a saw. Do not break from usage when you write. Do as the other writers do. Use the good enough but not the too good or the unusual. The editor respects the workmanlike script. He derides the fancy and condemns the flimsy.

And by the way, we know where there is a bargain in large envelopes. We'll pass on the tip to anyone in New York who wants it. Send a stamped and addressed envelope for the address.

Pointers from Boston.

Dick Cotton, one of the Boston Circle, contributes these pointers for the benefit of others:

> A good story goes in any form, but it has to be darned good. Still I have known a synopsis to be rejected and the developed photoplay accepted by the same editor.
> If you want to get in with one of the companies that seems a trifle skeptical, keep after them. Show them that your good script is not a flash in the pan, but that you can keep on delivering that quality of goods. After a while they will sit up and take notice and then begin to buy.
> It helps to use a front sheet on which appears a list of your releases stating titles and companies. It shows that your work has been considered good by others.
> Don't bother editors, but if one returns your script with a hint as to the trouble, write him a brief note of thanks. He's only human and he appreciates courtesy as much as you do.

To the latter we would add that when you write and thank the editor don't ask him about three or four more scripts you are sending him. That sort of spoils the thanks.

It is put up to the tyro that genius is merely an infinite capacity for pains, or for hard work. It is preached to him that he must work, work, work, everlastingly work. And so he must. But he gets the wrong idea. He thinks if he hasn't slaved about so many days over a story it can't be good for anything. So he goes to work to see why it came to him so easy, to instill the genius of hard work into it. He can't see anything very wrong with it but it must be wrong because it came easy. So he mulls and sweats and presently he has turned a perfectly good little yarn into a mess of punk. The trouble is he doesn't know when he's worked enough.

Your note has made me cheerful as a cricket whereas it ought to have dumped me into the depths I suppose. But it has given me the light. Here's what I'm going to do with stories, and with modifications it will fit scripts. I'm going to write it as I see it. I never consciously do sloppy work on a first draft. If I strike a snag and things ahead look clearer I sometimes make a clean jump; but what I do write is the best I have in me at the moment. Having written, I'm going to lay it aside for a spell. Then I'll read it, not with the idea that it's all punk but with a firm conviction that it's the best I can do. If I see a change that seems to better it I'll make it. If the change doesn't jump at me I'll assume the thing is the best I can do and shoot it ahead, always with the determination to make the next one better.

I think the lessons learned can be better applied to the next story or script than to the one which happens to be in the works at the moment. Put your work on that one instead of hammering all the goodness out of a thing for the pure sake of "working" on it.

I am not trying to make an opening for the lazy man to shyster and salve his conscience. Simply, I say, don't mull over a story. Let it stay on ice as long and as often as you please. But when you take it off, read it fast and with a feeling that it's good; if you see a change, make it—but don't hunt trouble. When you no longer see the change, even if you're not satisfied, either send it out or lay it away and try again. But don't fuss with it.

We think that our confessor overlooked one statement. He doesn't say that he has his story reasonably clear in his mind before he goes to work. We do not believe that he starts to write until he has something to write, then he writes under pressure and turns out matter that is spirited because it is worked hard and fast. Such a writer—and there are many—cannot give the patient revise to the work that others can. It must be good in the clean copy or it must be laid aside for a fresh start.

It is not possible to lay down writing rules for all, since there are so many differing temperaments, but if you are constituted as is this writer, don't try to revise. You'll find it easier to put the energy into a new story and you'll find the new story better worth while. If you are a newcomer find out which way works best with you, but do not use this letter as an excuse if you happen to be one of those who arrive at success only through patient labor. If you can't improve through revision, make it a rule to try three times. If the story is not right by the third time set it aside for a few months and try again.

More than one "natural" writer has been utterly spoiled through the discovery of technique. He possessed an unconscious technique, but when he started to learn the rules he became engrossed in technique to the exclusion of inspiration.

The "Leaderless" Script.

We saw one of those "leaderless" scripts the other day. We see them most days, for that matter, but we have yet to see a script that would not be the better for one or two leaders and we have seen leaderless scripts that needed a dozen or even more. If you need a leader and have not written it in, you are worse off than if you had written a script with one or two leaders in excess of those actually required.

It is a poor trick to throw your leader into the action and leave it for the editor to dig out again, but it is done daily, even hourly. A part of the action reads like this:

> Bess comes into the room. Tom does not speak to her because he thinks it was she he saw kissing Ned. Bess is hurt by his attitude, but is too proud to ask an explanation.

That might be all very well if there was a scene where we saw that Ned sees a girl who looks like Bess kissing a man, but where there is no such scene the action will disclose nothing. It will be apparent that there is a quarrel of some sort, but the action will not tell what it is. A scene should have been written and preceeded by a leader, "Ned mistakes another for Bess." Then in front of the scene as above another leader should tell "Bess is too proud to ask an explanation of Ned." Now the leaderless scene has developed into two scenes and two leaders, but if that's the only way to tell the story it is the way the story should be told.

Another script told that the hero sought the villains and demanded certain explanations, but in the manner in which the story was developed the scene gave no hint whatever as to the subject of the conversation and the action became merely the spectacle of a man talking to some other men about something not made clear. There were three equally reasonable explanations of the scene, but the correct explanation was found in a fourth subject.

This is not always due to a desire to avoid leader. Sometimes it is to be explained by the intimate knowledge of the author in his subject. He knows that the talk concerns a certain matter, and because it is patent to him he thinks that it must be clear to all. It is one of the most common failings of the beginner that he does not stop to think how the action will look on the screen, yet unless the action is perfectly visualized imperfect action will be the result nine times out of ten.

See it on the screen with your mental vision both before and after you have written it down. You'll use more leader, but on the other hand you'll sell more scripts.

Fitting Individuals.

Even if you are a beginner, don't write to suit the personality of your favorite player. Don't write a script for Warren Kerrigan or John Bunny. Write a photoplay. Don't write a photoplay for a fat man or a thin man or a medium sized man. Write a script that a fat or thin man can play, then if the company with a fat man turns it down you can send it to a company with lightweight comedians and stand some show of acceptance. But if the script is based on the reduction of weight, for example, then only a fat man can play it and once you've exhausted your fat men you are at the end of your rope.

And if you just simply have to write a script about John Bunny or Peter Lang or Billy Quirk, do not call your hero John Bunny or Peter Lang or Billy Quirk, because if the script comes back you must recopy it before you send it out again. Write stories for comedians somewhere between 100 and 400 pounds and you'll catch all weights. And above all things, don't write a reduction story for Bunny. Others have done it before you—many others.

Perhaps An "Awful Reason."

Hopp Hadley, who edits for the various brands of the Carlton Motion Picture Laboratories, sends us a gem of a letter from a Norfolk genius who doesn't even know that Majestic has moved from 145 West 45th Street. He writes:

> I have sent your firm a few photoplays since last week, and have had them returned. Before I sent them to you, I was praised by my friends for them liking them, so I do not see why you returned them unless you had some awful reason. I was sure to receive check for them. Is it possible that any firm would copy a photoplay, then return it.
> Hoping to hear from you soon by explaining me all.

That's the trouble about half the time. The friends of the author praise up his puny efforts and the only answer to the rejection is that the plots were stolen and the scripts returned. The Carlton has been fortunate in having men like Terwilliger and Hadley at the head of their script department; both men of knowledge and integrity, yet they get up against the inevitable question and probably this gifted Norfolkian is telling all his friends what thieves the Majestic people are.

That Little List.

Here are some more threadbare plots for our little list. Arthur Leeds suggests these.

The sheriff who is rescued by the outlaw and who later allows him to escape to prevent his being lynched.

The revenue officer who falls in love with the moonshiner's daughter and who is forced to choose between love and duty.

The Southern boy who enlists in the Federal army and is disowned by his family and the young Union spy who falls in love with the daughter of a Confederate officer.

We might suggest that the Union soldier who falls in love with a Southern girl who is not the daughter of a Confederate officer would be a distinct novelty.

Ashton Crawford brings these to the dump heap.

The man waiting to escort a girl to the theater and who reached old age before she came.

The war play in which the heroine (generally dressed as a boy) brings the reprive after a ride of not less than five scenes.

Any old "it was a dream."

Mind you, good plays can be done from almost any of these taboo subjects, but unless you can startle even yourself with the result, keep off for the good of the community.

(To be continued)

Has a Level Head.

We cannot imagine many writers having two scripts apparently stolen by the same company and keeping cool enough to investigate, but that is V. I. Gilliam's attitude. Mr. Gilliam, who is a St. Louis man, sent a story to Crystal. It came back and a second was sent. Then the first story was practically duplicated and later a second came out, the second script being returned. Investigation showed that both stories had been started by the studio before the scripts had been mailed, but it would have been almost impossible to have convinced some writers that theft had not been committed.

On the other hand a New Orleans writer describes how one of her ideas was taken. She doesn't know that we turned down a practically similar story nearly four years ago. We think that of the two Mr. Gilliam is far more likely to succeed in the long run, yet the woman calmly writes "Now this last was an idea original with me." It is not original with her unless she is older than she is probably willing to confess. We used that particular idea fifteen years ago in a fiction story and we didn't feel certain it was brand new even then. She pleads not guilty in her last paragraph, admitting that the same idea may occur to two or more persons, and yet all through the letter the cry of "Thief" sounds, and it is going to hurt her in her work if she does not get it out of her system.

Inquiries.

NOTE—Replies cannot be sent by mail. State name of character. Do not ask for "leads" or "that man." Addresses cannot be given here, but a list of studio addresses will be sent for a stamped and self-addressed envelope. Only questions of general interest will be answered. Replies cannot be repeated.

H. W.—We fail to see where you should be offended. Thanhouser did not ask for scripts. To the contrary they lay emphasis on the fact that they do not accept them. Why should they hire a man to put rejection slips in envelopes merely because you want to offer scripts when they are trying to tell you they do not want them? Refusing to accept the letter in the first place and returning the envelope to you unopened also serves to free them from the senseless charges of stealing scripts that might otherwise be made. Send scripts where they are wanted, and if you are a writer it is your business to find out where they are wanted before they are sent.

T. de V. H.—Thanks for your interesting letter, but if we started talking about producers breaks we would have to run three or four extra sixteen page forms.

R. A. D.—Sorry, but the Identifier has not yet caught that cast. Thanks for your tips. Come in any time. We're used to it.

W. W.—It would seem that you have reference to Selig's "When Women Rule," which was produced February 26th. The World did not criticize the production.

A. R.—Miss Hackett has been with the Lubin company nearly two years. We cannot give Pathe identifications. Miss Lawrence has given no signs of emerging from her retirement. She has money and a handsome country home. She should worry!

A. L.—Write again, registering your letter and enclosing, a stamped reply cover. If no reply is had you might place the matter in the hands of a collection agency.

RICHARD ROE.—Miss Marie Wierman was the sweetheart in "Memories of His Youth." Give the correct Kalem title, please. We do not place it. Charles Murray was the rejected suitor in "A Delivery Package." Robert Burns was the husband in "The Fixer."

C. A. C.—We cannot answer the first two questions. Miss Hazel Buckham was Ellnore in "A Southern Cinderella."

C. B. C.—The mile race was not filmed. The Intercollegiate meet was not filmed in 1912 but was filmed by Lubin in 1911 and released June 12th, as "The Athletic Carnival." The Poughkeepsie race was shown in Pathe's Weekly No. 29, released July 15, 1912. The Olympic Games were released as a three reel special, "The Olympic Games at Stockholm." Pathe, October 24, 1912 and "American Olympic Victors," Powers, July 24, 1912.

M. C.—The Kay-Bee Shorty has not yet been identified, but we have hopes. We do not place Joe in "The Lost Dispatch." We have no late Thanhouser casts.

ANXIOUS.—We do not decide bets. Roy in "The Sharpshooter" was Charles Ray. We lack the Eclair cast.

RUBENA.—Halftones are cuts in which the half tones, the greys, are given as well as the blacks and whites. They are the cuts usually used. C. T. Travers was the artist in "Through Many Trials."

H. S. M.—Make a courteous inquiry. It may be that the script is being held for consideration, so don't spoil it, but we would ask in your place.

C. W. B.—Mr. Delaney replies that the nearest he ever came to living in Nebraska City, was when he played there one night.

J. A. M.—William Bowman is with the western Vitagraph section as director. See reply to Anxious. The boy was Cyril Gottleib.

B. S.—Sign your name after this. Miss Anna Little was Judge Blair's daughter in "With Lee in Virginia."

N. M.—That American is incorrectly named. Ford Sterling was Sambo in "At the Elite Ball." Walter Miller was Rose's sweetheart in "The Perfidy of Mary." The Biograph Identifier does not place Lothario. We've answered that last question.

MARIE.—Sorry we cannot reply to your questions, but the companies do not give out names. Harry Benham was Miss Anderson's opposite in "The Mystery of Wall Street." Never mind typewriting your questions. Your hand is easily read.

D. D.—Elmer L. Morrow, was the bogus priest in "When Life Fades." Miss Grace Cunard had the woman lead in "The Sharpshooter."

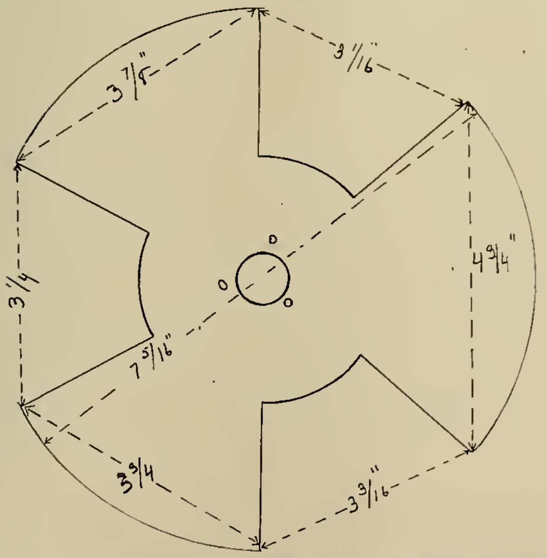
Power's Six Shutter.

Mr. Allie Baron, Lodi, California, writes:

> I have received my handbook and find it very instructive. Shall heartily recommend it to all my friends. I have been operating twelve years and for two years have been one of the department fans. Enclosed find drawing of three wing shutter blade for Power's Six machine. This shutter will kill the travel ghost and is easy to set. On a. c., running 55 feet of film per minute, it will give you a flickerless picture. On d. c., with the same shutter, you can run fast or slow, if you so desire, and will not see any flicker at all. I trust I am not bothering you after a silence of two years, but I want to see the good work go on.



Glad to hear from you, Brother Baron, and that you like the department and the book. As to the shutter, its wide blade is the same as that now being sent out with the Power's Six. I publish this picture for the reason that operators can readily make a shutter of a piece of pasteboard, removing the blade of their present shutter and clamping the paper one into the hub instead for a trial. If they like it, all right. If they do not, why no particular harm is done.

In this connection, I want to call attention to the advisibility of operators using a little judgment as to the Power's Six shutter—or the outside shutter of any machine for that matter. In the first place, always set your outside shutter just as close up to the lens as you can get it. That is important, since the light rays begins to spread after leaving the lens and the farther away the shutter is from the lens, the wider must be the main blade, in order to eliminate travel ghost. It therefore follows that with very short focal length lenses the main blade of outside shutters must be wider than where the lens' focal length is long. Operators having long focal lenses, say more than 5 inches e.f., might, therefore, make a pasteboard shutter, using the shutter blade on their machine for a pattern. Install the pasteboard shutter on the machine and carefully try it out, trimming off 1/16 of an inch at a time from the main blade until you have developed just a little travel ghost, after which, take it off and cut the main blade of your shutter down until it is from 1/16 to 1/8 of an inch wider than the pasteboard pattern, remembering that I am speaking only of the main blade of the shutter. Care must be had, however, not to get the blade of your metal shutter down until it is from 1/10 to 1/8 of an inch wider than the pasteboard pattern, remembering that I am speaking only of the main blade of throw the shutter out of balance. Do your experimenting with a pasteboard pattern and determine just what you want before you do anything to the main blade of the metal shutter. The main blade of the shutter pattern submitted by neighbor Baron would be wider than is necessary for a long focal length lens.

Obtaining a License.

New York City speaks thusly:

> Although I am one of the constant readers of The World, it never dawned upon me until to-day that I could ask a few questions. I can and have operated almost all makes of projectors at private parties. I am now told that an operator needs a license in order to be within the law. I would like to obtain one and to know the requirements for same. Any information will be gladly received.

I am afraid, brother, your knowledge will lack several long jumps of enabling you to obtain a license. Go down to the Bureau of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity, Park Row Building, opposite main postoffice, and put in an application. The examiners will do the rest.

Machine Changes.

One of the legitimate functions of this department, and a very important one too, has been neglected, viz: the describing of the various changes machine manufacturers make from time to time in their equipment. This department ought of right to keep the manager and operator in touch with things of this kind, and I intend to make an effort to see that this is done in the future.

During the past year many changes have been made in existing models of machines. The N. Power Company has added a most excellent mechanical motor drive, or speed controlling arrangement, by means of which the speed of the machine is entirely within the control of the operator, this same being accomplished by means of a fibre friction wheel bearing against a cast iron disc, the same being controlled by a lever, with speed notches the same as the notches on the quadrant of a locomotive throttle. The N. Power Company should have furnished this department with photographs and a complete description of this device, in order that users, as well as non-users of Power's machines may know of the improvement and its details. This company has also made other changes in its equipment and has put out a dissolving stereopticon, which is most excellent in its design, but this department has, to date, not been favored with a line of description, though the space is offered without price.

The manufacturers of the Simplex machine also have made many improvements and many changes in their mechanism. For instance: a plate glass window has been added to the casing door and a slot made in the lens tube inside the mechanism, so that, when running, the operator has a full view of the interior of the machine. Why have not the Simplex people set forth such an important improvement, as well as other changes they have made, in the department, to the end that operators of this and other countries may be made acquainted with the matter? The Enterprise Optical Company, manufacturers of the Motiograph, have also made various changes and improvements in their machine, not one of which has been described in this department, with the single exception of their new lamp, and, that matter I myself took up with them.

The Standard machine has adopted a number of improvements and made several changes, but, like all the other manufacturers, the silence concerning them has been profound. So far as I am aware, the Edison people have made no important changes, and certainly if they have, they have not supplied a single line of description thereof to this department.

It will pay manufacturers to experience a change of heart in this matter. I want you to wake up and take advantage of the columns of this department to set forth the various changes you make from time to time, so that the operators and managers, not only of this, but of other countries, may keep in touch with such affairs and be up to date in their knowledge of projection machinery. It is to your advantage and it does not cost you anything except the labor of preparing a description, illustrated where possible, of the improvement or change. This is a duty you owe to the managers and operators, who look in this department for such information.

As To Lubrication.

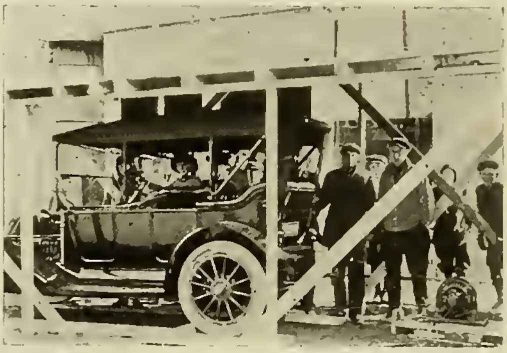
Mr. D. W. Murphy, Washington, D. C., has two or three suggestions to offer as follows:

> Instead of ordinary flake graphite for lubrication of heated lamp parts, use graphite ground in oil, same as is used by linotype men. I also use this in small quantities, mixed with a thinner oil, for the Power's Six intermittent. A long nosed typewriter oil can is the best I can find for oiling my machine. I put in longer top magazine supporting rods, 604, plate 4, page 278 of the handbook, so I could get my fingers in between the top sprocket and the valve in threading up. I find it to be an improvement. I have notched out the front plate opposite screws 744, plate 7, page 284, of the handbook, so as to be able to get screwdriver to them. Also drilled a small hole just above, so I can oil driving gear spindle while running the machine. If you have to patch films while running, eight graphaphone needles driven into an end of a piece of wood, in two groups of four each, to match the sprocket holes in films, will hold the film while it is being cut, scraped and patched. But it is darned (I do not swear, thank you), poor business for the operator to run and patch at the same time. Will be up in your burg this summer sometime, and will try to drop in and renew acquaintance.

Flake graphite is not the thing to use on a lamp. It should be pulverized graphite. I prefer to wet the parts with a very thin oil, like kerosene, and dip them in graphite, or sprinkle the graphite on. The only trouble with the linotype lubricant is that the oil might (and might not, I do not know), leave a residue when it burns off, and thus tend to bind the lamp. Your notching-the-front-plate idea is O. K. The Power's Six front plates are made that way now, and have been for some time. Maybe you do not swear, but if a manager asked me to patch films while running the machine I am afraid the third commandment would look like a collinder when I got through talking to him. Glad to see you when you come to New York, brother Murphy. Drop in by all means.

A Clever Stunt.

What Happened to Mary in Dundee, Michigan, it is a shame to tell. However, it is very well illustrated in the accompanying photograph. The local electric light plant broke down, but the enterprising theater manager borrowed a small dynamo which the light company used to excite its alternator, backed a Regal, 1913 Model, underslung automobile up in front of the house, swiped a belt somewhere, nailed the dynamo down to the ground and belted it to the car, as shown, turned on the power and proceeded to show his Saturday night audiences "What Happened to Mary." He not only saved the Saturday night business, but received a lot of advertising and had people in the house who never had visited it before. All of which shows what an enterprising manager and operator can accomplish, provided they have the necessary hustling ability and the brains to evolve ideas.



That Clicking Noise.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, speaks thusly:

> Will you kindly tell me the cause of the clicking noise in the intermittent movement at every revolution of the same. I have two Power's Six A machines and the one which has this trouble runs harder than the other. I use No. 5 asbestos covered cable to my lamp, and have been running six months, nights only, without changing the wire inside the lamphouse. I get a good light, using 40 amperes through a Fort Wayne compensarc. My carbons do not flame. In view of this, would you recommend new wire inside the lamphouse, or would you suggest that I wait until I get some evidence that the wire is too old to perform its service? My take-up does not seem to work smoothly. Have taken it apart several times, cleaned and adjusted it, but that did not seem to do any good. The belt seems a little too loose. If I shorten it do you think it would remedy the trouble? Received the handbook some time ago and feel that the close study I have given it has increased my ability as an operator at least two-fold.

As to the clicking sound in the intermittent of one of your machines, it probably does not amount to anything, except insofar that it is an annoyance. Feel of your intermittent sprocket when it is on the lock and if there is considerable circumferential lost motion, follow instruction No. 39, page 281 of the handbook, moving the bushing only just a little bit at a time, meanwhile turning the crank of the machine. Very likely you can materially reduce the noise by this adjustment. However, as I before said, it is not doing the machine any harm. As to the mechanism running hard, be sure that it is not binding anywhere. Try each one of the gears with your fingers and see that they rock freely. Turn the machine very slowly, with film in, and see if the tension springs are not set too tight. To judge this see general instruction No. 9, page 216 of the handbook. As to your take-up, see general instruction, No. 2, page 214 of the handbook. Possibly your machine runs hard because your take-up tension is too tight. If so, loosen it up until it just barely takes up a complete reel of film. The fact that the belt is slack does not necessarily mean anything, since a slack belt does not always slip readily. As to what tightening the belt will do, I would suggest that you tighten it and try, being careful, however, not to cut off too much and overdo matters. That would be the simplest way out of that particular proposition. As to the wires, I certainly would amputate them back as far as the copper is discolored. Strip off the insulation until you find clean, bright copper and cut off the wires at that point.

Various Things.

Mr. Fred. Bannister, Mission City, British Columbia, writes as follows:

> Our throw is 56 feet. Can you give me a measurement so that I can put in an order? We use the General Film Company service and it is O. K. in every respect. Population here 1,000. Receipts started at $74.00 last October and are up to $125 now. Can we put on the Power's loop setter ourselves if we get one? Your lighting system is a great success—the cone system described on page 401 of the handbook I mean.

As to lens measurements, you will find that matter fully dealt with on page 356 of the handbook. You can figure it out for yourself, and, if you calliper the aperture accurately, the results will be approximately correct. If I were you, I would get a half-size stereo lens, since I assume from what you have said, they have sent you a one-quarter size. I suppose the figures you give refer to weekly receipts, and $125 certainly is pretty good for a town of 1,000. The General Film Company service seems to be giving very general satisfaction so far as my reports go.

Shutter for A. C.

Mr. Felix Larocque, Soo, St. Marie, Michigan, writes:

> We are using 124 volt, 60-cycle, a. c., projecting a 14 foot picture at 63 feet. The machine is a Power's Six. We are just installing a radium gold fibre screen, but expect to have too bright a picture, using our present Hallberg economizer at its lowest ampereage, which is 40. We have used 50 amperes on ordinary dead white screens with excellent results. What amperage would you advise with the new curtain? Also would the use of a three-wing shutter, run at proper speed, be an advantage? What speed would you deem correct, using three-wing shutters?

I do not think 40 amperes will give you too much light. If you use less than 40 amperes, a. c., you will not get much if any crater at all on your carbons. If it were myself, I think I would continue right along with that 50 amperes. I am a believer in a picture with brilliant whites, still, with the semi-reflecting type of screen, you may possibly find that 40 amperes will be better. The three-wing shutter is all right, provided you do not exceed 65 turns of the crank per minute and provided the cycles are actually 60. Sometimes "60-cycle" current is really nearer 65 or 55. The only way you can decide this particular matter is to try it out. Put on a three-wing shutter and see what speed you can run the machine without the light flashing—that is to say, dying down and coming up suddenly.

Canton, Pa., Answered.

Mr. Charlie Andrews, Atchison, Kansas, answers Canton, Pennsylvania, as follows:

> If you get a good steady picture, my advice is do not move your intermittent at all, since the trouble does not lie there. First see that No. 660, Fig. 116, page 274 of the handbook, clears your sprocket, when there is no film in. Then loosen tension adjusting screw 734, Fig. 115, page 272. Next take off apron No. 669, Fig. 115, page 272, and put rubber tubing on the roller, and put it back, after which I think you will find everything will be O. K. Business here in Atchison is good, as also is projection. I have been here four years and intend to stay four more, because it is a fine old burg. As to Mr. Glenn Bossard, of New York, he can fix his mercury arc rectifier as follows: Loosen set screw on top of magnet arm and hold bulb still while he moves the arm up just a little, after which tighten the set screw. Then try his arc and if it does not start at once, move the arm up just a little more.

All of which is submitted without comment, except that I suppose Brother Andrews means to remove the roller spindle from the apron and put a section of small rubber tubing over the rollers between their flanges, letting it extend from one roller flange to the other. I do not see why he loosens his tension, however, supposing it is only tight enough as it is, which quite possibly is the case. Better proceed a little cautiously on that particular part of the advice, I think.

That Collar on the Power's Six Cam-Shaft.

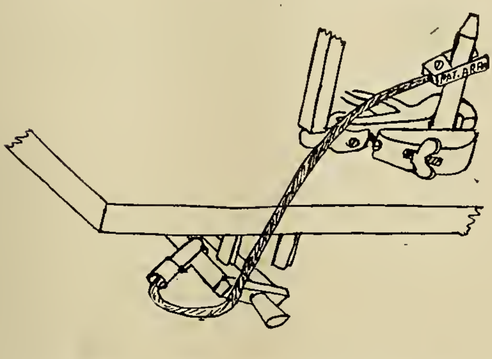
In April 5th issue, Brother Blaine Day, Sherman, Texas, sent a photograph of a collar he had put on the cam-shaft of his Power's Six A machine to eliminate end motion. I criticised it by saying this would have the effect of moving the cam to the left, thus decreasing the bearing of the geneva pins. Brother Day now says that he sets the collar up against the boxing, as shown in the illustration, page 45, April 5th issue, and then, as wear occurs, he puts in a new thin washer, or an additional thin washer, between the hub of the flywheel in the boxing.

Well, Brother Day, if you do that, I do not see what you gain by putting the collar on, since the hub of the cam is against the boxing at the other end, and you simply remove the wear from that end and place it on the collar. What is the advantage, old man? In the parlance of the street: "I don't get you Steve."

A New Device.

Mr. Dan C. Stearns, Jr., Cleveland, Ohio, contributes the following:

> Feeling that I owe the department considerable, I enclose drawing of a device, the same being an emergency line to use when a wire terminal burns off, thus permitting the reel to be run off without delaying the show. You are at liberty to publish it for the benefit of the boys, if you care to do so. This device is patented and made by Mr. Ted Price. I think he intends to manufacture it and put it on the market for $1.00 each. I am using one of them myself and find them very satisfactory in case of emergency. The contrivance is quite simple and forms a perfect contact with the carbon. The other end clamps on the blade of the switch. Its adjustment requires about forty seconds.



Unquestionably, such a device would be of decided value. It is so very simple that it is a wonder nobody thought of it before. In fact, it seems to me something of the kind was sprung on us two or three years ago, though as to this I am not certain. As a matter of fact, however, if the operator gives his equipment the closest, careful attention he should give it, his terminals will rarely, if ever, burn off. If the directions on page 200 of the handbook are followed, no trouble of this kind will ever be experienced. However, brother Stearns, I thank you for taking the trouble to describe this little device through the department.

For Discussion.

Mr. Joseph B. Basson, New York City, contributes the following letter, which I shall lay before our readers without comment, since I would much rather see these things discussed by the brothers in general, before giving my own ideas, except to say that brother Basson seems to make no provision in his proposed amendment for a mixed local in a town where there are not stage employees, spot-light men or moving picture operators enough to form a union, but there are perhaps enough to form a joint local:

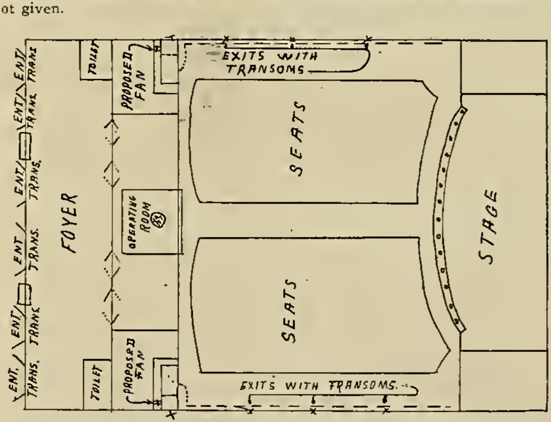
> Your article on the I. A. T. S. E. convention, May 3rd issue, is just what is needed, since it gives operators a chance to lay their views before the brothers for general discussion. I therefore congratulate you on the step you have taken. I am going to offer a few suggestions which I would like to see discussed in the department. Owing to the fact that the I. A. T. S. E. was organized in 1893, there was good reason for their failure to make provisions for the moving picture machine operators, as there were very few, if any, at that time. When moving pictures were introduced, people thought them a novelty which would soon run their course and die. Evidently the I. A. T. S. E. thought the same thing, so they simply put the picture machine operators under the jurisdiction of the spot-light operators (an entirely different trade) as auxiliaries. Some time later, when they found moving pictures were no longer a novelty, but, probably still not sure they were here to stay, the I. A. T. S. E. started to call these auxiliaries "branches of the spot-light unions" This course was only taken, however, in a few places where the M. P. operator auxiliaries rebelled. In Philadelphia, they still have an auxiliary with over one hundred members, in spite of Article 8, Section 2 of the I. A. T. S. E. constitution, which reads: "The moving picture operators' locals to be organized and given a number, and no auxiliaries to be allowed where there are a sufficient number of men to form a local." So you see two upward steps, or what are supposed to be upward steps, have been taken. Now, it is time for another move forward and it is also time to make sure it is a move forward. No sane man will longer doubt that moving pictures are here to say. They are growing more popular every day. Picture machine operators are no longer uncertain factors. We are a full grown body of men, therefore it is time we were recognized as such and put on an equal basis with the rest of the I. A. T. S. E. members. The taxes are the same for all. Why not the rights? And now I am going to suggest a way out of the present tangle. First, I want to call your attention to Article 6, Section 2, of the I. A. T. S. E. constitution, which reads: "Charters shall only be granted to fifteen or more competent theatrical stage employees in any city where two or more recognized and regularly operated theaters exist." Picture machine operators are not stage employees, so can never get a charter according to this section. Therefore, I would suggest this section be amended, to read: Article 6, Section 2 (AS AMENDED), "Charters shall only be granted to fifteen or more competent theatrical stage employees in any city where two or more recognized and regularly operated theaters exist, or to fifteen or more competent moving picture machine operators in any city where an operator must have a license, and where fifteen or more operators are regularly employed." Article 8, Section 1, reads: "In cities where regularly chartered local unions of electric, calcium lamp and moving picture machine operators exist, that all operators shall be members of these regularly chartered local unions, and known as Locals 35 and 37 of the I. A. T. S. E., and these separate, distinct charter unions shall be hereafter known as Theatrical Electric Calcium Lamp, Moving Picture Machine Protective Local Unions Nos. 35 and 37, I. A. T. S. E. (Notice length of name) and with full rights to go on tour with traveling theatrical attractions." Article 8, Section 10, reads: (contradicts Section 11) "That Local 35 and 37 shall continue to look after moving picture machine operators as before in the cities of Greater New York and Philadelphia." The two sections should be repealed as they give Locals 35 and 37 a privilege which none of the 248 other locals of the I. A. T. S. E. enjoy. The I. A. T. S. E. consists of 250 locals, not counting auxiliaries and provisional locals. Why should two locals hold a privilege which was taken away from all other locals? The I. A. T. S. E. must either form separate locals for spot-light operators in all cities where picture machine operators are licensed or one local for both in each city. If two separate locals are formed, which I believe will be the case, a bylaw should be passed: That where one man is compelled to operate a spot-light and a picture machine, he must be a member of both locals. This would settle for all time the question of working a job where one man is compelled to operate both a spot-light and picture machine. Knowing the I. A. T. S. E. is inclined to be just and fair, the above is written to call their attention to something that ought to be remedied. It is not my intention to be abusive in any way.

A New Union.

Sherman and Denison, Texas, Local Union No. 280 has just received its charter. Vice-President, L. W. Burk, of Fort Worth, Texas, Local 160, visited Sherman and installed the officers, whose names will be found in the directory at the head of the department. After the installation, the members adjourned to the residence of Secretary Ed. Boham, where refreshments were served and a most enjoyable evening was spent. The new local, as well as its individual members, has the best wishes of this department for success. In the words of the immortal Rip Van Winkle "May you live long and prosper."

Ventilation.

Mr. W. H. Plaisted, Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania, sends in a ground plan of the theater and wants our advice as to the best scheme for ventilating same. There are four ceiling ventilators, six feet in diameter, over the center aisle. The theater seems to be a pretty wide one, though the dimensions are not given.



I think if it were myself, I would place my fans in the walls of the rooms, marked 1 and 2, at the point marked X, X. I would put a wall in these rooms, as indicated by dotted lines, these walls to extend from the ceiling to within about two feet of the floor. In the inner portion of each room, I would install a water spray at the ceiling and then run a flat pipe about six inches thick by possibly 12 inches wide along the wall, as indicated by dotted lines, with openings at suitable intervals. The water spray would cool the air and remove all dust and impurities. The rooms would, of course, have to be lined with cement and have a drain pipe attached. The cool air would sink to the floor and then arise and pass out through the ceiling ventilators. And now, Brother Plaisted, this ventilation proposition is a big one and I am not going to say positively that this would be the best system, but it is a system recently described in the department as being a successful operation in Tucson, Arizona, one of the hottest cities in the United States, and it looks good to me. The only question arising would be the cost of the water, but, if the spray be a fine one it seems to me this need not be at all prohibitive. Brother Plaisted says he is working on a scheme to quickly stretch a cloth curtain or screen of any kind, and would like to send me plans of the scheme for examination and criticism. Send them along, brother. We will give our opinion and willingly do anything else we can to assist you.

He Never Broke One.

Mr. W. P. Pierce, Greenville, South Carolina, orders one of the books and remarks:

> I am to be chief operator at the Bijou Theater, Anderson, S. C., where two 1913 model Motiographs are being installed. I have my first condenser to break, although I have been operating for four years. The only reason for this is, I think, that I give the lenses plenty of room for expansion, as well as lots of ventilation. Anyhow, I think it is a feather in my cap and a considerable saving too.

All of which is perfectly true, Brother Pierce, though judging by my own experience, there is considerable good luck mixed up in the proposition as well.

Film Rattles.

Mr. J. E. Custer, Hooversville, Pa., says:

> I am annoyed by a rattle in my new machine. This occurs only when the film is in. I am unable to locate the trouble.

I would not say positively what the trouble is, but it is probably due to the rollers at the bottom of the apron being too close together, thus holding the film out and causing it to slap against the apron. If you find this to be the case, you may spread the rollers somewhat by a careful use of a hardwood punch and hammer.

From Hawaii.

Mr. George F. Renton, Jr., Ewa, Hawaii, sends in the following:

> Through your first handbook, I became acquainted with the Moving Picture World, and through that paper and the handbook, I have been one of your unknown scholars. I have become interested in China, having read several letters from the Arcade Amusement Company, in Tientsin. I notice they say they get their films from London. I find no other exchanges or theater mentioned. Can you tell me whether or not there are any film exchanges in China, and, if so, their location; also any other moving picture theaters and their location? If you do not know of any, can you tell me where I can get the information? I know I am nearer to China than are you, but I cannot get the desired data here. If China is practically a new country for the silent drama time is valuable, and I will cheerfully remit for any service rendered.

I would not advise you to embark in the business of amusing John Chinaman without first making a careful, personal investigation. The Variety Film Exchange right there in Hawaii has branches in Japan, Siberia, China, Manila and Singapore. If it is not too far I would suggest that you make a trip to Honolulu and consult them. If they cannot tell you what you want to know, or if you cannot go to Honolulu, write to Mr. B. Brodsky, the traveling manager of all their branches and have them forward it. We received a letter from the Arcade Amusement Company not long ago, asking us to warn men from the states against rushing blindly into China. They say that strangers nearly all fail, and they have to buy up their outfits, not because they want them, but out of charity to help the poor devils get back home.

Discovered.

Mr. F. G. Kittredge, Washington, D. C., writes:

> In the May 3rd issue, you ask us to find the error in the sketch accompanying letter from Hays, Kan. I have found three, besides the one pointed out by yourself. Assuming operating room switches to be O. K., the faults are: (1) The word economizer is wrongly spelled. (2) Most, and I think all, a. c., economizers are really transformers, and a transformer has at least four binding posts, two for the primary and two for the secondary current. In the diagram, only two are shown and the economizer looks like a rheostat, there being no secondary circuit. (3) The brother says he gets 60 amperes at 100 volts. I have not heard of an incandescent lamp which will consume that amount of current. In the last issue you speak with ridicule of the fifteen-dollar-a-week operator, but there are operators in town working from seven dollars up to twenty-five, which I believe is the highest salary paid.

You are right about the economizer, except that Hays certainly never meant that his incandescent lamp would take 60 amperes. That would, of course, be ridiculous. He meant the arc. The incandescent lamp would only consume his ordinary wattage, but it must be a 60 volt lamp. I have not spoken "with ridicule," of the fifteen-dollar-a-week operator. You are not the only one who is stirred up over that particular proposition. What I meant was that we needed men of superior ability in the operating room, and that the kind of men we need cannot be secured at low salaries; also that a low salary is but little incentive for a man to put forth his best efforts. Of course, it must be considered that fifteen dollars a week in the smaller towns is equal to almost, if not quite, double that sum in the large cities. I remember years ago, I lived in a little town, Brookfield, Mo. One could rent a house there, at that time at least, which would cost not less than forty to fifty dollars in New York City, for from six to eight dollars. Vegetables could be had almost for a song, and other provisions were, by comparison with the city prices, low in price. Fifteen dollars at that time, in Brookfield, Mo., would have been equal to fully forty in New York City. In the article complained of, I should not have mentioned the specific sum of fifteen dollars. That has caused me to be misunderstood. I think you all want more money, and I think you all would have greater incentive to put forth your best efforts if you got more money—wouldn't you? Therefore, increased salaries would not only benefit the operator, but would benefit the manager as well. I make this as a statement, not as a surmise, for the reason that if the operator got any considerable increase in salary, he would have to improve his work or the manager would fire him and get somebody else who would deliver the goods in return for the money. That is logical, is it not? Sounds like plain, common sense, doesn't it? I assure you that such a thing as ridicule never entered my mind

Testing for Polarity.

Mr. Frank Hurley, Cumberland, Md., comments on Mr. Boden's polarity test, as follows:

> In the May 3rd issue of the World, I notice description of a polarity indicator contributed by Mr. Boden of this town. I have used Joe's method, but find the following to be a more reliable; clean the ends of both wires and place them in a glass of water. Close the switch. As the ends of the wires are brought near each other, bubbles will form freely at the end of the negative wire, and few, if any, at the positive wire. Joe will admit that this method is cheaper than his, as the cost of potatoes in Cumberland, at the present time, is a way up. In fact, they are not very plentiful at the place where I board. I have used the above scheme for the past few years and I have never yet had it to fail me. Remember it is the negative and not the positive that bubbles.

The water test, Neighbor Hurley, is old; also it is reliable, but I regard the potato test as simpler and better if it works out all right, due to the fact that, with the water there is always the danger of bringing the two wires together and blowing a fuse.

Fifteen-Dollar-a-Week Operator.

Mr. Charles Nissen, Paterson, New Jersey, misunderstands the editor, as follows:

> From the reading of many articles in the department, I have come to the conclusion that the fifteen-dollar-a-week operator is your worst enemy, or at least the one you have least respect for. How do you know that the operators you think get fifteen dollars really get it, or how do you know that the operators who do get fifteen a week are not worth more? In your article to film producers, you again embarrass many good operators. You are telling the film producer that the fifteen-dollar operators spoil his reputation. How do you know? You are in New York, and I understand do not travel very far from there. If it is from your city that you get the idea about the fifteen-dollar operator, I may agree with you. But take for example the New York operator who gets from $22.50 to $25 a week. What about them? By this time you naturally think I am one of the fifteen-dollar men, but it is not quite that bad, for I get a little more than that for six days, working nine hours a day, with an hour for supper. Now take the New York man who gets from $22.50 to $25 a week: he works seven days and often from 10 A. M. to 12 P. M. Do you think because he is working that way and gets that money he is a better operator than the one who gets from fifteen to eighteen, with his Sunday off, and eight to ten hours work on week days? Which do you think is the healthier and has the clearer mind and stronger nerve? Isn't a Sunday off worth from five to ten dollars to any operator who loves his home and family? To my way of thinking, the Sunday worker is after the money and the other after health and happiness. The $15 to $18 operators I speak of are in the small cities and towns, and you can take it from me, the good, smart and sensible operators hide themselves there and are satisfied with life. I am a member of the I. A. T. S. E. Local 543, and the boys here average from sixteen to eighteen dollars a week, and I can assure you that none of them are ashamed of their projection. This is my first appearance in the department, but will probably not be the last. I trust you will think this matter over and realize that you are unjust in issuing a flat condemnation of so many operators by using the term "fifteen-dollar-operators."

I have given this letter space although I have already answered one to the same effect. The brother is right in his remarks, but he has totally misunderstood my meaning. On the other hand, I was wrong in naming the fifteen-dollar operator. I used bad judgment there, for which I must ask forgiveness. The whole meat of this matter lies in the fact that increased salaries have the inevitable effect of attracting higher class men or, what amounts to the same thing, inducing the man receiving the lower salary, to study and raise the standard of his own ability. I had the pleasure of visiting the Paterson union on the occasion of their hall two or three months ago, and I certainly would not willingly issue any blanket condemnation covering such a bright energetic looking bunch of men as I saw there that night. I am trying to help to get operators better salaries, not only because the operators ought to have better salaries from their own point of view, but because those better salaries will, in the end, be more than worth the increase to the managers themselves. I trust you now understand my position and, with a final apology for the unintentional error, I will close the subject.

Local 35, Branch 2, Prospering.

The last meeting of Branch 2, Local 35, New York City, was well attended and the gathering was composed of a representative body of men. The meetings are orderly and well conducted. The business of the local is now done in a business-like manner. Brother Tom Costello resigned as business agent, having accepted a position with the Paul J. Rainey people. The union unanimously thanked him for his efficient work during the past year. The matter of a delegate to the convention was discussed and the consensus of opinion seemed to be that it was advisable to send one, although the expense is heavy. This thing of holding conventions in the extreme East or the extreme West ought to be done away with and, as I have before said, there is neither rhyme, reason nor common sense in holding an annual convention, at a cost of between thirty-five and forty thousand dollars. Bi-annually is often enough, and there are those who favor tri-annually, using the money thus saved to defray the expenses of general organizers.

Not Guilty.

Bradentown, Florida orders a handbook and wants to know could the F. H. Richardson of the Projection Department be the same F. H. Richardson who has been spending the winter in St. Petersburg, Florida, where he is known as "The Electrical Man."

Comments on the Films

"INTO THE NORTH" (Essanay), May 19.—A two-part special offering containing much that is commendable as entertainment for the people: there is much in it they will like. But part of it will seem trite to even the casual photoplay patron. The situation with which the picture opens is not only stale, but painfully unconvincing. It is the circumstantial evidence situation showing how an impossible bank was robbed after its cashier had been killed in a most improbable way. But this gives beginning to a story of the north woods with the action and the atmosphere that still interests. In the general conduct of the story of the rough life there is an earnestness and a vim that makes almost all of it seem real. Spectators like to see a fisticuff struggle when it is as well done as at the climax of this. On the whole, it makes a very fair offering and justifies itself as a feature. The photography is only fair; the interiors are clear.

"BY MUTUAL AGREEMENT" (Edison), May 19.—A picture in true comedy vein that gave the audience amusement, subdued but real. It seemed to please. The situation has been developed in a number of ways in other pictures; but the director, Charles Seay, has given to this version a truthful homeliness that keeps most of it emotionally convincing. We do not think the leading woman got just the effect she wanted at the climax; she failed to make it tell strongly, though she won a laugh from the audience. The camera work seems better than the lighting. The script was written by Lillian E. Sweetser. Frank Lyon plays a not very energetic farmer, whose wife, May Abbey, forbids him to smoke. There is rebellion and a temporary separation which leads to a heart-interest reconciliation. The role of the hired man didn't help the picture at all; it would have been better without any hired man.

"HIS LIFE FOR HIS EMPEROR" (Vitagraph), May 16.—Here is a powerful picture. Leo Delaney, playing a dissolute and discharged government clerk, overhears a conspiracy against the life of the Emperor. He goes to Napoleon and asks that he be sent to meet the conspirators in response to the forged note. The clerk is dressed in the Emperor's uniform. The transition from the humble clerk to the man who rules is splendidly carried out. The decoy is killed. The Emperor follows with a number of soldiers and the conspirators are arrested. There are many strong situations. William Humphrey plays the Emperor and Harry Morey the chief of the conspirators. Dallas Welford is the keeper of the wine shop. William Shea, Harry Northrup and Earle Williams are the other chief actors. "His Life for His Emperor" is a true one-reel feature.

"THE YAQUI CUR" (Biograph), May 17.—There are battle scenes in these two reels that are unusual. In fact, the picture may best be described as a big Biograph. The theme is of a young Indian who meets white men and likes their ways. He is taught to smoke cigarettes. He is given a Bible. He is told that the ways of peace are the right ways. When war breaks out between his tribe and another he refuses to fight and is cast out. Later he smilingly sacrifices his life to save that of the lover of the woman he loved and lost. He puts into practice a precept he found in the Book—"Greater love than this." There are many dramatic situations, relieved at times by those lighter touches so characteristic of the direction of Mr. Griffith. Robert Herron plays the Yaqui cur, and plays it well. Victoria Forde, well known to Universal followers, has the role of the Indian girl who rejects him. There are many fine photographic effects.

"THE VITAGRAPHERS AT KAMA KURA" (Vitagraph), May 19.—Some good photographs of Japanese scenes are on the same reel with the foregoing. We find the travelers at Kama Kura before the statue of Buddah, and also feeding the pigeons at the temple of Hachiman.

"OLAF—AN ATOM" (Biograph), May 19.—A picture that is wholly conventional; but makes good use of all its material after the rather dull opening. It is the picture of the race to the office of the land claims agent. Olaf, a tramp, is fed by the settler's wife and later finds that certain evil men have discovered a flaw in the papers of his benefactress' husband. He sends the man riding on his horse to save his claim and himself rides on the trunk-rack behind their automobile, cutting the tires with a knife. It lacks the sentimental ending, which is one thing to be thankful for. The camera work is fair. The players, Claire McDowell, Charles Mailes and Harry Carey (Olaf) do pretty well; the picture gave them small chance to act.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 21" May 19.—There is very little news interest in this week's topical. The best items are a good portrait of President Poincare of France, one of Andrew Carnegie, one of Alexander Graham Bell, one of the Papal Nuncio of Spain.

"MARGARET'S PAINTING" (Lubin), May 19.—The story of this picture is conventional; but it is dry chiefly because it has been very poorly acted in most of its scenes. The producer has not been careful of details and has failed to give that illusion of reality that interests. For instance, there were two exhibitions of paintings shown in the picture. In the first there were five works of art and the husband's painting; in the second, the same five but with the wife's painting instead of her husband's. The offering lacks all edge to cut with. The camera work is fair. Elinor O'Keefe is the authoress and the script was produced by L. B. Carlton.

"HIS FATHER'S DEPUTY" (Selig), May 19.—A picture written and produced by William Duncan. It is not, in its idea and general scheme, different from most of his stories; but the good qualities are also in evidence and one of these is freshness in the incidents, and another is speedy action. As often, when pistols prove unable to land the young deputy his criminals, his fists come to the rescue; he knocks both of them unconscious. Lester Cunio and Tom Mix play the criminals. Rex De Rosselli plays the sheriff, father of the deputy. The photography is clear and serviceable. A fair offering.

"THE ARTIST'S SACRIFICE" (Kalem), May 19.—A very conventional story of the big-hearted man who is worthy, but who seems fated to choose the burnt cookie. In this case, he is an older brother who has sent his younger brother through college and who then finds that the younger man has fallen in love with his sweetheart. The producer let many small things make his picture inartistic and very unreal. That college scene is as untruthful as it is trite. It would be a poor college where seniors could live that kind of life; freshmen who try usually get dropped. Another scene showed a shop girl's poor friend lending her an expensive looking dress. Alice Joyce plays the girl who is fired from the dry goods store and who gets a job from the artist (Edgar L. Davenport). The younger brother is played by Tom Moore. The photography is good.

"BUNNY'S BIRTHDAY SURPRISE" (Vitagraph), May 19.—A farce with a few good situations; but that lacks snap at the end. The guests should not have got mad when poor, unsuspecting Bunny comes into the parlor, after his hard day, in his pajamas; the fun lost more than it gained by this. Then the fiancee should have come in more naturally with the other guests. The offering made a few good laughs. The script is by John B. Black and was produced by Wilfred North. Flora Finch supports John Bunny in it. It is clearly photographed.

"THE BATTLE FOR FREEDOM" (Kalem), May 17.—This special release has been reviewed at length in a former issue—see page 360, April 26, 1913.

"BRONCHO BILLY'S GRIT" (Essanay), May 17.—A Broncho Billy picture that clearly pleased a large audience. It is well put together, naturally acted, has action and is clearly photographed.

"A WRECKED LIFE" (Patheplay), May 17.—A wretched old woman is shown and then a man tells her story, a narrative that is not without dramatic effectiveness; but the picture is artificial and does not convince strongly. There are no real characters and little deep interest. The photography is fair.

"BUNNY DIPS INTO SOCIETY" (Vitagraph), May 17.—A good natured farce that a large audience found very amusing. It affords entertainment throughout. Bunny has a role with much freshness and is in good form in it. There was a good deal of laughter. The clever script is by K. W. Wood and it was produced by Wilfred North.

"RETRIBUTION" (Lubin), May 17.—The banker accomplishes the cashier's ruin because he has fallen in love with the younger man's wife. This, of course, is not an original situation. There was laughter in the audience at the innocent showing of the man in stripes; audiences are making fun of sentimentality. The situation is not worked up in the most effective way and is not carried forward speedily. It does not convince and is full of painfully constrained and drawnout scenes. The author and producer is George Nicholls. Edwin Carewe and Ernestine Morley play the romantic leads with John Ince as the villian. The photography is fine.

"A CONCERTO FOR THE VIOLIN" (Edison), May 17.—A picture of musicians which, if followed by the right music, will be very acceptable; it is not strong enough to stand effectively without it. The weakness is almost wholly in the story, which is neither new nor convincing. It is in fact a conventional offering made to give emphasis to good music to be supplied by the exhibitor. Anne Story Allen is the authoress and it was produced by Charles J. Brabin. The acting is graceful and fairly pleasing; but a conventional situation makes conventional acting. Marc MacDermott, Mabel Trunnelle and Miriam Nesbitt play the triangle story. The sets and photography are all that could be desired.

"THE POET AND THE SOLDIER" (Kalem), May 17.—A picture suggested by a lyric poem of Trench's, which was used by permission. Hattie Gray Baker is the authoress and had pictured the soldier as wounded and dying. He tells his story to a poet, who comforts his last moments. This story is disconnected and not dramatic in any real sense of the term and does not deeply interest, although one or two incidents did "capture" two foreigners behind us. The producer has shown a common soldier as living with his wife in a way that only one with the income of an officer could afford. Carlyle Blackwell plays the soldier; Lucile Young, the wife; and William H. West, the poet. The battle scenes are fair; we have had better. The photography is clear.

"TWO SOCIAL CALLS" (Essanay), May 16.—A drama with nothing to recommend it. There is an attempt at suspense when a child wanders into a house and is well taken care of, its parents in the meantime hunting for it. The picture lacks grip.

"PAT, THE COWBOY" (Kalem), May 16.—John Brennan portrays an Irishman who goes to the west and gets work on a ranch. His unfamiliarity with the ways of the country causes amusement on the part of his associates and may make some for the audience.

"FOOD INSPECTION" (Kalem), May 16.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this illustrated news film produced in co-operation with the Commissioner of Health, of New York City. There is much statistical matter bearing on New York's food supply, and it is interesting.

"WITH THE STUDENTS OF THE NORTH DAKOTA AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE" (Selig), May 16.—Showing the close-up faces of some of the girl pupils, all of them laughing. Why this institution should be selected for this honor is not apparent. Also there are pictures showing the girls making candy.

"A DAUGHTER OF THE CONFEDERACY" (Selig), May 16.—On the same reel is this short drama, There are shown a couple of fine southern groves.

"A VAMPIRE OF THE DESERT" (Vitagraph), May 16.—This two-reel special is well staged and there are good people in the cast—Helen Gardner, Harry Morey, Tefft Johnson, Flora Finch and Leah Baird. The picture is described as an allegory; certainly it is too strong on the "high-brow" stuff to serve as entertainment. The first reel is not coherent; the second reel is more understandable, but establishes no particular interest.

"JOHN MANLEY'S AWAKENING" (Edison), May 16.—There is nothing new in this picture, but it is well put on and will interest and certainly has a pleasant ending. Augustus Phillips and Bessie Learn carry well the leads.

"THE JELLY FISH" (Patheplay), May 16.—Short scientific film, showing varieties of this fish.

"ALONG THE BANKS OF THE RIVER EURE" (Patheplay). May 16.—On the same reel are these beautiful hand-colored views of castles and chateaus. The photography is unusual.

"SARAGOSSA" (Patheplay). May 16.—Also on the same reel is this "reminder of the golden age of Spain." A good travelogue.

"A SOUL IN BONDAGE" (Vitagraph), May 15.—A picture by Leah Baird that gives her a splendid chance to portray the heart of a woman; but the portrayal lacks the real objectivity of art and therefore makes a narrow appeal. It was necessary to have this character grip the hearts of the audience in order to make the story truly dramatic, and it fails to do this. All others in the picture are kept in the background, are mere figures. We have first the fast club man whom the woman loves, or thinks she does and with whom she is going to the devil. Then, most pleasingly suggested, comes the woman's awakening. In this touch there is a sincerity that does the authoress much credit and shows that she knows how to write for the people, even if she doesn't always. Then we have the other, the good man, who is quite flat, and then the unimaginative ending. Van Dyke Brooke produced it. The scenes and the photography are good.

"THE BLACK TRAILERS" (Melies), May 15.—A very entertaining as well as instructive offering telling a story of friendship between a white trader and his black customers in North Queensland, Australia. It is something quite new; no other picture, even those of the Melies Company, has been like it and it held the audience strongly. The photography is clear in most of the scenes and the story is simple and straightforward. The trader is robbed by another white man and the blacks help bring the culprit to justice; but in the meanwhile, are themselves suspected by other white men.

"AT CAIRN, NORTH QUEENSLAND" (Melies), May 15.—A good travel picture with some glorious scenes taken at sea, pictures of the ocean's waves. Why do we see so many views of loading ships at wharves? We have seen, in pictures, how ships are loaded in nearly every first rate port in the globe, it seems.

"AN ITINERANT WEDDING" (Patheplay), May 15.—This farcical offering might have been made much more funny if it had been acted and produced for what comedy there was in it; but (we are sorry to say it), the audience we saw it with wouldn't have liked it so well; at least we fear it wouldn't have. It is a roughhouse picture that made more laughter than any other offering this week. It isn't worthy of a serious review. The players are pleasing even in such a picture and the photography is very good.

"THE STOLEN LOAF" (Biograph), May 15.—To the audience this morning, this picture proved an unintentional comedy; they laughed and shouted mock comments at its sentimental scenes. Such an audience will stand for coarseness it seems, but is death on sentimentality. That the second part of this is true is most encouraging; folks who know life hate sentimentality. We have seen many worse pictures than this applauded. It has been written to get all there was in the situation and it was pretty well acted by the best Biograph players. Of course, it is far from convincing; such pictures always are.

"IN THE LONG AGO" (Selig), May 15.—A picture which illustrates an Indian myth, a poetic love story of the long ago, in which a despised musician is refused the privilege of marrying the belle of the tribe. He proves himself not only strong enough to kill his rival, the tribe's stalwart warrior, in a struggle for the girl, but is able to make a magic flute which can and does restore the girl, now lying dead. In the closing scenes, the picture shows a short glimpse of modern life which suggests that the old myth is being played, in part, again. This kind of picture doesn't give the same punch that it did when newer; but, in this case, it is poetic and interests. The photography is clear enough to tell the story, but lacks the quality of liveliness, isn't artistic. It was written by Lanier Bartlet and produced by Colin Campbell. Wheeler Oakman and Bessie Eyton play the romantic leads.

"BOOSTING BUSINESS" (Essanay), May 15.—A lively farce that made a reasonable amount of hearty laughter. The situation is such that whenever action ceases for a moment, as when one or another of the players stops to laugh long and loud, the unconvincing barrenness of it becomes too apparent even for a farce. It wasn't laughed over as a whole; but a good deal of it made laughter. John Steppling plays a drummer who finds no demand for his baking powder and contrives to make the people think that a hundred dollar bill is hidden in one of the cans in stock at either Joseph Allen's or Charles Hitchcock's store. Eleanor Blanchard is the woman who spreads the news of the big bill to be found by some lucky purchaser. At the end the disillusioned women chase him out of town with his baking powder.

"LONGING FOR A MOTHER" (Lubin), May 15.—A very pretty story of an imaginative boy whose mother died when he was born. His father is a man of wealth and the lad has everything that a boy could enjoy except a mother. In front of his mother's picture he dreams—the painting seems to come to life and to tell him stories, but then, of course, he must always find that it is only a dream. But his father has fallen in love with a woman who can also love the son and what was only a dream becomes real. Perfect photography adds much to the beauty and the art of the picture and it makes a very acceptable offering. Mrs. Owen Bronson is the authoress and it was produced by L. B. Carlton. Isabelle Lamon is the dream-mother; Mabel Harris, the new mother; Jack Standing, the father and Raymond Hackett, the boy.

"HER MASKED BEAUTY" (Patheplay), May 14.—A two-part special offering made in Europe and giving us a picture of Italian life. It has little of the quality that has proved attractive to American audiences; its appeal will be more to the intellect than to the heart; it does not convince, and it deals with things not at once understood by spectators on this side, with things typically Continental. The situation is not new, it having been used in at least one other picture that has come to America from France. The heroine, who finds it necessary to make herself seem homely to get a position as governess in the house of a woman of wealth and who falls in love with her employer's brother, and so forth, is not in this picture a great beauty. The leaders refer to her as such and this made a little laughter near us. The picture is fairly well acted, has been very clearly produced and acceptably photographed.

"THE REDSKIN'S MERCY" (Patheplay), May 14.—A typical frontier picture with an Indian attack on a stockade as its feature. The whites are driven out of their log cabin within the stockade when the reds manage to set it on fire. The two survivors are saved by the heroic redskin who, it seems, had fallen in love with the white girl and is willing to give his life to save her. The photography is pretty good.

"BUCK RICHARD'S BRIDE" (Selig), May 14.—A very charming picture, giving a little romance, not new at all; but perfectly fresh by reason of its acting and general conduct. Unusually good acting (among every make of picture), is apparent from the very opening. Hobart Bosworth plays Buck, an elderly foreman on a cattle ranch, who falls in love with a pretty waitress in an Omaha lunch house and takes her home with him. He is busy and the young bride feels herself neglected. Mr. Bosworth's virile acting is extremely well supported by Margarita Loveridge, in the role of Annie, the bride. Miss Loveridge makes a decided hit and has drawn the girl as engagingly as possible, so it seems. We hope for many pictures of this quality; it would be profitable to push Miss Loveridge to the front more. Hobart Bosworth is the author and Frederick Huntly, the producer. There is credit due all around. It is easily the most desirable offering today.

"THE SAME OLD STORY" (Essanay). May 14.—A farce that made a good deal of laughter, but never captured the whole house for one big laugh. It is not wholly free from vulgarity. And, while it justifies itself as entertainment, it is one of that large group of pictures that makes one wish he could overhear in it the conversation. No real motion picture, none that really justified itself as one, would leave us thus unsatisfied. Augustus Carney, Eleanor Blanchard, Beverly Bayne, Billy Mason, Ruth Hennessy and Whitney Raymond play in it. The photography is acceptable.

"THE TWO MERCHANTS" (Edison), May 14.—A rural farce by Charles M. Seay that kept the attention interested, but made not a great deal of laughter. It is played by a large cast, but no one in it is especially worthy of mention; it gave no one a chance to be truly funny. The photography is fair. As an offering, it goes well with the majority of pictures today.

"TWO HEARTS THAT BEAT AS ONE" (Vitagraph), May 14.—The two hearts beat in the breasts of James Lackaye and Hughie Mack, who both love Lillian Walker, a society girl with an absent sweetheart of her own. There were one or two times when the laughter was at least loud. The whole idea is not one to appeal to cultivated people and there is a touch or two, as when the two fat men sit down with the girl in a hammock and break it down, that were made expressly for the gallery. The photography is fair. It is a commercial picture made rather than written by Mrs. Breuil and produced by Bert Angeles. The photography is fair.

"MAN'S GREED FOR GOLD" (Kalem), May 14.—A commonplace offering that was not very skillfully written, nor very cleverly acted. It is somewhat dull, but as usual with pictures of this make, it has some pretty scenes.

Independent

"TONY, THE TENOR" (Pilot), May 15.—The story is of an iron-worker with a tenor voice. An impresario hearing him gives him a tryout and offers him $200 a week. Tony is prevailed upon to give up the prospects of a musical career and go back to Italy. A woman fears she may lose him should he be successful. The story is hardly convincing.

"THE THREE COMRADES" (Great Northern), May 17.—Fine military-domestic drama, embellished by Great Northern photography. There is one feature of Great Northern military stories is marked. The actors who portray soldier life do it convincingly. Beyond question they have had military training. It is demonstrated in the snap, the ginger, in every move. There is a bit showing cavalry maneuvers, of horses plunging into and swimming a stream, which will be of great interest. The story easily carries on its dramatic worth aside from the spectacular.

"BILLY PLAYS POKER" (Gem), May 20.—This is a full reel of Billy Quirk. Billy gets tangled up in a poker game on a train; before he gets through he has left nothing but his shoes and underwear. He has several adventures in a barrel, which, by the way, is a little too much in evidence. The picture is not strong comedy.

"HE LOVES TO WATCH THE FLIGHT OF TIME" (Eclair), May 18.—Another of the Newlywed series, not quite so interesting to a film man as some of its predecessors. It is plain that the caricaturist is "getting wise." No longer does he always draw each picture. The scene does not always "move." Some views are of groups which are stationary. However, the novelty is there.

"THE CUTTLEFISH" (Eclair), May 18.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this very interesting scientific.

"LOVE'S MONOGRAM" (Ryno), May 26.—In this drama of the sea coast we have the old familiar lapse of memory, in this case due to a near drowning. The story is not strong.

"GOOD FOR EVIL" (Victor), May 23.—The Reliance Company once sent out a picture called "The Angel," it was released July 15, 1910, that was very much like this, which has the same leading woman, Gertrude Robinson. Yet this offering is commendable, it will be liked by most and very few will remember the former one, which was not a success. It was produced by James Kirkwood, who plays the role of a miserly storekeeper, who employs Miss Robinson as his servant. In the former picture, she came from an institution; in this, her sister brings her. In the former picture there were several children, in this but one. The outcome of the situation is very much the same in both cases. Bennet Musson is the author; the similarity might perhaps have been purely accidental; but it is very striking.

"THE TRIFLER" (Rex), May 25.—A rather weak offering for the Rex people; perhaps the weakest by them we have ever seen. It is most unconvincingly written, the letters that pass in it are without any realism; it doesn't excite the spectator's sympathy.

"SHE NEVER KNEW" (Imp), May 22.—Perhaps the theme is old; but the picture is full of freshness nevertheless. The story, telling of a mother who was kept from knowing that her son had been condemned to die, and who died just before he was hanged, has been so carefully and intelligently produced and is so full of suggestions of real humanity that it touches the heart. It is solemn; but it is edifying. There is nothing rough or the least bit vulgar in it; it appeals to intelligence by its truth, while it touches human feelings tenderly. The producer, Herbert Brenon, probably deserves more credit than the author, W. H. Swanson, though both have done well. William Shea, as the condemned son, and Jane Fearnly, as his sister, play the leads. The mother is very well drawn too. The last fifty feet is anti-climax. The picture builds up to the end so strongly that, to show coldly what happens, is by comparison, crude; it should have ended where the son is told that his mother is dead. It makes a very desirable offering for any occasion where a solemn picture would be liked.

"WHERE WITS WIN" (Frontier), May 24.—A farce picture set in interesting backgrounds in New Mexico and giving us burlesque pictures of some European aristocrats and American newly rich folks. It will make laughter for it is brisk and full of rough and tumble action. It makes much of what may be called "funny faces." Photography is clear.

"BE IT EVER SO HUMBLE" (Nestor), May 30.—A dull offering, giving old stuff with little of true humanity to make it engage us freshly. The photography is clear enough, but lacks quality.

"JUST FOR LUCK" (Imp), May 24.—There are laughs in this extravagant farce which was made in Europe. There is a superstition that if one rubs the hump of a hunchback he will get luck. The dwarf found it worth money and for a consideration let several rub his back; but he had a "phoney" hump and it worked backward. The offering is light and will give entertainment.

"HY MAYER, HIS MAGIC HAND" (Imp), May 24.—On the same reel is this, in the well known cartoon series, and it is surely funny. A good offering.

"HEARTS AND CROSSES" (Eclair), May 25.—This story, by O. Henry, makes a good offering in pictures. It is a love story of the cattle country and has a certain amount of freshness. It is smoothly produced and naturally acted. The photography is clear. It will make an acceptable offering.

"ANARADHAPURA, THE BIRTHPLACE OF BUDDHISM" (Eclair), May 24.—A beautiful, hand-colored film showing the old temples of that part of India where the great religious teacher, Buddah, meditated his formulas and maxims. It is an offering of exceptional merit. The two on this film go very well together. The first is a simple love story, at which no one could take offense, and this one is full of instruction.

"UNDER FIRE" (Bison-101), May 24.—A Civil War story with two boys in the leads. It has some good, effective situations and it is well acted; also there are some pretty scenes. In the first reel, it gains a situation at the expense of truth. It makes its own code of military ethics and law and asks our sympathy for a man who leaves a field of battle on the score of his purpose, to save a dear friend who has become panic stricken and run away. The ending episode is surely effective, at least when we forget its basis. Many of the characters are attractive; many of its scenes are very beautiful.

"BILLY'S ADVENTURE" (Gem), May 13.—A farcical love story featuring Billy as a lover not acceptable to Dad. He does a clever female impersonation.

"CHEATING" (Powers), May 28.—A farcical love story of four girls. They make a compact not to look at a man and then break it. It is pretty well photographed. The players are in themselves pleasing.

"THE STARS AND STRIPES FOREVER" (Bison-101), May 20.—This the first of the Philippine series and it will bring a fresh atmosphere, although it tells not a strictly new story, being a version of the girl spy tale. But this girl spy is exceptional; she is a Cleopatra like creature, played extremely well by Victoria Forde. She has given to this woman a conventional character, but has made her truly alive. The story turns on her failure to get information to the Filipinos at a critical moment. The hero, a captain of the United States army, is not doped, because a woman whom he had once saved from a brute manages to warn him. Then comes the battle scenes which are surely good. The creeping up of the Philippine advance guard on the American sentries was typical, but was spoiled a bit by the unusual carelessness of the Americans; it wasn't true of American soldiers in an enemy's country. The picture was not take in the Philiopines, but gets along very well notwithstanding. It interests through both of its two reels and makes a good offering, one that will be liked. The photography is good.

"THE CAP OF DESTINY" (Rex), May 15.—Here is good drama made by the Smalleys. The "cap" is a distinctive style of headgear used by a band of crooks to identify the members and to enable a thief to pass his booty on to a fellow member. There is some excellent gang stuff and good acting. Also there is an infant who materially contributes to the success of the picture.

"TOPLITSKY & COMPANY" (Keystone), May 26.—This is a knockabout comedy, in which one Jew clothing merchant falls in love with his partner's wife. A live bear appears in the latter part of the film and some scenes are taken in a bath house. The humor, however, does not come up very strongly.

"THE CURATE'S OUTING" (Powers), May 21.—There are a "bunch" of kids in this picture that was produced by H. C. Mathews; but there is very little of the poetry usually found in pictures by that clever director. The curate is a clown and is not truly funny. The photography is clear.

"RUNA AND THE BLACK HAND" (Reliance), May 24.—A story of a little girl whose nose was "out of joint" when the new baby came. She got her hand in some black paint on a park bench and unconsciously left a black imprint on the nurse's dress. When the baby disappeared it was thought the black hand had made away with it. Well pictured and a pretty little story.

"LONDON ASSURANCE" (Reliance), May 19.—A reproduction of the famous old English comedy of 1841, with E P. Sullivan as Sir Roger de Coverley; Irving Cummings as Dazzle; Miss De Lespine as Lady Gay, and Ethel Phillips as the young heiress. Full of pretty scenes, including a fox hunt; the costuming is also good. The plot in this is rather hurried and we think this might have been offered to better advantage in two reels. However, it is very attractive as it is.

"THE MASTER CRACKSMAN" (Reliance), May 28.—This two-reel film story, written by Stephen Allen Reynolds, concerns an old inventor and his son, the latter represented by Irving Cummings. The inventor is robbed by the man who bought his burglar alarm. The son, for purposes of revenge, hires out to the safe manufacturer under an assumed name and drills open the vaults, to force him to give his father justice. The detective, who finally apprehends him and his sweetheart in their safe breaking, makes the manufacturer give both father and son a square deal. The whole story is rather improbable and rather doubtful from an ethical standpoint. It is well acted and the photography is good.

"ASHES OF THREE" (American), May 26.—A new and pleasing two-reel production. The conception shows imagination and good direction. Warren Kerrigan appears as the outcast, whose manhood has as yet been unawakened. The story centers about the "Terror of the Mountains," a well-assumed character, who has taken many lives and always eludes capture. The outcast comes upon the grieving mother, whose son has been shot. She shows the outcast the first kindness he has ever known and this makes a man of him. He goes out after the terror, unassisted, and brings him in after a hard battle. Strong and original in motive and excellently acted.

"THE BOOMERANG" (Kay-Bee), June 13.—A strong three-reel war subject. In the first reel we see the young officer wooing the Colonel's daughter in order to gain promotion. They are married, without the father's knowledge, but the husband is promoted. He deserts his wife before their child is born. Twenty years elapse and the son becomes a soldier and a spy. Father and son meet in the midst of warfare, the son being the "boomerang" sent to punish his father for his early sins. The war scenes are vivid and picturesque, particularly the one where the bridge is blown up. Later the father and grandfather meet in a fatal duel. A strong war offering.

"CARMEN" (Thanhouser), May 27.—A three-reel version of the famous stage production. Marguerite Snow appears as Carmen, William Garwood as Jose and William Russell as the toreador. All of the usual scenes are given, including the gypsy camp, smuggling, retreat, cigar factory, bull fight, etc. The costuming is carefully attended to and on the whole the production is a very creditable one. There is perhaps not quite so much of the true Spanish fire as might be expected in the characterizations, but, accompanied by the operatic score of Carmen, this ought to prove very pleasing.

"HER BIG STORY" (American), May 31.—A newspaper story by Richard Washburn Child. This is not a powerful photoplay, but clean-cut and holds the interest well. Warren Kerrigan and Jack Richardson appear and the part of the girl reporter is well assumed. Graft is the keynote of the story, which is quite entertaining.

"ON THE BORDER" (American), May 29.—The scenes in this are taken for the most part in a Mexican dance hall. Two men strive for a woman's love and one of them puts poison in his rival's liquor. The photography and setting are good, but the story is not very strong.

"THE SPIRIT OF THE FLAG" (Bison), June 3.—This is a lively two-reel story of the Philippines. Though taken in California the setting carries a strong atmosphere of the islands. Pauline Bush and Jessalyn Van Trump make their first appearance with the Bison company, the former as the American school teacher and the latter as Bonita, a native girl. The hero is a tall young fellow of prepossessing appearance; who looks the part of a soldier of fortune acceptably. Historically this offering is probably at fault, as there were no American school teachers in the Philippines at the time there was fighting between the Spanish and American troops. The photography in this is good and the action stirring.

"A DOUBLE SACRIFICE" (Nestor), May 28.—Good photography makes the first and strongest appeal in this story of twin brothers. The story moves along in a very natural, though somewhat conventional way. Jim leaves home and returns later out of funds. His invalid brother gives up both his sweetheart and his money to Jim. The latter is suspected of theft, but cleared when his brother's sacrifice is made known. Nicely acted and quite satisfactory as an offering.

"TOODLEUMS" (Crystal), May 25.—A love affair in which a dog becomes laughably entangled. Natural and contains several good humorous situations.

"SUPPER FOR THREE" (Crystal), May 25.—Quite an amusing series of events follow the loss of Wilkins' pocketbook. To procure a meal he and his friend dress a man up in woman's clothes, but Wilkins' wife appears at the restaurant and creates trouble. This, with the above rounds out a very creditable reel.

"ON CUPID'S HIGHWAY" (Nestor), May 26.—One loses count of the eloping couples in this pleasing little comedy. It is well handled and has considerable tone to it. The action centers about an English lord, who agrees to marry a girl for her money. Not very new, but a theme of perennial interest when well handled, as in this instance.

"THE STAGE DRIVER'S CHIVALRY" (Frontier), May 22.—The photography in this varies considerably; some of it is quite dim. The discharged stage driver agrees to help rob his own stage coach, but later has a change of heart, because of a girl passenger. The scenes taken inside the jolting vehicle are novel, and the latter part of the story quite entertaining.

"ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 62" (Universal), May 14.—A number of average interest, showing President Wilson in New Jersey, and practice at Fort Slocum, the annual Suffragette parade, carnival at Basel, Switzerland, unveiling of the Carl Schurz monument, etc.

"THE TWINS (Imp), May 19.—Bud Ross appears in a dual role in this offering, representing at the same time two married men living on opposite sides of the hall, being twin brothers. The situations are farcical and only passably amusing. Some good double exposure photography is shown, but the complications are not sufficiently new to be very notable.

"THUS SAITH THE LORD" (Eclair), May 21.—This biblical two-reel story, beginning with the parable of the wise and foolish virgins, and closing with scenes illustrating the Lord's Prayer, is an attractive offering. The scenes are all in good taste and convey a certain spiritual message, without flagrant attempts at sensation. We see the Savior talking with His disciples in a rocky vale, and the production begins and ends with this situation. The artistic features of the offering are many, particularly the woodland dances of the foolish virgins. Altogether, while this is in no way powerful, it is new enough in theme and treatment to make a very good feature offering. A pleasing number.

"THE BOOB" (Rex), June 1.—This sort of a film will make good just as long as there are live actors like Robert Leonard to come along and "put the punch in it." He enacts for us here, in a most enjoyable way, the part of the country bumpkin who comes to the city and makes aunty very much ashamed of him by falling in love with the maid and in various other ways. Later he goes home and helps his father unload their farm on a "city jay." When he returns he marries the maid and makes aunty very miserable. Good comedy, well acted.

"THE GANGSTERS" (Keystone), May 29.—Fred Mace appears as the leader of a gang of toughs, who make things lively for the police force. A favorite pastime of the gang is stripping trousers from the members of the force. This renders the film a little rough for presentation in some houses. There are humorous moments, but the film does not show the company at its best.

"WHY 'BABE' LEFT HOME" (Thanhouser), May 18.—The leading character in this is a big, overgrown boy, who leaves home and goes to the city for work. He is employed by a restaurant to carry a sign advertising the place as the best one at which to eat. He has an enormous appetite and attracts much trade to the restaurant, but is broken hearted when the waitress he loves marries another. Fairly amusing.

"IN THEIR HOUR OF NEED" (Thanhouser), May 23.—Here is a new turn in the story of the old minister, whose place has been taken by a younger man. Yellow fever enters the town and the young minister deserts. But the old pastor, learning of the situation, returns and faces the plague. The young doctor, in love with the minister's daughter, shares in the honors. This makes an absorbing story and one well worth seeing.

"A BUSINESS WOMAN" (Thanhouser), May 20.—Mrs. Marsden here gives us a very good characterization as a capable woman in charge of her own factory. Her children, a boy and girl, leave her to go to the city, but they are glad to return when she goes to the city to help them out of their troubles. A light idea, nicely treated.

PICTURES IN INDIA.

In Bombay, India, there are five picture and vaudeville theaters and four exclusive picture houses. The shows begin at 6:30 p. m. and run until midnight. Admissions range from 95 cents in the picture and vaudeville houses, down as low as 4 cents in the straight picture house. All theaters advertise heavily, both in the newspapers and on billboards. The pictures principally used come from Pathe Freres, with an occasional Edison. At Rangoon, the Alhambra and Star theaters show Edison, Pathe, Gaumont and a few others. The shows run from 9:30 until 12, and from 16 cents to $1.00 is charged for admission. Films are obtained from the Singapore agency of Pathe Freres.

Letters to the Editor.

Wants More Educationals.

Editor Moving Picture World, New York City.

Dear Sir:—I wish to suggest that you give us more dope on the educational value of pictures, in the educational department of The World. I use every line you publish in the daily paper here and have been doing it for the past six months.

The only way in the world to reach a lot of the people is by driving home the educational value of the picture. Nearly everybody likes moving pictures. Some have never realized their possibilities because they think you cannot get anything that is good for the low price of admission.

We cater to the best people in this town and we get them, too. They pay us ten cents every day in the week, but we give them a perfectly ventilated house, we keep it absolutely clean and sanitary, and if any one else can get a better picture on the curtain, I would go miles to see it.

Very truly yours,

Educate the Public on Censorship.

Dear Sir:—Since my experience with carrying on a city election in this city and successfully opening Sunday shows, I find that most of the opposition to any part of the motion picture business comes from people who are not well informed. It has occurred to me that one of the best means of combating opposition would be for the picture theaters over the country generally to start an educational campaign whereby the public could be informed as to how moving pictures were censored and who composed the National Board of Censorship. I believe that if every moving picture theater in the country would run a slide during every show on which was displayed the names of the ten societies composing the National Board of Censorship, it would be one of the greatest helps to the business generally. I know from experience that this information should be in the hands of every lawmaker before he is swayed by some narrow-minded fault finder.

Respectfully yours,

J. E. Hipple,

Where Are the Manufacturers and Exchangemen?

Editor Moving Picture World.

Dear Sir:—Despite the fact that there are numerous important bills affecting motion picture business throughout before the legislature of this State, it is nothing short of wonderful, not to say surprising, at the continued apathy of the manufacturers and exchange men with regard to same.

At a recent public hearing of the Senate Codes Committee at Albany, with reference to the Sunday closing bill, not a single member or representative of any manufacturer, exchange or feature film company appeared to protest against the same becoming a law.

The churches and reformers in favor of having this bill become a law were very ably represented and were it not for a mere handful of exhibitors, this Senatorial Committee must surely have been under the impression that the motion picture business of the State had no protest to make against the bill.

At a recent hearing of the Aldermanic Committee in this city, with reference to several motion picture bills, including one on public censorship, again not a soul appeared to represent the motion picture manufacturers or exchanges.

On the other hand, Canon Chase and a retinue of lesser church dignitaries and reformers presented argument after argument why these bills should be enacted into ordinances. In view of the fact that public censorship would hit directly at the manufacturers, it seems to me that they, by virtue of their non-interest, might advocate such a course. At this hearing it was the exhibitors again who appeared to defend the business.

But how long will the exhibitor assume the entire burden. What a splendid showing the motion picture industry would make if aligned with each other, shoulder to shoulder, were the manufacturer, exchangemen, feature film people and exhibitors. What chance would adverse legislation have in the face of such odds? What a detriment to wildcat reformers and legislators who constantly frame bills that affect a business they are thoroughly unfamiliar with. What a splendid thing for the industry on the whole.

On the other hand, with the continued apathy to attacks, without resentment, with the defamation of the business by certain sensational newspapers without refutation, the motion picture business will never rise above the level of these unjust criticisms and attacks.

Wake up! manufacturers, wake up! exchanges, wake up! feature film men, and help the exhibitor, and then altogether a veritable Gibraltar for the good of the most educating business in the world, put some of these would the sponsors for the public morals out of business. Let one for all, and all for one, be the slogan.

Very truly yours,

William Branot,

Clinton Court Theater, New York.

Far Above the Others.

Dear Sir:—I would not be without The World as I consider it far above any trade paper on the market. It is a few years since I have sent you any dope on the exhibiting and advertising subject, but believe me, I never fail to read the section on Advertising for Exhibitors. I am enclosing a folder that I got out some time ago which more than paid for itself as I mailed out close to a thousand and handed out another thousand to my patrons as they left the theater after each performance. I am now trying out a new scheme in the daily newspaper which I have entitled "Who's Who in Filmdom?" giving a short write-up on the players' personalities, these write-ups are changed daily, and at the end of each article I put the following questions: "Do you know where to see 'so-and-so'?" etc.; now I only started this last week and so far my patrons say it's very interesting matter and they feel as if they were reading some news about one of their friends and I feel that it is going to be a success as it will get the public more familiar with the actors and film makers than anything I have done in the past, and later, I am going to get up about twenty-five cuts of the players and have a guessing contest as to who the cut in the newspaper represents.

Wishing you continued success with The World, I am, with best wishes

Yours very truly,

S. A. Lambert,

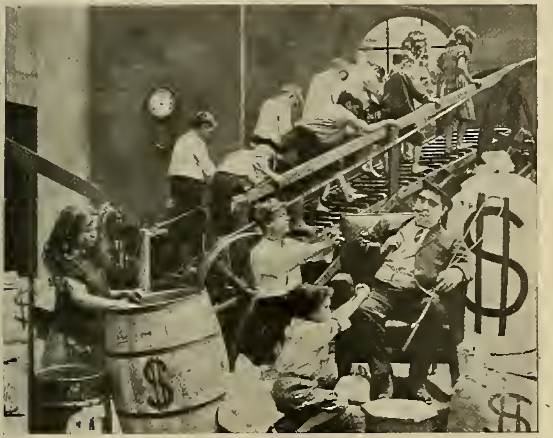
"Why?"

The Latest Eclair Special Is One of the Most Sensational of Pictures.

By H. C. Judson.

IT is not within the province of a picture reviewer to discuss politics from his own viewpoint; yet it is very important for the exhibitor to take such things very carefully into consideration; for religion and politics mean much to his patrons. An offering that one neighborhood would like, on account of its political color, might irritate another neighborhood. In this case, we have a picture that we dare not wholly commend as a good offering for all kinds of audiences; but we shall give as far as possible a colorless description of what there is in it and let the exhibitor judge for himself. One thing we can say, is that it was not made cheaply and, while not entirely perfect in composition nor wholly clear, in its scenes it is very skillfully made.

It asks the question "Why?—Why are these things?" Why do we have children at hard labor? Why do we have men who gamble at the race track? Why are trains run so fast that fatal accidents occur? Why does capital sit ruthlessly at dinner with the Church (in the person of a priest) and Justice (in the person of a judge), and with the army, while labor is outside starving? Before we go further, it must be pointed out that the scenes that symbolically ask these questions of the picture's hero are only dreams. He has been living a drunken, careless life and makes, in a dream, a journey through the world. The object of his experiences is to convert him and make him willing to work for others unselfishly.



Scene from "Why" (Eclair).

He carries a revolver and when he finds children at work on the treadmill he shoots the taskmaster who, at once, turns into a bag of gold to show that it is impossible to kill capital, for gold is a senseless thing. He, too, is invited to come with capital to dinner and, while they are feasting, the laboring men begin to throw stones in through the window and finally break in and demand a seat at the table. The capitalists are at first frightened; but, rallied by the generals, they shoot the people down, who fall beside the table.

Following this comes the most sensational picture we have ever seen; it is nothing else than the burning of the Woolworth building and all the other buildings in the lower part of Manhattan Island. They are shown all as going up in red fire and it is, indeed, a tremendous spectacle. It is such as will excite all who see it; it will get into their blood, especially if they are sensitive, and they will remember it. If they forget the story of the film, they will surely remember this scene.

Yet we can not say that the picture teaches anarchy. In the first place it is only a dream. There are three reels and three times the dreamer is shown as sitting in his room and, by a fading away process, as going forth in his dream. Yet the story is far from being sharply defined; most spectators will only see its scenes—they are so much stronger than the story. Some spectators may lose the meaning of the story altogether and take the scenes for what they stand for by themselves, take them as pictures of life as it is. Now they are not true. There is nothing deep in the picture; every thing has been superficially seen and pictured in a cursory way. It is far from being a philosophical study; yet it is all as tremendous as passion can make it and it will call to passion rather than to thought. Things are bad enough, but they are not as this picture shows them. There is much that is charming in the great majority of the scenes. The photography is full of merit. Where such an offering as this would go at all it will go strongly.

FULLER SELLING GARDNER PICTURES.

Charles L. Fuller, of the Fuller Company, is elated over the fact that the Helen Gardner Picture Players have signed a contract with his company to distribute their product. Mr. Fuller was associated intimately with Miss Gardner's company when it was first organized, and now that he is to have the whole product and the whole field of the world in which to exploit it, he is delighted. "I beleive," said Mr. Fuller, "that the work that is now being done by Miss Gardner and Mr. Gaskill in their new studio at Tappan will not only equal the artistry and beauty of Cleopatra, but will be superior to that wonderful production. With only two page advertisements in the Moving Picture World, I have already sold over a third of the good territory in the United States, as that too, at advanced prices. After "The Wife of Cain," we shall have a big production—like Cleopatra. Hamlet will be done in five thousand feet, but it will be preceded by several hundred feet of intimate pictures of Miss Gardner and the life about the studio at Tappan. "This studio, by the way," added Mr. Fuller, "is the most picturesque place devoted to pictures in all the world."

Charles L. Fuller.

Mr. Fuller is planning a trip to Europe within a few weeks to look after the affairs of his company across the pond.

WILL HICKEY HOME FOR A SPELL.

The auburn haired, rosy cheeked, 200 pound general manager of the London Kinemacolor business, Mr. Wm. H. Hickey, arrived in New York on the S. S. Adriatic, May 17. He is supposed to have returned on a business trip but he confessed that ten months away from God's country was about as much as he could stand at one sitting. After six weeks of Broadway and home cooking he thinks that he can return to London with sufficient fortitude to last another ten months.

A Three-Reel Ambrosio Feature that Gets Better in the Third Reel.

Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman.

THERE is a reserve force in this story that is carefully economized until the "cycological" moment. In a way it reminds one of a three-round prize fight, wherein the principals "stall" for the first two rounds and then mix it up in the third round with fireworks and a knockout, and everybody satisfied. In this picture the punches and thrills are saved until the last reel, when they break forth in all their fury. The air is filled with vulture feathers, figuratively speaking, and when they blow away the "Vulture" is a dead bird.

There are probably good reasons why a picture should have all of its strength at the end. Maybe that is one of the fine points of motion picture playwrighting, but in that case it wouldn't be safe to expend much more than two reels in preparation for a finishing reel which contains the kernel of the nut. "In the Claws of the Vulture," though admirably done in many respects, is a little slow in getting down to business, but when it does, there is enough of the good old melodramatic action to make up for any previous lack of it. Perhaps that is the better way. Who is to be the judge? The well known public, of course. Therefore we pause for judgment.

Scene from "In the Claws of the Vulture" (Ambrosio).

There is a good idea underlying the story; that of a crook bringing about a marriage of convenience for a commission and then having to resort to crooked means to collect his fee. The "Vulture" is a gentleman burglar with a rendezvous equipped for his work like a well regulated business establishment. A kind of clearing house or brokerage for negotiable incriminating papers. There are telephone connections, telegraphing facilities, clipping bureau service, signal system, panel doors and motor cars. The Vulture is a thorough business man in his particular line. He reads a clipping of the bankruptcy of a young nobleman. Another clipping tells him of the social aspirations of a parvenu heiress. These two clippings form the basis for one of his deals. He sends for the young nobleman and agrees to bring about his marriage to the heiress for a stipulated sum. The proposition is accepted and the Vulture arranges matters so well that the nobleman and the heiress are finally married.

After the marriage the young nobleman does not see why he should pay the Vulture his fee, and ignores his demands. This enrages the latter and he sets his crew of bandits and highbinders on the track of the nobleman, and brings into play every crooked means at his disposal to ruin the ungrateful bridegroom. The plan is to capture the heiress and hold her for ransom. While the crooks are closing about the country retreat of the wife, her husband in the city hears of it. In desperation he gets an aviator to take him to the scene of the intended abduction. This is a very exciting part of the picture. It is well done and entirely logical. The aeroplane passes the Vulture's automobile on the road and the husband barricades the house and puts up a great fight when the gang arrives. We felt rather sorry that the playwright should have made the nobleman "croak" the Vulture, because the deal was perfectly legitimate. The Vulture had more of a right to "croak" the nobleman than the nobleman had to "croak" him. The acting of the leads is somewhat stereotyped, but in spite of this the picture has the punch and will make a good feature.

An American in Berlin.

J. J. Rosenthal Tells of A. H. Wood's Picture Plans for Germany. Fourteen houses in August.

J. J. Rosenthal, one of the shrewdest theatrical men in America, went over to Berlin recently on a hurry call from Al. H. Woods, and returned last week to tell of the American manager's plans for Germany.

"Two of the six Berlin houses Mr. Woods has on lease are already open," he announced, "and in August, when the regular theatrical season commences there will be six houses in Berlin and others in Hamburg, Dresden, Leipzig, Bremen, Hanover, Frankfort and Cologne.

"All of these houses will be regular theaters, mostly those formerly given over to dramatic performances. This, in itself, is something unusual in Germany where most of the picture theaters are up on the third or fourth floors. The Grosse Berlin, renamed the Cines Palast, will seat 2500 and at present is playing to about 4500 marks a night with 'Quo Vadis,' giving two performances nightly but no matinees. The Cines Nollendorf, the former Nollendorf theater, is doing about as well with the same attraction. In each house there is an orchestra of about twenty-five men and a full line of effects.

"'Quo Vadis' is creating a furore in Berlin though it has been very badly mutilated by the Censor, who doesn't seem to offer much objection to the risque or even the immoral, but who strenuously objects to fights or violence. You can imagine what happened to 'Quo Vadis.'

"These are the only houses yet open, but the others will swing into line in August with a five act program of vaudeville and the best feature pictures of American and European production. The features will be largely those produced by the Cines company, but not all, by any means.

"The vaudeville will be a big attraction, for in spite of its size Berlin boasts only one real vaudeville theater, the world-famous Wintergarden where only 'dumb' acts can be shown, since the vast auditorium does not permit the use of talking acts.

"In addition to the theaters mentioned above there are the Cines Apollo, the Rose, the Pottsdam and the Wilhelmstat.

"At all the houses the prices will range from 50 pfennig (about twelve cents) to two marks, or forty-eight cents, exclusive of the Berlin tax on tickets which is collected by the police. All tickets in Berlin are supplied by the police and the unsold reserved seats are counted precisely as the theater treasurer here counts the 'deadwood.' This tax applies only in Berlin. The Palast has its lobby in Charlottenberg, a suburb, but the auditorium is in Berlin proper, so the tax must be collected, though a house directly across the street pays no tax because it is wholly across the line.

"The police also control the posting of bills. There are no bill-posters in Berlin as we understand the term, and when I wanted to make use of some eight sheets I had I could find no boards. I had some made and hired a couple of paper hangers to put the paper up, but before they were displayed someone advised me that I see the President of the Police. I went to him and had a hard time convincing him that it was all right, but in the end I secured his permission to show the bills for six days, three days before the opening and three days immediately after. Then the bills had to be taken in. The small announcements on the kiosks are the popular form of advertising.

"It looks to me as though Mr. Woods had opened a gold mine. From the patronage already enjoyed and from the looks of the field, pictures and vaudeville on the ground floor instead of some upstairs theater or narrow shop (and I only saw one store theater in Berlin), will make a sensation and bring to the houses the biggest sort of business. After the formal opening, runs probably will be abandoned and a weekly change of the picture will be made the same as the acts.

"There is no apparent opposition on the part of the German managers, though the Union company proposed a partnership. That is about the only large company handling pictures in Germany and they have only store shows and kilos, as the upstairs houses are called.

"I might add that Mr. Woods controls the Life Target for America. This is the device shown at the recent exposition in London in which a moving figure is shot at. A demonstration will be given very shortly.

"Strange as it may seem, I think that the American ragtime is going to help greatly in assuring a welcome to the American amusement caterer. They are ragtime mad in England and on the continent, and the ragtime craze has caused a change of feeling toward all forms of amusement."

"Kelly From the Emerald Isle"

Barney Gilmore Plays His Well-known Role, "Kelly," for the Solax Camera.

H. C. Judson.

A TOUCH of Erin has saved many a show in all kinds of places. This well known melodrama, by Mrs. Barney Gilmore, in which Barney Gilmore, himself, plays the titular role, ably supported by Blanche Cornwall, as Sheilah McGuire and others of the Solax stock company, will surely furnish the touch desired. The play, as to its plot and qualities, has been seen too often to need a re-telling of the story by us. We believe that all who have enjoyed it on the stage will like this picture of it very much; for Madame Blache, producing it out of doors, has been able to give convincing touches of realism, impossible before the footlights and has also given several sensational things, like the escape of Kelly and Sheilah over the cliff, a feat that will make the audience wonder how the players dared so risk their lives.

Scene from "Kelly from the Emerald Isle" (Solax).

One scene is sure to capture everybody; it is the wake of old man McGuire who had been shot by the villain, Doolin, played by Joseph Levering. Doolin, it will be remembered, jealous of Sheilah's love for Kelly, has stolen his gun and with it succeeds in getting him arrested for murder. With the wake in full swing and everybody on the border land between sorrow and joy, McGuire comes out of his stooper. The wake now turns into a dance with the piper there and everybody's feet in tune for a spirited hornpipe. The old man wasn't really dead and there had been no murder after all, but Kelly had by that time escaped with Sheilah's aid, and was on his way to America, towed away on the same ship with Doolin and both on the same errand, each going to prove himself Kelly and so get the fortune left in Serino, Nevada, by Kelly's uncle. The villain has the papers, but the hero finds this and manages to secure them from him, for a time. But the villain would have ended safely had it not been for the brave heroine who follows.

We find glimpses of the underworld in America; find the hero tied to the rails and all but run over by a fast train; see him captured by Doolin and his two thugs and left tied near a keg of dynamite toward which the fire in a fuse is quickly creeping. But, in the end, all the resources of the villains and all their desperate expedients are frustrated and brought to nought by the heroine who always has her wits about her and never hesitates when there is work to do.

All the characters (always excepting the villains) will make a strong appeal. The bluff, good natured bigness of Barney Gilmore, himself, is full of suggestion of an honest, true heart in his brawny chest. It is just the big arms of him that will fit around the neck of a pretty colleen, like Sheilah. And Sheilah, too, with her black curls and pretty coy ways, fits into the story with distinct charm. The gallery will be attracted by her. The photography is excellent throughout.

Kilburn, London, is shortly to possess the largest moving picture theater in Great Britain, if not in the world. Accommodation will be provided for 8,000 people.

RELIANCE STUDIO NOTES.

Irving Cummings has made his debut as an author, having written "Italian Love," the Reliance release of June 2nd in which he also played the lead.

Rosemary Theby, who has been playing leading roles with the Vitagraph for the past two years, has signed a contract with J. V. Ritchey whereby she will appear in Reliance films beginning at an early date.

Irene Howley will be seen playing opposite Irving Cummings in "The Master Cracksman," released in two reels on May 31st. Stephen Allen Reynolds is the author of the drama which appeared as a magazine story before it was "picturized" under Oscar C. Apfel's direction.

Allen Hale has been engaged to appear exclusively in Reliance films, having recently returned from Jacksonville, Florida, where he was playing leading roles for the Majestic. Ethel Phillips, Runa Hodges, Clifford Saums and Harry Spingler have also been signed under the Reliance banner.

The first Reliance picture that will introduce Fritizi Brunette under her new management will be released on June 11th under the title of "Annie Laurie." Miss Brunette followed Florence Lawrence at the Victor studio before joining the Reliance Stock Company.

Another new acquisition by Manager J. V. Ritchey is the well-known leading man, Crane Wilbur, who has been featured in Pathe releases, probably best remembered by his work in "The Compact." Crane Wilbur starts work at the Reliance studio at an early date, as also does Rosemary Theby, the new Reliance leading lady. Miss Theby attracted Mr. Ritchey's attention by her interpretation of "The Snake" in the Vitagraph production of "The Reincarnation of Karma."

At Lenox Oval, New York City, on Saturday afternoon, the Reliance Baseball Team crossed bats with the Crystal Film Company's team for nine exciting innings. Miss Edgena De Lespine, stood in the pitcher's box and threw the first ball square across the plate. She was cheered to the echo. Irving Cummings who is the captain of the Reliance team scored the first run and piloted his men to victory by a score of ten to four.

The baseball grounds at the Subway entrance of 145th St., and Lenox Ave., known as Lenox Oval, has been leased for the season by the Reliance Baseball Team. Hopp Hadley, advertising manager for the Reliance, is manager of the team and has booked the following games: May 24th, Powers. May 31st, open. June 7th, Kinemacolor. June 14th, Eclair. June 21st, Pathe. June 20th, Solax—all at Lenox Oval.

VACATION FOR KINEMACOLOR PLAYERS.

As a reward for one year's solid work, and also because they have piled up more negatives than the factory can print in that time, the Kinemacolor stock companies are to be given a month's vacation. "Our factory facilities are entirely inadequate to keep up with the demand from our newly opened offices, and foreign business," said President Brock, of the Kinemacolor Company of America. We have decided to close down our dramatic companies for a period of four weeks to give the factory a chance to catch up with their output.

"Our business has been growing literally by leaps and bounds. When we established our factory at Whitestone, L. I., we thought it would be at least two years before business reached a point where we now find it. We have a day and a night shift working, and hope to relieve the congestion in a few weeks. At the same time we are figuring on a new factory. We have several very fine sites under consideration, and before fall hope to have in operation a commodious, fireproof factory that will take care of our output for a long time to come. Meanwhile, we have a fine series of subjects selected to be produced as soon as our dramatic companies are reassembled."

COBB MOTION PICTURE BUREAU.

C. Lang Cobb, Jr., and Agnes Egan Cobb, have formed the Cobb Motion Picture Bureau, which will conduct a general film brokerage business and handle feature films. Mr. Cobb is president of the new concern and Agnes Egan Cobb is treasurer and manager, and the practical head of the business. Mr. Cobb will retain his connection with the Ramo Film Company, of which he is publicity and sales manager. Offices have been taken on the seventh floor of the Columbia Theater building.

Gene Gauntier Players Return

After Twenty Weeks in the Sunny South the Company Prepares to Take Up Work in New York.

MISS GENE GAUNTIER and her company of players arrived in New York from Jacksonville on May 11. Director Sidney Olcott, who was operated on for appendicitis on May 4, remained behind for a few weeks in order to fully regain his strength. Mr. Olcott is being entertained at the home of one of the many friends made by the members of the company in their sojourns in Jacksonville. In a great mansion of the famous Colonial style, surrounded by broad piazzas, the well-known director is taking life easy and enjoying his first vacation in years. During his incapacity Jack J. Clark assumed charge of the company. For a few days there was plenty to do. While the members of the Gauntier players were under the impression that practically all the work had been cleared up and that there remained only a few scenes to make, a dispatch from New York undeceived them. It was discovered that it was necessary to retake fourteen scenes. There was no script nearer than New York, and the scenes had to be made from memory. A running of the completed film in New York this week proved that no mistake had been made.

Scene from "On the Firing Line."

A World man had a chat a few days ago with Miss Gauntier and Mr. Clark. At present they are negotiating for a studio in which there will be sufficient capacity for the staging of the class of pictures they desire to make. "We have had twenty weeks in Jacksonville," said Mr. Clark, "and have had a very successful season. Among the pictures we have made were 'A Daughter of the Confederacy,' in three reels, and 'The Mystery of Pine Tree Camp,' also in three reels, both of which have been released; 'In the Power of the Ku-Klux Klan,' a strong story of reconstruction days in the South, which is in three reels; 'The Little Rebel,' a tale of the North and South in two reels, and 'When Men Hate,' a Southern feud story. I think this story, which touches on the psychological, is one of the best things the company has done. It is filled with strong situations—situations of real heart interest. There is plenty of the spectacular, also, for those who bank strongly on this factor in entertainment. As to the latter, one of the scenes is a running street fight which I think will be considered stirring. Another three-reel subject which we have finished is 'On the Fighting Line.'"

Mr. Clark told of many incidents in connection with the making of the season's pictures, most of them amusing and a few of them at the time of the happening really serious, but which may be laughed at now. In making "In the Power of the Ku-Klux Klan," Mr. Clark had to undergo a hanging or near hanging. One of the members of the company said that he knew how to tie a hangman's knot. He tied it so carefully and with such skill that at the crucial moment the check which had been interposed to save the tightening of the rope slipped and Mr. Clark was nearly strangled. Of his experience with the bloodhounds of the sheriff of Duval County the subscribers of the World have read. Mr. Clark told of the difficulties experienced when it was found necessary to find a prey for the hounds after he and Mr. Olcott had established with them friendly relations. The sheriff suggested that a colored man would be the thing, but it was almost impossible to discover a gentleman of color who could be induced to earn good money in that way. They finally succeeded. The negro was given a safe start. The hounds jumped at the scent, and in full cry were away like the wind. "But they had nothing on the negro, though," added Mr. Clark. "You could have played checkers on his coattails."

Miss Gauntier is looking her best, in spite of the severe strain of the winter. "Yes," she said, "we have had plenty to do. Between making pictures in the daytime and in the evening reading scripts and answering correspondence, we have had little time in which to accept the many invitations of the splendid friends we have made in Jacksonville. We are all ready for work right here in New York as soon as we close on a studio, and have a story on which to start."

WORLD NOTICE BRINGS STARDOM.

World critic Louis Reeves Harrison, who gave the "Biograph Girl" limelight, has another "discovery" to his credit. In a review of the Thanhouser "Carmen" in a recent issue of this paper, Mr. Harrison said:

"I should have given a part to a girl who flashed on the scene for a brief instant and filled the screen while she was there, although she was only one of a group. I took the trouble to inquire about this member of the company who only came into view for a second and learned that her name was, and still is, 'Billings.' She will probably remedy that fault before she cuts all of her teeth, for she has what I am compelled to designate, for the lack of a better expression, 'Picture Personality,' a valuable asset for a photoplayer."

C. J. Hite, the new producing manager of the Majestic Company, happened to read the critique, learned that the critic was wrong on the girl's name (which was Francelia Billington), but right on her merits, and immediately engaged her for star parts in the Majestic California productions.

WANT AN "ALKALI" IKE DOLL?

Practically every youngster in the United States during the "Teddy Bear" craze insisted upon having one of the fuzzy little "bears." What promises to be an even more popular successor to the "Teddy Bear" will soon be put upon the market by the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, and will probably serve to make not only one of it's players but also that brand of films, the best known in the world—it's an "Alkali" Ike doll.

The doll, which is a perfect miniature representation of ever-popular Augustus Carney in the role of "Alkali" Ike, will stand some eleven and a half inches high when astride the little hobby-horse. It will be jointed so that it can be made to perform all sorts of stunts. The doll can be removed from the horse and made to assume countless other poses. The blue shirt, sheepskin "chaps," sombrero, bright colored neckerchief, and even the leather holster containing a miniature revolver will all be reproduced in a lifelike manner. The exact resemblance is assured of the well-known character of the motion picture screen by the fact that the Essanay people are going to pay the doll manufacturer five hundred dollars for the mould alone from which the face of the doll is to be cast. The Essanay Company will shortly announce the method by which the doll can be obtained, and the moment the plan is known, will undoubtedly be flooded with orders. Not only will exhibitors be certain to want a supply to sell their patrons or give away as souvenirs, but every lad will want one and will travel miles to reach the theater at which they can be obtained. Plans are also under way for placing them on sale in toy emporiums and department stores all over the country. Dolls will sell for $1.50 apiece. Exhibitors, $13.50 a dozen.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

IOWA CONVENTION.

Picture Men Hold Successful Meeting at Des Moines—Membership Increased by Thirty-five.

The second semi-annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Iowa was held at the Auditorium at Des Moines, Tuesday and Wednesday, May 13th and 14th. The convention was a successful one in that over one hundred members attended. Deputy National Organizer, W. G. Wylie, of Kansas City, was one of the early arrivals, was met by Fred W. Young, Secretary of the Iowa State branch.

The convention was called to order at 2:00 P. M. by Pres. J. L. O'Brien, and everybody was welcome, as an open meeting was called. Many exchange men were present from Omaha, Minneapolis, and Des Moines, and all attended the open session. National Organizer W. G. Wylie made an excellent address and congratulated the Iowa exhibitors on the large attendance. He also spoke on the system of censorship, and considered it wrong. There is a National Board, said Mr. Wylie, which is vested with little authority but is doing creditable work. He claimed mothers of children are the best censors for moving pictures. Mr. Wylie made several addresses at the different meetings, and gave some excellent advice to the exhibitors from knowledge he has gained from visits to different state conventions.

A telegram was read from National President M. A. Neff, stating: "Although I cannot be with you, Brother Wylie will fill my place. Tell the boys, to them I send greetings in behalf of thirty-eight states. May harmony and wise council prevail and your league prosper. Best wishes to each and every member of the league."

On Wednesday afternoon a motion picture was taken by Julius Singer of the Capital City Film Manufacturing Company, and was shown on the screen at 10:00 o'clock that night. At night a vaudeville entertainment was given and advance feature films were shown by the various film exchanges, over four hundred exhibitors and friends attending. Evening's entertainment wound up with a lunch and a general good time, and everybody seemed to be imbued with the spirit of the occasion. Secretary Fred Young of Des Moines again demonstrated his ability in conducting a convention and arranging for entertainments. Everything went off smoothly and everyone departed with words of praise as this being one of the best conventions they ever attended.

The officers for the ensuing year are: E. G. Fargo of Algona, President; J. S. Bassett of Independence, First Vice-President; W. H. Dewey, Chariton, Second Vice-President; W. G. Eddy, Marengo, Secretary; J. E. Tierney, Sioux City, Treasurer; Thomas A. Brown, Iowa City, National Vice-President.

The following delegates were elected to represent Iowa at the New York Convention: M. Ingledue, A. J. Diebold, E. G. Fargo, H. E. Baumgartner, A. W. McIntosh, J. S. Shortley, and J. M. Heffner. Alternates: F. P. Lemen, H. A. Wolfgram, T. A. Bryan, W. G. Eddy, M. Lince, and L. J. Tower.

The next convention will be held at Marshalltown in December. Definite dates as yet not having been decided upon.

Thirty-five new members joined at the convention, bringing the total membership up to one hundred and fifty. This for an organization only six months old, is doing very nicely.

The following members attended: Fred Young, Des Moines; J. L. O'Brien, Oelwein; Thos. A. Brown, Iowa City; W. H. Mart, Grinnell; M. Lince, Ottumwa; J. M. Heffner, Mason City; A. J. Diebold, Cedar Rapids; L. J. Tower, Cedar Rapids; H. E. Wolfgram, Decorah; Fred Keyes, Des Moines; C. H. Johnston, Grundy Center; J. E. Craven, Kellogg; T. J. Henrehan, Nevada; Paul Porter, Lehigh; F. R. Bandy, Britt; Harry DeBaggio, Colfax; F. P. Lemen, Colfax; M. Joffe, Manning; R. G. Hatcher, Chariton; Chas. C. Mendenhall, Stuart; E. G. Fargo, Algonia; Ray E. Jacobson, Colfax; Chas. Pewther, Indianola; M. E. Chance, Redfield; W. C. Treloar, Ogden; F. M. Childs, Villisca; J. M. Anderson, Boone; W. C. Eddy, Marengo; A. W. Walton, Perry; H. C. Juergenson, Waterloo; A. W. McIntosh, Waterloo; M. Luke, Des Moines; A. H. Blank, Des Moines; W. D. Ingeldue, Marshalltown; H. E. Baumgartner, Osage; Ben B. Burns, Jr., Lake City; W. F. Smith, Clarion; C. R. Garrett, Lake Mills; Oval Anderson, Jefferson; T. A. Hanlon, Iowa City; T. A. Bryan, Oelwein; C. F. Hulburt, Madrid; N. P. Hyatt, Webster City; N. Ligutti, Adel; W. H. Bowman, Oskaloosa; J. Gerbracht, Ames; G. C. Bentley, Clearfield; P. E. Johannsen, Mason City; B. Wertz, Sigourney; P. V. Meyers, West Branch; D. B. Herrington, Paullina; W. R. Hiller, Keota; F. Bilderback, Earlham; H. C. Watkins, Centerville; H. O. Beardsley, Red Oak; M. O. Smith, Clarinda; J. S. Shortley, Sioux City; G. F. Crawford, Des Moines; B. I. Van Dyke, Des Moines; R. E. Pratt, Winfield; C. T. Sears, Ames; W. J. Bishop, Parkersburg; H. J. Agnew, A. Bessman, O. Bailey and H. E. Case.

The following exchange men were also present: S. J. Berman, Omaha; Philip Goldstone, Des Moines, Mutual; Wm. Preller, Minneapolis; E. H. Pearson, Omaha; C. F. Calvert, General; J. Van Husan, Omaha; Dan Lederman, Des Moines; W. Bryson, Minneapolis, Universal; Wm. Hopp, Chicago, Standard; Julius Singer, Des Moines, Union Features; and I. Kizerstein, New York.

Representatives of machines: J. E. Robin, Simplex machine; Sidney Blakeley, Motiograph, Chicago, and W. Hartman, Standard, Omaha.

Secretary Young was highly complimented on the convention badges. Each exhibitor, on arrival, was presented with a badge with his name and city printed on same.

KANSAS CENSOR LAW IN COURT.

Mutual Case Argued and Judge Pollock Recognizes Constitutional Aspect of the Question.

The suit brought by Mutual Film Corporation of Missouri, the Kansas City branch of Mutual Film Corporation, against the Governor, Attorney General, Secretary of State and Superintendent of Public Instruction of the State of Kansas, to procure an injunction restraining them from enforcing the Kansas film censorship law on the ground that it was unconstitutional, came up for trial before Judge John C. Pollock, Kansas City, Kansas, on May 14, 1913. Eugene Batavia and Major Thomas F. Gatts of Kansas City, the local attorneys for the Mutual Film Corporation, and Walter N. Seligsberg of New York, its general counsel, argued the case in support of the injunction, and Attorney General John S. Dawson of Kansas, argued against the injunction. Briefs are to be submitted and the case may be decided in about thirty days.

Judge Pollock intimated during the argument that he was very much impressed with the plaintiff's case and counsel are hopeful for a favorable outcome. The Judge said that he could not see by what authority under the Constitution of the State of Kansas, which guarantees to every person the right freely to publish his sentiments, any law could be made punishing in advance or censoring in advance publications such as moving picture films. He also stated that he could not see how, under the Constitution of the United States, the State of Kansas had any right to interfere with interstate commerce in motion picture films by imposing a censorship tax. In view of the importance of the case, the judge stated that he would like printed briefs and that he would decide the case promptly when he received the briefs. In the meanwhile, no action is being taken by the Kansas officials under the law.

MASSACHUSETTS "HOUR BILL" LOST.

On May 14, Massachusetts exhibitors saw their pet "hour bill" go down to defeat at the hands of the Senate. This bill was drawn to amend a law passed at a previous session of the Massachusetts Legislature, which prohibited the projection of pictures for more than twenty minutes without intermission and prescribed that an interim of five minutes must elapse between reels. The theory upon which the existing law is based is that the continuous projection of pictures is hurtful to the eye. A wait of five minutes between reels is calculated to detract from the interest in multiple-reel subjects.

ILLINOIS CENSOR BILL KILLED.

By F. H. Madison.

The Igoe bill providing for a board of censorship in Illinois and a fee from all exhibitors, film exchange or producer has been killed in the Illinois Legislature. It was given a very brief hearing before the judiciary committee of the House of Representatives.

The news will be welcomed by all Illinois exhibitors. Although the fee exacted from each exhibitor would have been small, there is no doubt but that the operation of the censorship would have proved an annoyance. In fact, the municipal or civic censorship in Illinois has always been somewhat ludicrous and some of the Springfield exhibitors, who have been in the service of the State and have seen the workings of the Illinois government, were very skeptical that a competent board of censorship could be secured.

That the bill met its defeat was not due to any apparent opposition of the moving picture interests. The fact is that the bill itself called for the creation of a new board, which is directly in opposition to the policy of Governor Dunne. The present administration made its campaign on an economy platform and is having a great deal of difficulty in keeping the appropriation within a reasonable distance of those of Governor Deneen's regime. The Igoe bill would have resulted in salaries of $8,200 a year and expenses. It was proposed to secure this sum from the revenues of the office, which was hardly possible.

MISSOURI STATE BRANCH CONVENTION.

Missouri State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will hold their convention at Moberly, Mo., instead of Springfield, on June 10-11. The location of Moberly is such that it will be easily accessible for the exhibitor and the officers of the State branch to the largest attendance at the coming convention in the history of the organization.

There will be a large amount of business to transact, including the election of the State officers, delegates and alternates to the National convention and the adoption of a new constitution and by-laws. For full information in regard to the convention, address: Secretary, State Branch, World Theater, 8th and Highland, Kansas City, Mo.

MARYLAND CONVENTION PLANS.

A committee consisting of J. Howard Bennett, Marion S. Pearce, W. C. Bohannan, Alexander Anderson, G. S. Benjamin, Jr., and G. C. Parsons, has been busy for some weeks arranging for the convention of motion picture exhibitors of Maryland, which will be held at the Emerson Hotel, Baltimore, on June 3 and 4. The entire top floor and the exhibition hall of the Emerson Hotel has been secured for the purposes of the convention and manufacturers have been invited to make exhibits. There has been a general response from exhibitors in all parts of the state and a large attendance is assured.

FOR MANITOBA EXHIBITORS.

Secretary L. Freeman of the Manitoba Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association is anxious to get in communication with all exhibitors in that province. The Manitoba Association has been in existence for the past six months, but difficulty has been experienced in getting in touch with the exhibitors in the smaller towns. The office of the secretary is in the Starland Building, Winnipeg. Mr. Freeman would be pleased to hear from all interested.

CONVENTIONS SCHEDULED.

Kansas State Convention—At the National Hotel, Topeka, June 2nd and 3rd.

Missouri State Convention—At Springfield, June 10th and 11th.

Pennsylvania State Convention—At Philadelphia, May 27th and 28th.

Maryland State Convention—At Baltimore, Emerson Hotel, June 3rd and 4th.

Delaware State Convention—At DuPont Hotel, Wilmington, May 26th.

Texas State Convention—At Dallas, May 28th and 29th.

Michigan State Convention—At Vincent Hotel, Saginaw, June 10th and 11th.

Minnesota State Convention—At Radisson Hotel, Minneapolis, June 10th and 11th.

Washington State Convention—At Seattle, June 17th.

EXPOSITION NOTES.

The ever increasing enthusiasm shown by manufacturers, exchange men, exhibitors, and all who are in any way interested in the coming Exposition of the Motion Picture Trades, is very encouraging to the committee who have worked tirelessly for six months in the interests of the motion picture business throughout the world. Now that the exposition is a little over a month away it seems that everybody is taking an active interest in it.

From the manufacturers' standpoint this First International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art, held as it is in conjunction with the Third Annual Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, under its sole direction and under the same roof, will be a wonderful opportunity for demonstration, and demonstration is what the exhibitors want.

For just this reason thousands of them from all parts of the world are coming to New York to see how they can better their theaters. A great many of these exhibitors have never had an opportunity of looking over the talking pictures or the colored pictures. Several letters have been received at the exposition headquarters in the German Bank Bldg., asking if exhibits of certain kinds of articles were to be made at the Grand Central Palace. In all instances but one, the committee were able to answer in the affirmative.

The ten thousand prospectuses and other literature have by this time been received all over the country, and from now until July the main thing in the minds of all will be how to arrange their business, so that they may get to the convention.

The Committee on Transportation and Arrangements have been busily employed in making arrangements to look after the families of the delegates and others who will be here.

The Hotel Imperial will be the headquarters of the different committees during the convention, the management having placed at the disposal of the Ladies Reception Committee a suite of reception rooms, and an assembly room for meetings of committees.

During the last ten days several makers of musical instruments have made plans to make an exhibit.

"BAD DAY'S WORK," SAID GAYNOR.

The New York Board of Aldermen, galvanized into action probably by the recent disclosures in connection with proposed taxicab legislation, attempted to pass a motion picture theater ordinance on Tuesday, May 20. They did pass one, but it prohibited galleries in picture theaters. In all other respects it was like the Folks ordinance, which the Mayor desired passed. The effect of the anti-gallery ordinance will be to seriously handicap picture theater managers in the development of the exhibition business. When the ordinance reached Mayor Gaynor he took occasion to remark that he "was disgusted with the Board of Aldermen," and that they had done a "bad day's work." It is probable that the Mayor will veto the ordinance passed on Tuesday.

The Vitagraph dopester sends out an item telling how strong Mrs. Maurice, the sweet-faced, motherly player, is on spelling. He missed the best point of all, however. He didn't tell. as in perfect truth he might have, how she puts us all under a spell.

At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs

By George Blaisdell.

TALKING on Monday afternoon at Broadway and Forty-second street with King Baggot and "Jim" Gordon who should we meet up with but the Prisoner of Zenda! The president of the Screeners invited Mr. Hackett to drop up at Forty-fifth street and look over the Screen Club. A matter of business prevented an immediate acceptance, but an hour later the name of Mr. Hackett was inscribed on the register. "Surely you have a comfortable place here," he said, as he glanced around. "As our English friends would say, it's very 'club-beh.'"

Mr. Hackett was asked many questions as to his experiences in the making of "The Prisoner of Zenda." There were many of these and the portrayer of Rudolph Rassendyl has a lively recollection of them. Nor did the incidents in connection with the picture cease with the completion of the film. A week or two ago when the play was being shown at the Savoy in Thirty-fourth street, Mr. Hackett, at the solicitation of a friend, accompanied him to the theater. The only available seats were at the rear of the balcony. At the end of the picture the star was amazed to see thrown on the screen: "Mr. Hackett, who is starred in this picture, is now sitting in the balcony. If you appreciate his work applaud him."

"Well, the house applauded, didn't it?" was asked.

"To tell the truth, I don't know," was the response. "I was in such a hurry to get down the stairs I couldn't say. I suggested to the manager it was hardly fair. He remarked that he wouldn't do it again. I told him he wouldn't get the chance."

"Wouldn't believe an old-time star would get a case of stage-fright or something akin to it in a picture theater, would you?" commented a member.

President Baggot escorted his distinguished visitor over the house and extended a cordial invitation to call again.

By the way, Mr. Hackett is much interested in a camera of which at present there are but two in the United States. It is the same as that which Cherry Kearton is now taking into the heart of Africa. Its weight is fourteen pounds, it runs noiselessly at gauged speed on compressed air, the use of the crank being obviated if desired, and is controlled by a gyroscopic arrangement.

A man entered the poster department at the General Film Company's Twenty-third Street branch last week and inquired for a "cooler inside" poster. It was a hot day. "Got a nice cool house, eh?" asked a perspiring clerk.

"Me? Oh, no, not necessarily, But I'm opening up an airdome and I want a full line of publicity stuff!"

King Baggot has left us. Accompanied by Mrs. Baggot, he sailed on Tuesday morning on the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse. There was an informal gathering of Screeners at the clubrooms on Monday evening to wish him a good voyage and safe return. Some of these as well as many others were at the pier before the big ship sailed away. They brought baskets containing good things which, when at sea, will remind the beloved president of the Screeners of the regard in which he is held by his confreres. There were also many floral remembrances. Mr. Baggot, while away, intends to make pictures. He will join Herbert Brenon in London. While the plans of the two are not definite as yet, it is safe to say that we will see the Imp star under Mr. Brenon's direction in films which will have for backgrounds some of the picturesque spots of old Ireland as well as of England. The working together of the two men is a realization of a desire that they have for a long time held. There is more than mutual respect for the other's ability; the two are old friends.

One of Mr. Baggot's fellow passengers is "Dave" Montgomery of Montgomery & Stone. The two met at the pier just before sailing time.

Saw Howard Missimer, the former Essanay comedian, on Broadway the other day and said "hullo." The man from Chicago is wise. He looked around, saw someone he never set eyes on before, and—kept right on. Never mind, the next time he'll be stopped, even if the use of an axe be necessary.

It is to be regretted that the re-issue of "A Tale of Two Cities" by the Vitagraph company is to be for the English public alone. The official statement of the company that the play "appeals in the main to the patriotic instincts of the English people" is correct only as far as it goes. Entirely apart from its national side, there is in this book a love story that will make as deep appeal in a mountain hamlet as it will in a center of culture—the Greater Love exemplified by Sydney Carton. It is a stronger story than that of the man who lays down his life for another man; it is a story of the man who lays down his life that the husband of the woman he loved might be preserved to her. Let us have this story right here at home. We need it, for great pictures are rare. Then, again, the Vitagraph does these things so well, as we had a chance to see in "His Life for His Emperor," a recent single reel. Who, that two years ago saw "A Tale of Two Cities," would not gladly see it again? Here's your answer.

The Screen Club was unusually gay Saturday afternoon and evening. It was on the day before that John Steppling, the well known and also favorably known comedian of the Essanay company, just dropped in. He was given the glad hand all around. Mr. Steppling is a Screener. It was not a case of getting acquainted. When you set eyes on him you felt that you had personally known him from the first time you saw him on the screen. It's the Steppling manner—cordiality itself. Mr. Steppling has severed his connections with the Chicago company and is in New York looking over the situation. The parting was in the friendliest spirit on the side of Mr. Spoor and of the comedian. Present at the club Saturday afternoon and evening were among others Messrs. Baggot, Lewis, Willat, Spedon, Welch, Gordon, Shaw, Tefft Johnson, Karr, Bill Blaisdell, Daly, Williams, John Johnson, Farnham, Craig, Wall, Dion, Haddock, Scardon, Frazer, Quirk, Crampton, Kirkwood, Tichenor, Ennis, Gerhardt, and Mayo. A silver dollar which John Steppling brought into town furnished a bunch of fun. King Baggot wanted and got it for a souvenir. Somehow he couldn't keep it. After each disappearance it would be located in the clothes of some new-comer. There was comedy galore perpetrated by men who know how to make it. Mr. Steppling had to leave at 9 o'clock to see Essanay's "Two Social Calls," in which his little daughter Margaret is cast in an important role and in which the four-year-old gives a charmingly natural portrayal. As Mr. Steppling said good night, he glanced over the throng of new-old friends and remarked: "You can't buy this stuff with all the money in the world. I have laughed until my face aches."

ANDREW CARNEGIE IN MOTION PICTURES.

The very difficult feat of getting Andrew Carnegie to pose for moving pictures has been accomplished. Just what influence prompted the ironmaster to overcome his aversion to the motion picture camera is unknown, but it is believed that he tired of dodging the persistent staff photographers of Pathe's Weekly. The Laird of Skibo was cornered in St. Louis when he attended a meeting of the "Universal Peace" advocates and after the ordeal was over Mr. Carnegie remarked, laughingly: "And it didn't hurt a bit."

Later, in New York, the multi-millionaire was filmed at the unveiling of the Carl Schurz monument and expressed a desire to see his picture. He was informed that it would be on exhibition at all theaters showing Pathe's Weekly No. 22.

The House of Hallberg.

A Recollection of How the First Article It Ever Sold Was Guaranteed. A Business Built From the Ground Up.

By Hugh Hoffman.

J. H. Hallberg.

IT'S about six years now since I first met J. H. Hallberg. He used to be consulting engineer for the Beck Flaming Arc Lamp Company, down on Greenwich Street. I bought some of the lamps for a theater I was running at the time. I used to drop in there regularly to buy more carbons. On one of these occasions I was a little bit down-in-the-month and Hallberg asked me how business was. I told him it was fair, but that the high-cost-of-"juice" was eating up a lot of the profits. I informed him that I had been around from one electrician to another trying to get some kind of a device that would save current, but they all told me that there wasn't any such animal. "It simply can't be done," was the answer I got from one and all of the dozen men I had consulted. Imagine my joy then when Hallberg said: "I can do it." We made a bargain then and there. He was to build me an apparatus that would increase my light and at the same time reduce my light bill. If it worked I was to pay him so much. If it didn't, I didn't have to pay him anything. That was his own proposition, and as I didn't see how it could be any fairer, I told him to go ahead. Two weeks later he appeared at my theater with a queer looking object that resembled a pruned plant prepared for shipment. He fussed around a couple of hours making tests, and so forth, before he struck an arc. But when he turned on the light my troubles vanished. And not only my troubles, but the troubles of thousands of exhibitors everywhere.

That was the beginning of the Hallberg Economizer. He began to market this device, and exhibitors were so anxious to get one that he was swamped with orders in no time. What the business needed at that time was a real electrical engineer to figure out vexatious problems, and J. H. Hallberg was the man. Immediately following the introduction of his device the market was flooded with choke-coils that were called "economizers." These have all faded away and Mr. Hallberg's article still stands on its merits, with a great business establishment built around it as an indication of its value to the exhibitor.

Men of high electrical training, in connection with the motion picture trade five years ago, were almost as rare as the dodo bird. There are not many in it now, but then the need of them was awful. Hallberg at that time was fairly well content with drawing a fat salary and with the letters "I.A.E.E." tacked onto his name. He was an electrical graduate of the Latin-Laroverket college in Halmstad, Sweden. He had served his apprenticeship in mechanics at the Ottumwa Iron Works, in Ottumwa, Iowa. Since 1893 he had been filling such positions as electrical engineer, designer, inventor, inspector, consultant, municipal commissioner, manager or writer for such well-known concerns as Kohler Bros., Chicago; Electric Appliance Co., Chicago; Standard Thermometer & Electric Co., Peabody, Mass.; General Incandescent Arc Light Co., New York; Cincinnati Gas & Electric Co.; National Carbon Co., Cleveland, Ohio; The Electrical World, and other important institutions. He was enjoying the distinction of membership in the International Association of Electrical Engineers, the National Electric Light Association, and the Swedish Engineers' Club of America. He was not aware, however, that the moving picture business was calling him. He did not know it until he began to advertise the Hallberg Economizer.

The success of the economizer was so emphatic that Hallberg became a sort of Moses to theater managers. They wrote and flocked to him in numbers. They sought his advice on all subjects pertaining to their business. His advice on opera chairs, for instance, became as important as his opinions on electrical matters. Exhibitors came to him for projection machines, carbons, and all sorts of things, until he was practically forced to take a loft and put in a line of supplies. In this way the house of Hallberg came into being. Mr. Hallberg, being thorough in everything he does, determined to do the thing right or not at all. He accordingly took a floor at No. 36 East 23rd Street, New York, and put in the most complete line of supplies that could be had. At the present time he handles all projection appurtenances, such as all standard makes of projectors, carbons, spotlights, dissolving stereopticons, current savers, rectifiers, slides, lenses, seats, cameras, machine parts, ticket choppers, ticket venders, tickets, wire, voltmeters, ammeters, reel cases, exit signs, flaming arcs, rewinders, fire extinguishers, motor drives, rheostats, brass frames and lobby goods, and about everything else that can be thought of that applies to a motion picture theater. The Hallberg direct-current economizer duplicated the success of the original alternating current economizer.

Mr. Hallberg's place of business is an interesting establishment. Every recognized make of projection machine and current saver is standing on the floor in plain sight. The show cases are filled with smaller articles ready for the buyer. There is one feature about the Hallberg establishment that cannot be found in any other supply store that we know of. It is wired for every current known to projection, from 500 volts down. There is a full set of testing instruments, so that in a jiffy Mr. Hallberg can make a test of any device on any current for the waiting customer. He does not insist upon anyone buying his own economizer in perference to others. Side by side with the Hallberg device sit those of other makers. In a way he is the daddy of them all and they are all his children. If he sells another maker's current saver he guarantees it the same as he did his first one to me five years ago. If it isn't right he will make it right; that's the policy of the house.

The house of Hallberg is a safe place for an exhibitor to go. There he will get the right advice. For those who favor him with their business he takes the pains to figure out their electrical and mechanical needs and helps them along to a successful opening without any cost to them. Here is part of a letter to Mr. Hallberg, touching on this point, from an exhibitor in Massena, N. Y., dated April 5.

> Dear Sir:
> Permit me first, to acknowledge your fine, satisfactory letter of the 3rd inst.; also sketch No. 258 and tracing received under separate cover. Much correspondence would be eliminated if everyone were as concise and comprehensive as you. * * *
> (Signed) V. A. Warren.

And so this business has grown, because most exhibitors prefer to deal with a house that is efficient, reputable and reliable.

HALLBERG EQUIPS MANY THEATERS.

J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," submits the following partial list of installations for the past week:

Hallberg Standard A. C. economizers at Congress Theater, Greenwich, Conn.; Bijou Hill Theater, New York; Savoy Theater, Asbury Park, N. J., and Nestor Film Laboratory, Bayonne, N. J.

Power's No. 6 to Treon & Co., Scranton, Pa.; Power's No. 6-A, with motor drive and Hallberg A. C. economizer, to W. F. Kertscher, Grand Theater, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Power's No. 6-A, with Hallberg A. C. economizer and complete moving picture equipment, to the Oasis Theater, 165th Street and St. Nicholas Avenue, New York. The Castle Theater, Rock Rapids, Iowa, has placed order for 220-volt, direct-current economizer, guaranteed to save over 70 per cent. on electric bill over use of rheostat.

SELIG SECURES KENTUCKY DERBY.

The Selig Polyscope Company were in evidence at the famous Kentucky Derby this year. The derby took place on May 10th, in Louisville. Mr. Tom Persons, superintendent of the Selig Chicago plant, accompanied by five cameramen, spent two days in Louisville securing official pictures of the various races. The pictures, thus secured, have turned out excellently and will be released some time within the near future.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY NOTES.

The recognition of Power's Cameragraph by the "Service" still continues. One No. 6 has been installed at Fort Morgan, Alabama, through W. H. Peck, Atlanta, Ga., and one No. 6 complete to U. S. S. "Rhode Island" through New England Universal Film Exchange, Boston.

The following installations have been made: One No. 6A in the New Sullivan and Considine Orpheum Theater at Vancouver, B. C., and in the Empire Theater of Vancouver, by the Pacific Film Exchange. One No. 6A to Henry Zahn, 646 East Division Street, Syracuse, N. Y., through Auburn Film Company, Auburn. One No. 6A to Smallwood and Cazie, Oolitic, Ind., through Lyric Film and Supply Company, Terra Haute, Ind., One No. 6A with Inductor to H. R. Tinkham, Grantwood, N. J. One No. 6A to New York Motion Picture Studio, Los Angeles, Cal., through Mutual Film Corporation, New York.

“THE WAG

A Three Reel Drama

JACK ROSE—SAM SCH

JACK ROSE

“I have tried in ‘The Wages of Sin’ to make plain the risks to which young men are subjected in their daily business lives, and how they can be changed from law-abiding citizens into police-hunted criminals by the machinations of soulless capitalists. The picture well fulfills its intent to teach a strong moral lesson.”

SAM SCHEPPS

“My work in the production of ‘The Wages of Sin’ was done with the purpose of warning millions of people of the necessity for constant vigilance to prevent them from being ruined for life through misplaced confidences. The picture is a wonderful lesson, and I am glad to have assisted in its making.”

HARRY VALLON

“I demurred when asked to appear in ‘The Wages of Sin’ because it did not seem possible that a strong moral story could be woven from experiences in the Underworld. Finished, the picture is a masterpiece of fine art, and will appeal to all classes. I now feel that my time was well invested.”

THE TRAGEDY OF BIG EAGLE MINE (Special, 2 parts, May 7).—In quest of game for the subsistence of the expedition, goes Mr. Thomas Morton. He discovers bear tracks and follows them into a forest until nightfall overtakes him. He loses his way and the next day as he is trying to get out, falls into a bear trap set by Big Eagle and his sister, Laughing Water. His cries are heard by them; he is rescued and brought back to health through the care of Laughing Water. Morton has won the friendship of Big Eagle and he shows him a vein of gold which he has discovered. Not long afterward Laughing Water and Morton are married.

Five happy years have now passed and a little boy has come to bless their union. Morton, who has been communicating with his aged mother, manages to keep secret his marriage and the presence of gold, which he has planned to mine for himself. At length he receives a letter from his mother asking him to come and stay with her in her declining years. When Laughing Water is at the spring, he quickly packs his belongings, and, taking his little son, runs away. Laughing Water, broken in spirit, returns to her tribe, but is renounced by them. She becomes a wanderer and Big Eagle silently contemplates vengeance.

Twenty years have now passed and Morton's son, John, announces his wedding day. Morton, who has always been afraid to visit his western gold mine, suggests that his son go there and look over things on his honeymoon. When John reaches the mine he finds that the situation is too difficult for him to handle and telegraphs for his father. On one of their many trips to the mine, John and his wife meet an old Indian squaw selling beadwork, and his wife makes purchases. While serving them the old Indian squaw notices the counterpart of her husband in the young man. Old Morton arrives at the mine and is seen by Big Eagle, who, recognizing him, lights the fuse of a dynamite stick and places it near him. Before Laughing Water, who has been watching, can do anything, the explosion takes place and old Morton and John's wife are killed, John alone surviving. He is taken to the forest home of his Indian mother and tenderly cared for.

SELIG.

WHEN THE CIRCUS CAME TO TOWN (June 2).—Unfortunately Culre's masterpiece, "The Heart of a Boy" was evolved in Italy and not America, still its humanities are so wide and deep that it outserves any merely sectional patriotic purpose; however, there is a peculiar thrill and afflatus in the coming of the circus, as a sensation for young America that is worth recording as distinctive. Jimmy, the newsboy, moved by the mighty magic of the show-bills is crazy to go to the circus, a sentiment that is shared by his little sister Bess. They pool their scant savings and find there is only money enough to buy one ticket. Jimmy bravely gives way to his sister and hopes to work his way in by "watering the animals." This hope, however, is dashed and he is somewhat dejected, when he happily picks up an envelope containing circus tickets. They have recently been purchased by a lady, who drops them as she enters her automobile. Jimmy chases the machine, but cannot catch it. This seems providential and it looks as though Jimmy was to proudly lead his sister into the big show. They could thus save their precious pennies. At the ticket office, however, he finds the lady complaining of her loss and he promptly surrenders the tickets to her. She is so moved by this frank honesty that she not only makes the little folks her guests, but they have a sufficient filling of popcorn and peanuts, and the privilege of the side-show to boot.

A FLAG OF TWO WARS (June 3).—John Reed, a confederate veteran, gathered to his fathers, leaves no property to his faithful old wife and dashing son, John, Jr., except his battered sword and the tattered flag he fought for, with admonition to his son to live up to their record for valor and honor. When the war breaks out between Spain and the United States, John insists upon enlisting and his mother finally consents, giving him his father's sword, while he tucks the confederate flag in the bosom of his blouse. He is detailed for dangerous duty as a scout along the line that Weyler's wire entanglements and block-houses made so deadly. The little band of American soldiers is attacked by a superior force of Spaniards and they take refuge in a tobacco store-house. Their troop flag is swept away on the flame of a shell. John, who raised it on the little pole on the roof, received at the same time a nasty wound in the shoulder. When his comrades, attempting to administer "first aid" to the injured, find the confederate flag, in lieu of the lost colors, they raise the old stars and bars to guide their comrades to their rescue. The men return to the fight so desperately under the faded old colors that the Spaniards are driven back, and the flag is never lowered until the stars and stripes come fluttering in at the head of a relief party. After the battle the Americans gather about the frayed old confederate flag, nestling in the shadow of the fluttering stars and stripes, and salute the two flags with equal reverence.

WOMEN—PAST AND PRESENT (June 4).—Miss America is a mannish, presumably advanced type of womanhood, who refuses to surrender her rights by marrying the young man she loves, because he has what she considers "too old-fashioned ideas" concerning the femininity of women. She gives out her ideas in a hale-fellow-well-met-way to the modest man and he retires to sadly think it over as she goes joyously on to "whoop-it up" at a suffrage meeting. Returning from a day of strenuous service in disorder and window smashing, she casts herself in exhaustion upon the couch in her study and falls asleep. Then comes to her in dreams a picture of the quiet, delightful days of old, so well remembered from the tales told by her grandmother. Old Father Time makes bold to intrude and conduct her back along the path of the storied past, decade by decade, until she arrives at the age of gallantry, when Great-grandmother was a girl. It shows the courtly old days in the quaint, colonial mansion where grand dames, powdered beauties, periwigged old gallants and lively beaux danced to stately and dignified minuet. This is all in striking contrast to the syncopated ragtime and "animal dances" that hold cheap and unworthy possession in current esteem. She awakens in shame at the present conditions, tears the banner calling "votes for women" from the wall of her room, and again surrenders herself to the gentle surroundings of her true sphere. The disappointed lover having gained in manhood correspondingly comes to claim his own, in view of the fact that the right to love and be happy is absolutely constitutional.

THE SUWANEE RIVER (June 5).—The poetic and sentimental theme of the old Southland song is the moving crux investing an interesting story of love and comedy during the reconstruction period, south of Mason and Dixon's Line. The hero, Bob Lucas, a fiery Southerner and the heroine, Nell Burke, a young Northern girl, live on adjoining plantations. They follow nature's line of least resistance, and fall in love. Colonel Lucas, of the old school of Southerners, has a deepset hatred for the Northerners. The aged negro, Uncle Abe, good-naturedly assists the clandestine meetings of the youngsters and does his best to keep them from the knowledge of his Massa', the old Colonel. When that redoubtable old fire eater discovers the situation and what he considers a misalliance, he disowns his son, and orders him to leave the plantation at once and forever. Bob Lucas, dutifully accepts snap judgement, follows orders, goes to the North and, in an Eastern city, eventually amasses a fortune by selling cotton short when the market is falling. Strangely enough, this drop in cotton prices ruins old Colonel Lucas. His creditors grow more and more importunate, so that finally the Sheriff is compelled to advertise the old plantation and house at a sacrifice sale. All through this lowering cloud of trouble old Uncle Abe notices that the imperious spirit is softening; the iron will is breaking and there is a deep settled longing to see the boy again. The old negro starts North with his banjo, and as a modest serenader attracts the attention of the now affluent young Lucas at a banquet. He tells the young man the story of his father's predicament and this, as an echo of the song, stirs him to instant and vigorous action. He arrives back at the old plantation just in the nick of time, as the deadly hammer is about to strike the auction-block, and saves the stubborn colonel in spite of himself. The father and son become reconciled and the former buries his ancient prejudices and finds the Northern girl as fair as any flower of the aromatic South. So all ends well to the haunting melody of "Way Down Upon the Suwanee River."

AN EMBARRASSED BRIDEGROOM (June 6).—Tom Martin, a ranchman, busy until his wedding-day, finds that his clothes are rather shabby for such a showing, so he hikes to town and purchases a full supply of new duds. As he is about to start home, he meets congenial friends who insist upon drinking to the bride. One thing leads to another and Tom is presented with a full bottle to keep him company on his way home. He decides, when part way home, to put on his new clothes and save time, and he is somewhat unsteadily engaged in this occupation, when his horses get tired and run away. He chases them in airy attire, but just as he catches them, he is forced to desert and hide. A couple of plains girls ride into the picture. They think that the team has wandered away, so they drive the horses back to the ranch, where the wedding party is anxiously waiting. The prospective bride is furious and in caprice is about to marry Tom's rival. Tom, still shy on clothes, but thoroughly sobered arrives just in the nick of time, is forgiven and the wedding event comes off as scheduled.

MANILA NORMAL AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS (June 6).—An educational picture showing the good work of our educational army of invasion.

LUBIN.

A WOMAN'S HEART (June 2).—Nell Logan is in love with Lon Hardman, the foreman of her father's ranch. Their love runs smoothly until the day when Lon meets a pretty gypsy girl. The gypsy is impressed by the handsome cowboy and feigns a sprained ankle when he is about to ride away from their chance meeting at the old well. He gallantly carries her in his arms into the gypsy camp, much to the discomfiture of her lover. The girl, however, assures her lover that she is to only make a victim of the cowboy, through which he will profit.

As the days go by the cowboy becomes more and more infatuated with the gypsy, forgetting his little sweetheart. There comes a day when the tryst at the old well is interrupted by the ranchman sending Lon to the bank for the ranch payroll. Lon leaves a note at the old well, telling the gypsy girl he has gone to the bank and will meet her upon his return. She finds the note and hurries to her father and lover, explaining that the opportunity for which she has been waiting has arrived. The lover is only too eager to end the flirtation between his sweetheart and the cowboy, and suggests a plan to rob Lon and put him out of the way.

In the meantime, Nell, who has become very disconsolate, hits upon the plan of having the fortune teller look into the future for her. The old gypsy crone advises her to look into the old spring at high noon and she will see depicted in its depths something of interest. Nell, at the spring, sees mirrored in the water her sweetheart in a loverlike pose with the gypsy girl. Grieved by this she is horrified to see reflected further the gypsy lover's evil intentions toward Lon. At the well the gypsies conceal themselves and when the girl has cajoled Lon into showing her the bankroll, her lover strikes Lon from behind, and he falls into the old well. The gypsies make quick preparation to leave the neighborhood, but Nell, troubled by her vision, is suspicious when Lon's horse arrives at the ranch riderless. She explains the things she saw in the pool to her father, and with the cowboys they intercept and capture the gypsies, finally rescuing Lon from the well. Later the sweetness of Nell's forgiveness causes Lon to repent and marvel at a good woman's love.

A JEALOUS HUSBAND (June 3).—In comparative poverty, Miles Kenneth and his wife, Mary are happy with their young child, but face the situation bravely. Mary's one distress is that she is unable to materially assist her husband, who is in desperate need of additional money to complete a contract. A newspaper offers a prize of $1,000 for the best short story submitted, and Mary determines to compete, but, fearing her husband's teasing, conceals her efforts.

Mary is subjected to the unwelcome attention of a wealthy man. In her efforts to save her husband from pain and to prevent his taking some hasty vengeance, Mary allows herself to be placed in a false light, and Miles' jealousy is aroused. His suspicions are apparently confirmed when he finds a note that seems to fatally compromise his wife. In a mad fury he plans to kill his wife and then himself, but is diverted from this course by Myra, a girl of the city, who was a boyhood sweetheart, before she became what she now is. Myra, who has never ceased to love Miles, dreams that with the lover of her youth she may reform her wrecked

An absorbing story leads up to the great struggle, which lasted three days—July 1-2-3—and in which the loss of life was appalling. Gen. Lee hurled himself upon the north, and the Union forces were hurriedly marshaled and met him at Gettysburg. The Union army numbered more than 77,000, and the Confederate forces 59,000. The charge of Gen. Pickett, with 4,900 men, following a fierce cannonading, into the center of the Union army, is the most sensational, heroic and thrilling incident in the war history of the world.

life. Myra chances to meet with the child, who has wandered out into the streets, seeking her father, to tell him to come home, that her mother is ill. With the child asleep in her arms, many emotions are awakened in Myra's breast. She knows of the note that caused Miles to leave his home, and chance now places in her hands a copy of the prize story, just published, and which bears Mary's name. In it Myra finds embodied the text of the fatal note, that which Miles found having been merely a sheet of Mary's manuscript. Myra sends Miles, with the child, back to his home. In bitter remorse he appeals for forgiveness, which is granted him.

THE PENALTY OF JEALOUSY (June 6).—Bob Adams, returning from a visit to the East, brings his sister out to the Mexican border to his ranch. Mae is inclined to flirt. Bob is inclined to be jealous and discharges one of his hands for taking advantage of one of his sister's flirtatious moods. Miss Mae, in attempting to chop some wood, strains her shoulder. The old foreman of the ranch tries to quiet her, but is discovered by Adams, who, in a fit of jealous rage, struggles over a revolver and accidentally shoots the foreman. He knows the penalty and decides to ride across the border into Mexico, where he becomes acquainted with Carmelita, Ramon's sweetheart, and afterwards marries her. Ramon, with a broken heart, goes into the States and by one of those queer turns of nature, goes to the Adams' ranch and applies for work. He becomes infatuated with Mae, Adams' sister. After many months have passed, Carmelita finds Adams flirting with another Spanish girl, innocently enough, but jealousy overpowers reason and she takes her own life. Adams, being thoroughly frightened, re-crosses into the States to seek protection against the just anger of the Mexicans, and there meets with Ramon, in his own home. Ramon, thinking that he is trying to steal Miss Adams, tells her that this is the man who took from him his love and defies him to attempt to use his art on Mae. A struggle ensues and Ramon mortally wounds Adams and takes to flight. The cowmen follow and drive him into an old hut, where they try to dislodge him by bullets, eventually using dynamite. Adams, in the meantime, regains consciousness sufficiently to get onto a horse and ride to Ramon's rescue, but arrives only in time to shake his hand, and both men die as they lived—victims of that grim monster—jealousy.

BOB BUILDS A CHICKEN HOUSE (June 5).—Bob Thompson is a poultry fan, and with the assistance of his family and friends, proceeds to build a chicken house. They all skirmish for lumber, and, having secured the plans from a poultry book, succeed fairly well in constructing the building. John Smiley, who is always doubtful of the success of Bob's engineering schemes—and Thompson being on the inside of the coop—John calls for Bob to come out and take a look at the house. The master builder weighs three hundred pounds and finds that the windows and door are all too small to permit him to make an exit. There is only one thing to do, and that is to chop his way out. This he does, with much show of temper, That night the party goes to Bob's house and tells Vivian, Bob's daughter, to tell her father that his friends have come to congratulate him. Bob sends word out that he wants nothing more to do with them, and the bunch retire, disappointed, but realizing that there is nothing doing.

KATE, THE COP (June 5).—Casey is not much of a policeman, but he and the old Chief of Police are all the force Beckville boasts. Casey is like a big-town cop and is popular with the servant girls. Kate is his favorite. Kate's mistress catches a burglar in her bedroom and 'phones for the chief. Then she finds Casey in the kitchen and Kate makes Casey go after the burglar. Casey is scared by a noise and rushes back to the kitchen. Kate goes after the intruder herself and makes the arrest, and the disgusted chief appoints Kate the cop and makes Casey turn cook. A week later the cop is invited in for lunch, but this time Casey does the inviting and Kate is the uniformed guest.

THE GREAT PEARL (June 7).—Walter Trask, a young college man, receives news of his father's death and the loss of his fortune. He resolves to go to work and try to retrieve his loss. With the aid of the family lawyer, he secures a position as bookkeeper with a large lumber firm in the South, and, bidding his fiancée farewell, departs. On his arrival he finds favor in the eyes of the superintendent, who takes him to his boarding house and introduces him to his landlady and her daughter, a pretty, frivolous, village coquette. The young lady immediately begins a conquest of the new boarder's heart and plays off one young man against the other.

Trask and the superintendent finally become piqued and begin to quarrel. One day after a slight discussion in which Balk, the superintendent is the victor, Trask moodily walks away, and in strolling along by an old oyster bed, accidentally unearths a wonderful pearl. Balk and Myrtle follow him, a new quarrel ensues in which Trask drops the pearl. Balk picks it up and Myrtle greedily demands it. Trask comes up and asks for the pearl. Balk and he have words and Myrtle slyly runs away with the pearl. She jumps into a buggy and drives to the village jewelers. Balk and Trask discover her absence and follow her. They find her trying to sell the pearl. Balk insists she return the pearl to Trask; he, much disgusted with her, refuses to receive it and tells Balk to keep it. Balk refuses also, and Myrtle retains the gem. On Trask's return to the boarding house he receives a telegram from his betrothed telling him to return at once, as much of his fortune has been discovered. He determines to do so, and, reconciled to Balk, leaves for the North. Some weeks later Myrtle, anxious to regain her influence with Balk, makes overtures of peace, but he gently repulses her, having discovered her unworthiness. She accepts Balk's rebuff calmly and goes to her room to gloat over her great pearl. While admiring it, it suddenly explodes—thus exemplifying, "All is vanity and shall crumble to dust."

THE ACCUSING HAND (Special, 2 parts, June 6).—Three school chums, two boys and a girl, go merrily on their way as boys and girls usually do. Jack Sneder, the favorite one, asks the girl's hand in marriage. Her father tells him when he can produce ten thousand dollars he can have her. Five years later we find Jack a detective. He is stationed in the West along the Mexican border. Bob O'Connor, the other schoolmate, is still friendly with the girl, until his father receives a communication from the West that Beulah (the girl) has inherited some two millions of dollars. Bob's father, being the attorney for Beulah's father, receives this communication and immediately temptation seizes him and he confides in his son, Bob, his scheme to have him (Bob), marry the girl before he notifies her of her inheritance. Beulah's father, however, objects, and Bob, not stopping at anything, hires two thugs to do away with him, The girl suspects Bob, and induces the Tholl Detective Service to take the case. Jack is employed by that firm and receives communication from the general manager of the detective service that young O'Connor is coming West, and Jack receives instructions to give him the "silent third degree." Jack meets him at the train when he arrives on the Mexican border, and from that time, for many hours, assiduously follows and in many disguises, keeps accusing him with the mysterious hand, until breaking down in hysterical frenzy, he confesses all. Jack starts back East with his prisoner. The prisoner, seeing an opportunity to escape, and being mentally unbalanced, jumps from a moving train and meets with a just end. Jack returns to New York, and secures the girl.

NATIVE INDUSTRIES OF JAVA (June 5).—This interesting picture of the principal industries which keep the Javanese busy, opens with the designing of Sarongs. The Sarong is the dress, or robe, that the men and women alike drape around their bodies in a characteristic fashion.

Next is the making of Krees, the native weapon. The Krees is on the order of a dagger, but somewhat longer, and every native, as a rule, has at least one in his possession. They are in most cases ornamental, and we see the interesting operations of forging, filing, stamping and engraving them.

The fancy brass work industry comes next, with its skilled artisans, reared from boyhood in the one trade, and sometimes passing it down from generation to generation. All stages of the work are shown, from moulding to the finished article for sale.

Last, and perhaps the most interesting to Americans, is the Pottery Industry. Java pottery is known throughout the world, but to see it rounded into shape from the getting of clay at the bottom of the lake to the baking of it in kilns, is a sight which few have witnessed.

PATHEPLAY.

PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 22, 1913 (May 26).—New York, N. Y.—The monument to the memory of Carl Schurz, soldier, statesman and scholar, is unveiled on Riverside Drive here.

Naples, Italy.—The King and Queen attend the launching of the new dreadnaught, "Andrea Doria," at the navy yard.

St. Louis, Mo.—The St. Louis and Chicago teams of the new Federal League, line up for the opening game of the baseball season here.

New York, N. Y.—Fifteen hundred athletes toe the mark in the Evening Mail's twelve-mile race, and Kolehmainen wins. Time, 1 hour, 5 minutes and 15 3-5 seconds.

St. Louis, Mo.—Judge Henry S. Caulfield addresses the Civil War Veterans assembled to honor the memory of Gen. Lyon, hero of the battle of Camp Jackson, fought 52 years ago.

New York, N. Y.—Andrew Carnegie is among the "Universal Peace" advocates who meet to arrange for fittingly celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the signing of the Treaty of Ghent.

New York, N. Y.—Seven thousand little girls swarm over Central Park pasture in their sixth annual festival.

Comic Section.—Mutt attempts to silence Packaninni's G string.

And Many Others.

DREDGES AND FARM IMPLEMENTS IN THE WEST (June 3).—The problem of settling the arid wastes of the Far West was solved with the success of the first irrigation project, but then arose a demand for machinery that would lessen the undertaking of irrigating immense tracts of land which could be made available for farming purposes. The result was the elimination of the horse entirely and in this film we see canals being dug by traveling dredges and engines. Also there is a dredge, conceived by a genius, which digs up the beds of dried up creeks, extracts whatever gold the dirt contains, and drops the refuse behind it.

A MARKET IN KABYLIA, ALGERIA (June 3).—A film that is a personally conducted tour through a far-off land, showing everything of interest therein.

THE SAVING LIE (June 4).—Cyril Jackson, an author, is so intensely occupied with his art that he takes his wife's love as a matter-of-course, paying her none of the little attentions which make a woman happy. Willard Martin, a friend of Jackson, becomes infatuated with Mrs. Jackson and jilts Mabel Wallace, whom he is engaged to marry, because of his new fancy. Mrs. Jackson repulses Martin, but the latter persists in his attentions until finally Jackson learns of his friend's double dealing. Armed with a revolver, and a desire for revenge, Jackson calls on Martin for an explanation. Martin is at a loss for an answer, but his jilted sweetheart tells a lie that saves his life, and, after Jackson and his wife are reconciled, Mabel tells Martin how glad she is to be rid of him.

WHAT THE GOOD BOOK TAUGHT (June 5).—A girl, journeying to a more suitable climate with her sick mother, is seized by a band of badmen. While held captive by them she finds a dusty copy of the Bible, which was given to Joe, the leader of the band, by his mother. In a particularly affecting scene, Marion shows Joe the inscription in the Good Book, and pleads with him to help her and her mother. Joe is so deeply touched that, although it is a difficult task, he forces his companions to feel as he does, and not only renders every assistance possible until Marion's mother is well again, but when they depart for the next town, Joe is driving the horses and Marion has agreed to pay a visit with him to the first parson they can find.

BIRDS AND ANIMALS OF BRAZIL (June 6).—The strange birds and animals that inhabit Brazil are the subject of this interesting film. Red and blue parrots are shown, and then follow crocodiles, half a dozen of them in characteristic attitudes, a forty-foot boa constructor, the largest and most powerful of the snake family, and specimens of the various monkeys that comprise the Cebu species. The antics of these monkeys are very amusing and they supply any number of laughs in addition to being of keen interest to every student of the Darwin theory of evolution.

TANANARIVE, MADAGASCAR (June 6).—An old, old town in Madagascar, showing the customs of the natives, their principal industries, and some very exciting horse races held on a feast day.

GET-RICH-QUICK BILLINGTON (June 7).—Billington has a fine social position, but no cash with which to maintain it. At his club a flood of unpaid bills caused him to confide in Jake Cohen, a mine promoter, who has cash, but no social position. Cohen offers Billington a half interest in his business if the latter will sell some stock to his rich friends. At a dance in the home of the Billingtons, Cohen delights the fancy of Billington's rich aunt, Nancy, a spinster. The next day the authorities haul Cohen and Billington out of bed and off to a cell on a charge of swindling. Aunt Nancy, when she learns that Cohen is in trouble, writes a check to cover the claims against him. When Billington and Cohen are free, Aunt Nancy holds out her arms to Cohen. Cohen looks at her, then at a passing train, and takes the train.

BIOGRAPH.

THE RANCHERO'S REVENGE (Junt 2).—The heartless woman with her partner answered the ranchero's call for a wife. Then the adventuress soon discovered she was not as heartless as she at first imagined. She learned to love and when the other man appeared to perpetrate the infamous design, true woman nature came into the struggle, saving both herself and the ranchero. That was his revenge.

A TIMELY INTERCEPTION (June 7).—Oftentimes the seeming adversity proves the ultimate blessing. To help the unfortunate uncle who slept when he should have been watching, the great event in the lives of the boy and girl must needs be postponed. Yet in spite of a crafty oil syndicate the great event occurred with far more pomp than it otherwise might.

SLIPPERY SLIM REPENTS (June 5).—When the evangelist came to town Slippery Slim, being in a particularly sentimental mood, swore off and left his bad past behind him. The parson was in for painting the town white. That is why he followed up Rattlesnake Joe, the whiskey smuggler, and brought him over to conversion. But the parson made a slip that spoiled it all. When a spring apparently gushes forth forbidden liquid, what can a poor parson do?

JUST KIDS (June 5).—Half-back Harold loved the professor's daughter, but such a procedure was strictly against the rules of the girls' academy. Half-back Harold, however, became the lion of the day in the eyes of the fair feminine pupils while they bathed in the forbidden mill stream. One gallant touch-down followed another and the professor, saved from the deep, broke a precedent.

VITAGRAPH.

WHAT GOD HATH JOINED TOGETHER (June 2).—Jim Kennedy is an all-around good fellow and one of the best liked men in the mining camp. One day he sees Spanish Dan ill-treating his wife, Kate, and interferes in her behalf. Dan at once draws a gun on him and Kennedy falls to the ground severely wounded. The gunman is obliged to flee for his life.

Kennedy is carried home by the boys and a doctor sent for. While they are waiting for his arrival, Kate enters the house and announces her intention of looking after the sick man until his recovery. The man has been severely wounded and it is a long time before he is able to go out again. When he is better he asks Kate to stay and keep house for him as news has arrived that her husband has been killed in Mexico and she has now no home to go to.

After a time Jim is able to go prospecting again, but meets with a run of bad luck and is not able to get even a small quantity of gold. The luck runs just the other way with some of the other men, who strike a regular Klondike and bring back some large nuggets to the camp. Kennedy is such a popular fellow that they ask him to go along with them and share in their good fortune, an offer that they would not have made to any other man in the place.

Kennedy goes home and commences to get ready his kit for the trip. While he is packing he finds some baby clothes that have been carelessly left in the cupboard by Kate. He is at once filled with pity for the poor woman, who, now that her husband is dead, will have no means of supporting the little one. He feels that he owes his life to her careful nursing and, in gratitude for what she has done for him, he decides to marry her and bring up the child as if it were his own. He gives up the idea of going out with the gold diggers and rides off to fetch the parson instead, with whom he shortly returns. They are quickly united in holy wedlock, the woman being overjoyed at the prospect of a bright future with the man she has come to love.

BUNNY AS A REPORTER (June 3).—After having done a little newspaper work on the side, John Bunny applies to the editor of a provincial paper for a regular position on his staff. The editor, as a try-out, gives him a somewhat difficult assignment. Bunny is told to "cover" the secret suffrage meeting. Figuring that it would be impossible for a man to get in, Bunny disguises himself as a woman and arrives at the hall, announces that he brings greetings from a distant organization. He is enthusiastically received, being embraced by almost everyone present. After the principal has finished her oration, the visitor is called on to speak. Bunny rises and his remarks are greeted with cheers. All goes well until he notices the doorkeeper turning the key. Thinking he is trapped, Bunny in his fright drops his hand bag. His manner of picking it up discloses his sex and immediately the meeting is in an uproar. The door being locked, the reporter is unable to escape that way, but after considerable difficulty, he manages to get out of the window. An exciting chase follows across the lots, Bunny shedding various garments on the way. He eludes his pursuers by climbing a tree, but after a time they locate him and none of the women has the courage to climb after him. Their leader, however, is seized by a brilliant idea. Rushing to a nearby house she gets an axe and with the help of the others, hews down the tree. Bunny's pleas for mercy are of no avail. At the point of a hatpin he is obliged to confess his penitence and make a vow of silence. He is retained as a prisoner of war, and still wearing his borrowed corsage, forms a highly decorative exhibit on a float in the triumphant militant suffragettes' parade.

A MODERN PSYCHE (June 4).—Carter Weston, a novelist, notices a pretty young girl on the train reading his latest book, "A Modern Psyche." He is greatly struck by her beauty and sweetness, but does not speak with her as he has to get off at the next station. The girl is June Harmon, the daughter of John Harmon, the book and curio collector. She is returning from college and is going to help her father in cataloging his somewhat extensive library.

The next door neighbors of the Harmons are Mrs. Bradley and her daughter Nell, a college friend of June. Just after the girl's return from college, Mrs. Bradley sends out invitations for a fancy dress ball, to which she invites June. Mr. Harmon refuses permission to his daughter, but she makes up her mind to do just as she pleases and sets about designing a suitable costume. Looking over her new novel she sees a picture of Psyche and determines to go in that character.

Among the other guests invited to the house is Carter Weston, who happens to be a cousin of Nell Bradley. He was on his way there when he saw June on the train and since his arrival, has been looking after the preparations for the celebration. On the night of the ball, after most of the guests are assembled, Mrs. Bradley is suddenly taken very sick and the festivities have to be stopped. This happens before June's arrival at the house and when she arrives, she finds nothing but a deserted ballroom. It is there that she again meets Weston, and both at once recognize each other. Weston introduces himself and greatly admires June's costume, so plainly modeled after the illustration in his novel. June, on the other hand, is equally delighted to find that this entertaining young man is her best friend's cousin. He takes her home and leaves her at the gate, asking her permission to call upon her on the morrow.

The next day, Weston calls at the house with a letter of introduction to the elder Harmon, and gains further acquaintance with June through the pretence of consulting books in the library. He does not bother much about the books after Mr. Harmon has left the room, but taking June to his arms he tells her that she is the real object of his search, that he has come to bring her the love so long sought by the real Psyche.

THE HEART OF MRS. ROBINS (June 5).—A rather selfish and frivolous widow, Mrs. Robins, goes away to spend the summer with a gay party of tourists, leaving her little son, Bobby, in the care of a nurse. One day, while out for a walk, Bobby becomes acquainted with Dick Bronson, a scientist, who gets locked in his room and is helped out by Bobby, who climbs over the transom of the door and gets the key for him. After this Bobby meets Dick several times and a strong friendship is formed between them.

In one of his letters to his mother, Bobby tells about Dick and gets him to add a postscript, which he does saying that he is hoping soon to meet the mother of his little companion. Mrs. Robins is amused when she gets the letter, but at the same time angry at Dick's remark, which seems somehow to imply that she should be at home with her boy. By the advice of George French, her latest suitor, she writes to the nurse, saying that she must not allow Bobby to meet Mr. Bronson again and to Bronson asking him not to see the boy.

Bobby misses his new friend very much, for both the nurse and Dick obey orders, and worries over the enforced separation, so much so that he becomes very ill. He seems to be pining away and so the doctor writes to Mrs. Robins telling her that he will not answer for the consequences if she does not return. When she goes to the bedside, Bobby turns from her and will not recognize her. She cannot understand this until the nurse explains that the illness began soon after he had been forbidden to see his friend Dick. Mrs. Robins, much against her inclination, decides to send for Dick, who hurries to the bedside of the sick child. As soon as he sees Dick, Bobby brightens up and takes a turn for the better, going peacefully to sleep in his friend's arms. Dick remains quite still, not heeding the ache in his arm, until the boy wakes again. Bobby wakes up and fondly embraces both his mother and Dick, making them look at one another. Mr. Robins realizes that her place is beside her little boy and the love-light grows in her eyes as she sees Dick's evident fondness for him. It is easy to see that Bobby is in line for a new papa.

THE BUTLER'S SECRET (June 6).—After a serious quarrel with his father concerning his debts, Wallace Dixon leaves the house in anger, declaring that he will live his life as best pleases him. That night, Alfred Dixon, the father, hears a noise by the safe in his bedroom, where he is sleeping, and shoots at the intruder who escapes unharmed. Dixon rushes downstairs and almost falls over his son, who has tripped while passing through the portieres of the hall. Wallace indignantly denies the attempted robbery, but his father will not believe him. The young man leaves the house, vowing that he will never enter it again.

Late one night, Wallace, after Dixon has retired to bed, creeps to the house, almost starving, and seeing his old friend, Barrow, the butler, sitting before the open fire, he taps the window and is let into the house. Barrow, first making sure that the servants are all out of the way, takes Wallace to the kitchen and gives him a hearty meal. Wallace declares that he must leave immediately, but asks Barrow to take him to his father's bedroom that he may look upon him once again. Barrow takes the young man to the room, but has considerable difficulty in preventing him from waking Dixon. Indeed, just as they are leaving the room, he does wake. Dixon pulls a revolver from under his pillow and fires at the figures he sees in the dark. The butler falls wounded.

Dixon blames his son for the occurrence and is about to order him again from the house, when Barrow interrupts them. He tells them that Wallace was innocently blamed for the robbery of the safe. The real thief was Barrow's own son, who had knocked Wallace down as he passed out through the hallway and so drawn his father's attention to him. Dixon warmly embraces his son and agrees to forget his previous erratic behavior. The butler passes away, happy that he has at last unburdened his heart of the secret that had so long oppressed him.

THE FORGOTTEN LATCHKEY (June 7).—While staying at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Moore, some old friends, Mr. and Mrs. Burton receive invitations to a dance. The evening of the dance, Mrs. Moore tells them that she and her husband will be away for the night, staying at her mother's, and gives the key to Mrs. Burton so that she and her husband will have no trouble getting into the house when they return.

As soon as the Moores and Burtons have driven away to keep their respective engagements, Maggie, the cook, also leaves the house; she is going to a wedding celebration and expects to be away all night and to return in the morning before her master and mistress get back. She tells the sleepy housemaid, Bridget, that she has the key in her pocket-book.

When the Burtons get back from the dance they find that they have left the key behind. They ring and ring, but Bridget, who is a fat, sleepy individual, does not hear them. An attempt to enter the house by means of the cellar is futile. Burton does not have much trouble getting in through the cellar window but is unable to get through the door that leads into the kitchen, as it is locked. He succeeds, however, in knocking over an ash barrel and getting his clothes badly messed.

The Burtons then attempt to rouse the maid by telephoning to the house, but she still sleeps soundly and does not hear them. Incidentally it costs two dollars to appease the sleepy druggist for bringing him out of bed. They next decide to go to a hotel, but the clerk will not admit them as they have no baggage. The rest of the night they spend in a taxi-cab as it is too chilly to walk about the streets.

About eight o'clock in the morning, Maggie returns from the wedding party and sees the taxi in front of the house. Maggie looks inside, and seeing the sleepers, becomes alarmed and shrieks out that they are dead. Her screams awake Mr. and Mrs. Burton, who joyfully recognize her and get the key at last. Not the least of their troubles is that the taximeter has been piling up the bill steadily and Burton finds that he has about seventeen dollars to pay for what has been, at the best, an uncomfortable lodging house.

ESSANAY.

LET NO MAN PUT ASUNDER (June 3).—Arthur Winn, a prominent clubman and social favorite, is divorced by his wife. Disgusted with himself and suroundings, he goes out west. His love for Helen, his ex-wife could not be taken from him by the divorce courts, so he lived in hopes that he would some day be able to claim her again. Fate brings the two together in a small mining town in the west, where Arthur rescues his wife from a drunken miner. Her love returns to the man that loved her better than his life.

THE VALUE OF MOTHERS-IN-LAW (June 4).—Mr. Newly Hitched becomes jealous when he discovers his wife is wearing a gentleman's ring. Mrs. Newly Hitched returns the same compliments to her husband, when she discovers he has a ladies' fan in his possession. Wifey locks her husband out. Both send telegrams to their mothers. The mothers arrive. The value of mothers-in-law was when they brought the two jealous "children" together.

MADAME DU BARRY

A magnificent hand colored production of an episode in the life of the notorious court beauty and favorite of Louis XV of France. Historically correct and admirably done by an excellent cast of French artists. This picture is one of the finest examples of the motion picture art. It is one of the best short features on the market today. Absolutely flawless. Length 1100 feet.

By way of variety we have to offer three short trick comedies--namely:

328 feet—THE MYSTERIOUS DOLL—$32.80

This picture will be a marvelous delight for the children. It's one of the kind that the kiddies revel in and one that will amuse the grown-ups as much as it will the youngsters. One of those pictures where the dolls come to life and do all sorts of funny and wonderful things for a poor little girl.

394 feet—THE BRICKLAYERS' JOKE—$39.40

This is one of those strenuous boisterous comedies that puts the whole house in a roar the moment it begins, and the fun never stops until the last foot of film is run. There is action in every inch of it. The picture is entirely within the bounds of good taste and one of the kind that drives dull care away.

321 feet—GIVING HIM FITS—$32.10

This is a crazy thing but awfully funny. A thief gets into one of those haunted houses and is very glad to get out again. The house is bewitched and all kinds of things happen to him. Inanimate objects chastise the intruder and put him through a course of sprouts that ought to cure him of his evil ways forever.

kill his brother-in-law for testifying against his father. Helen, the wife of Tom, goes to warn her brother. In trying to save him from her now maddened husband, she is killed. Clay and his brother-in-law end the feud over the lifeless form of Helen.

PHILLIP MARCH'S ENGAGEMENT (June 6).—Phillip March becomes annoyed at the announcement of his engagement to Mary Adams. The society debutante had never met March, and she herself becomes very much annoyed. March finally decides to spend a few weeks with some friends of his in the country. Mary tries the same medicine. The intoxicated baggage man at the depot in the small town gets the trunks mixed and sends Phillip's trunk to Mary, and Mary's trunk to Phillip.

BRONCHO BILLY'S CAPTURE (June 7).—Juan Yukas, a greaser, schemes with his sweetheart, Evelyn, to hold up the stage and rob the driver of the express box. Broncho Billy is infatuated with Evelyn. The coach is held up. Broncho Billy captures Juan and takes him to Evelyn's shack, to get a drink of water. Evelyn betrays herself. Although he loves her, his duty compels Broncho Billy to take Evelyn prisoner.

DOLLY AND THE BURGLAR (June 4).—Because tiny Baxter is left by his sister, Early, and her girl friend, to care for sister's best-loved doll, little Baxter rebels and displays a decidedly masculine streak of temper. He proceeds to vent his spite on the doll, poking its eyes out and then smashing its head.

The new doll that takes the old one's place proves so attractive that night to little Early, that when she is supposed to be safely tucked in bed, she creeps into the library to see that her beautiful doll is asleep. Her advent frightens off a burglar intent on robbing the safe of a package of bonds and securities that Mr. Baxter had brought home with him for safekeeping.

Earley steals into the library in time to see the burglar leaving by the window, having been interrupted before he could complete the robbery. Early, fearing for the safety of her loved dolly with a strange man about the place, removes the package of bonds from the opened safe, substituting the box in which she has placed her dolly. The burglar returns and takes the wrong package, opens it, sees the doll, dashes it to the floor in anger and escapes by the window.

When Baxter and his wife find the safe open, they are distracted, until Early, in a temper at the sight of her broken doll, dashed the second package to the floor spilling the bonds and securities. When Early tells of the man at the window, Baxter realizes how close an escape she has had. He phones the police, who capture the robber, and Early is rewarded by the most beautiful doll she has ever possessed.

JUST A FIRE-FIGHTER (June 2).—Jane is terribly stage struck, and, possessed of an ambition to play the heroines of Shakespeare, especially Ophelia, her ambition causes her to scorn Moore, an honest young fireman, who has been appointed to duty in a vaudeville theater. Thinking to give her a lesson he secures her an opportunity on amateur night, and grimly watches her reception by the hooting, yelling gallery, and scornful occupants of the orchestra and boxes.

But when Jane's Ophelia causes the gallery to pelt her with vegetables, and draws insulting remarks from the young rowdies below, Moore dashes to the stage, and by descending into the orchestra and beating one young rowdy, and threatening the rest of the house with a similar fate, and throwing the stage man with the "book" into the alley, he gives Jane an opportunity to proceed with her try-out. Humiliated, Jane leaves the stage and hides in her dressing-room in tears.

Later, during the regular performance, fire breaks out on the stage, and a panic is averted by the fireman, who gets the audience safely out of the theater before leaving the burning stage to seek his girl. He finds her the last to attempt to leave, all the actresses and stage crew have escaped. All means of escape by stairs, elevator or fire-escape is cut off by walls of flame. Wrapping the girl up in wet sheets he manages to reach the roof, and just in time is able to get her to another roof, where the firemen are playing on the flames and thus make their escape. Cured by a double lesson, Jane renounces the stage and its role for the better part of "just a wife."

BISON.

THE BATTLE OF SAN JUAN HILL (3 parts, June 3).—In rendering assistance to a wounded Cuban, Inez Lopez, wife of Dr. Lopez, a loyal Spaniard, learns the secret of the source of Cuban ammunition. Gen. Simmons, a soldier of fortune, fighting for Couba Libre, hears the confession, and knowing Inez will make use of the knowledge, Simmons summons several of his men and makes Inez a prisoner. She is taken to Simmons' luxurious quarters at the outskirts of the city.

Dr. Lopez, who has for some time been very abusive to his wife, is, at this time, absent from home, having gone on one of his periodical visits, presumably to confer with Gen. Linares, but in reality his journey is actuated by a desire to see "the other woman," Dolores, a sensuous Cuban.

Simmons visits Inez's prison nightly, and on each call he attempts to make love to the beautiful girl. She scorns his advances, much to his amusement. On one of his visits he comes to the assistance of an old Cuban woman who is being robbed by a band of Spaniards, aid in the melee Simmons receives a wound in his arm. When Inez realizes that he is wounded she betrays for the first time that the handsome, reckless soldier of fortune has attracted her. She dresses his wound and at her gentle touch Simmons' first real interest in the woman is aroused. He feigns faintness and as Inez bathes his forehead her fingers linger in his thick, dark hair. He opens his eyes suddenly, and they hold each other's gaze with awakened understanding. to the imprisoned woman's aid.

Simmons has, in the meantime, received orders to move the ammunition to the front, and pays Inez a last visit, telling her she is now free to leave her prison. As they are about to part the American troops arrive and after battering down the door, rush in and seize Simmons. Inez in agony, realizing that her note has brought about Simmons' disgrace among the Americans, suddenly decides to defend the soldier of fortune. She steps laughingly forward and declares that there must be some mistake, as she is a willing prisoner. The American officer, with a covert sneer, leaves and Inez and Simmons say farewell. Simmons wished Inez to stay at the quarters, but telling him she can return home, sadly takes her departure, while Simmons rides away to the front.

Slowly returning to her home, Inez sees her husband and the Cuban girl in an affectionate embrace. She realizes his duplicity and exits sorrowfully.

Simmons, who has reported to the American general, is ordered to learn the movements of the Spanish forces. He visits a native drinking place, and finding the doctor and several of his cronies in a state of intoxication, Simmons plies the doctor with drinks and learns of the defense of San Juan Hill. He is about to depart, when a number of Spanish soldiers ride up to quench their thirst. They find that the intoxicated doctor believes Simmons to be one of their men and has told Spanish secrets. Simmons escapes and the Spaniards return just as Dr. Lopez, resenting his interference, has shot and killed Andreas, a lover of Dolores, who objects to the doctor's rough treatment of the Cuban girl.

Dr. Lopez retreats through a rear door, holding the Spaniards at bay, and after a running fight with them, succeeds in making his way to his own home, where Inez, realizing the seriousness of his wounds, with gentle sympathy administers to him. She goes for assistance, and while away the Spaniards find him, and after locking him in the room, they plant dynamite to blow the beautiful home to atoms. Inez, who has returned, pleads for her husband's life, but is led away just before the explosion. Dr. Lopez sees the preparation for dynamiting from the window, and the agony of fear mingles with the extreme agony he is suffering from his wounds. He falls praying across the couch as the explosion takes place.

Simmons shows wonderful courage during the battle of San Juan Hill. The wavering columns of men fight their way up the side of the hill toward the San Juan Block House, steadily advancing under the burning sun. They reach the top at last and the Spanish flag gives way to the Stars and Stripes.

Simmons, who is wounded in the engagement, is assisted home by two of his men. He finds no comfort in the luxurious quarters, for he misses the presence of the girl who shouldered dishonor to save him. He does not know that even while he is longing for her, Inez, finding her home a smoking ruin and her husband dead, has turned instinctively to him. She slips in as he mourns for her, and with a great love shining in her eyes, drops to her knees by his side. With wonder and love, Simmons, the soldier of fortune, claims his mate.

THE SPIRIT OF THE FLAG (2 parts, June 7).—Dr. Reid, a young American physician in the Philippines, risks his life in the cause of patriotism, and eventually wins the love of the girl of his choice. With the idea of developing in the natives in his community the spirit of manly citizenship, Dr. Reid requests the War Department to furnish him with a number of discarded Winchesters with which to drill the natives. His request is granted and he succeeds in getting together quite an enthusiastic company. Dr. Reid is not the only instructor in patriotism. Young Pauline Bush, a teacher in the Islands, has for some time been instructing her pupils in all that the American flag means to her. When she finds that Dr. Reid is also patriotically inclined, a bond of friendship is cemented between the two Americans.

Bonita, one of Pauline's pupils, has for some time been deeply but hopelessly in love with the young doctor, and is very despondent when she sees the growing attraction between the young Americans. Her father wishes to join Dr. Reid's company, but because of his age is not allowed to do so. Dr. Reid, however, gives him a gun, which the old man becomes very fond of.

Camped close to the settlement is a company of Spaniards, one of whom, through disorderly conduct, is stripped of his uniform and driven from camp. This renegade makes his way to the settlement and there encounters Bonita, the young native girl. Bonita's beauty attracts the renegade, who makes insulting advances to her. Doctor Reid witnesses the encounter and after a short, sharp fight with the renegade, he is sent about his business. The renegade, smarting under the drubbing he has received, vows revenge on the American, and when he discovers him drilling the natives, he hastens to the Spanish camp and informs the officer in charge that the American doctor is teaching the Filippinos war. The Spaniards hasten to the settlement and finding Bonita's father fondling the gun given him by the doctor, they decide to make an example of him.

They seize the old man and drag him to a nearby wall, where they proceed to execute him. Bonita, who witnesses the shooting of her father, is wild with grief, and runs to her beloved teacher and tells her what has occurred. Pauline fearlessly rushes to the place of the execution, and furiously reprimands the two Spaniards who are standing by the body. They debate for a moment, then grab the teacher and attempt to drag her away. Dr. Reid, who is hunting nearby, sees the struggle and swiftly dispatches both soldiers. He hastens to Pauline's side and leads both girls away.

Dr. Reid realizes the significance of the shooting of the old man and quickly gathers his little company together. They are not a moment too soon, for the Spaniards charge the settlement. The women and children hide at the school house, where they are at last joined by the men, fighting each inch of the way. A desperate battle is waged around the tiny school house and the doctor and his little band are more than outnumbered.

Bonita sees the battle from a distance and hastens swiftly to the American camp and informs the officer what she has seen. The American troops hurry to the scene of the conflict and reach the schoolhouse just as the doctor, who has fired his last round of ammunition, is about to surrender. The Americans quickly drive the Spaniards from the field, but Bonita, who has followed, is shot. She falls, clutching the American flag which she has learned to love. Dr. Reid and Pauline find the young native girl and feelingly drape her remains with the silken folds of "Old Glory."

NESTOR.

A MIXUP IN BANDITS (June 2).—Eddie and Lee leave the ranch house to visit their cousins in the city. The girls have never been West and after supper persuade the boys to recount some of their adventures. The boys exchange a meaning wink and Eddie, the more fertile liar of the two, tells how he and Lee rescued a settler and his family from the Indians while they were penned up in their cabin. The girls shiver as Eddie tells the tale of their terrific deeds of daring and of how the two of them exterminated a whole tribe of Indians.

Eddie gets through and the girls' eyes glow with pride at possessing two such brave cousins. Lee tells the tale of the girl abducted by a fierce and bloodthirsty band of bandits, who took her to their rocky cave in the wilds of the forest and tied her to a stake while they heartlessly played "seven up" on the top of a barrel. Eddie and Lee smiled at the offer of assistance and sallied forth, shot the leader and captured the rest of the bandits and returned the girl to the bosom of her sorrowing family. The cousins, whose breath has been coming in gasps, give a deep, united sigh and fall in love with the heroic defenders of the helpless and the innocent.

The boys return home, and in due course the two girl cousins are invited to the ranch. Soon after they arrive the news comes that Peevish Pete, the notorious desperado, is at large. The sheriff, cowboys and the boys' father start in pursuit, but Eddie and Lee politely but firmly refuse to go. The cousins are astonished and twit the boys with want of bravery. They say they will go to show the girls, and getting to a safe distance they sit down and smoke, but take to a tree when they hear a roar. It is only a burro! The girls see them and tell the boys' sisters and they determine to punish the boys for their cowardice. They dress up as bandits, and with guns and masks, steal upon the boys and take them off trembling, begging for mercy. They tie them to a tree and shoot at their feet, and slipping a note in Eddie's pocket, they release them and tell them to go. The boys flee, panic-stricken, as the bullets fly around them. The boys read the note, which is from the girls, and which says, "You are some brave heroes—NOT."

They meet the sheriff and posse returning with the bandit, and tell of their humiliation and the sheriff laughingly agrees to help them. The party hides in the bushes, and, emptying the bandit's gun, tell him to accost the girls. He does this as the party cover him from the bushes, and reduces the girls to abject terror. Eddie and Lee fly to the rescue and retake the tame bandit, and are reinstated as heroes, for the girls take off their masks and capitulate.

THE IDOL OF BONANZA CAMP (June 4).—Nan is one of those unfortunate young women who have got into that groove where things look hopeless. Nan is employed at the saloon in an old-time mining camp, and has gradually become accustomed to being the accomplice of a gambler and adventurer, Kid Renaud.

Things are very slow, and when news comes of the prosperous promise of the new camp at Bonanza, the Kid decides to go, and persuades the none too willing Nan to join him, with the idea of making some adventurous clean-up. In order to fit their ends, the two arrange to be strangers in the new camp.

The Kid arrives on horseback and is made the butt of the jokes of the miners, giving him the desire to get even with his tormentors. Nan is delayed somewhat on the way, and is seen by Sandy, a miner, who spurs ahead and tells the boys that there is a woman coming. They all spruce up and await her arrival. She comes and the men see a bashful, pretty woman and are abashed; all but

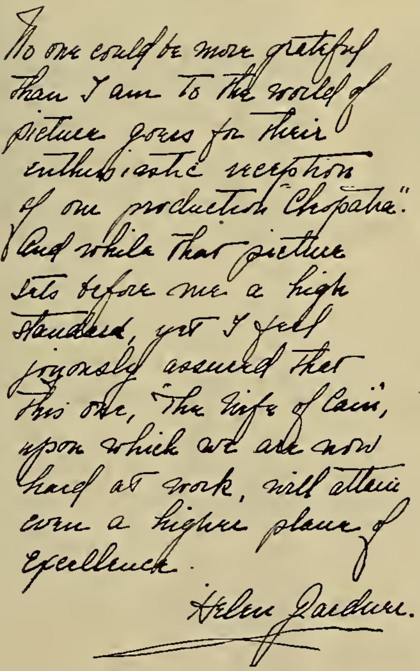
A Word from Miss Gardner



No one could be more grateful than I am to the world of picture goers for their enthusiastic reception of our production "Cleopatra". And while that picture sets before me a high standard, yet I feel joyously assured that this one, "The Wife of Cain", upon which we are now hard at work, will attain even a higher plane of excellence.

Gentleman George, who, doffing his hat, helps her down and gets her a chair. "Where can I get a room?" The question is a facer; but George acts decisively, and taking some of the boys to his shack hard by, he sets them to work removing the debris from the outside and furnishing up the inside. Several miners add bits of furniture and very soon George escorts Nan to her new quarters, where they leave her, her mind in an upheaval, for this gallantry and kindness are new to her. The Kid has watched it all with contempt and amusement.

Time goes on and George's attention to Nan and his unvarying thought and kindness raise the new woman in her, and the hold of the Kid loses its grip. Nan endears herself to the miners by singing to them in the evenings, and they make her presents of gold dust, which is promptly appropriated by the Kid on his secret calls.

One day the miners deposit their dust in a chest in Montana's cabin, where George also occupies a blanket and concocts dishes out of tins and things. The Kid watches them and he decides that the time for a clean-up has arrived. The men see him and mistrusting him, take the chest over to Nan's, and despite her appeals, they insist upon leaving it there.

At night the Kid brings two horses and surprises Nan, who has just left George wondering disconsolately why she will not marry him. The Kid demands the key, and Nan, now resolved to turn the leaf for good, refuses. He prepares to break the chest open, when Nan runs to the window and fires three times. George hears the shots and runs to the door. The Kid tells her he will kill anyone coming in, and she, in terror, tells George through the door she is all right. He goes to the window, sees what is happening, and smashing the glass, covers the Kid.

Nan intercedes for the Kid and he is run out of the camp. She tells George of her past life, and he shows her a haven of refuge and forgetfulness by opening his arms to her.

OWANA, THE DEVIL WOMAN (June 6).—The old chief desires to see his son provided with a squaw, but she must be good and beautiful. He summons many braves and sends them to distant camps and villages, calling for an Indian maiden, one who will be a fit mate for Ortega, the son of the powerful chief. From the villages come many maidens, including the beautiful and modest Mona. In one of the villages the old hag, the "Devil Woman," hears the message and decides that her daughter, Kulush, shall be chosen.

The day of the choosing arrives and the maidens file by the expectant Ortega. He gazes at them with indifference until Mona slowly raises her eyes to his, when he smiles. Kulush is led to Ortega by her mother, who watches him closely. Ortega does not smile. The maidens form a circle around Ortega and smile. They dance and Ortega impulsively pulls Mona from the circle and his choice is made. The maidens shower the couple with the corn and flowers they have brought and depart as the "Devil Woman" forms her horrid schemes.

One day the hag discovers the weeds she is searching for, and with a triumphant and malicious grin she throws them on the fire, incanting the while. She throws the ashes in the air and lo! Mona sees the beloved form of Ortega slowly change into a beautiful pinto pony. The "Devil Woman" croons her joy and Mona runs in fear, the pony always at her shoulder. Arriving at the village, Mona tells the story, and Comanche, the pony, nods an affirmative. Darkface, who himself admires Mona, is secretly pleased, while the rest of the tribe show their sorrow and pet the pony. Darkface tries to persuade Mona to go with him, but she points sadly to Comanche. He determines to get the pinto out of the way in order to compel Mona to listen to him. He takes Comanche away into the woods, hobbles him, and jeering at him, returns. He surprises Mona at the waterhole, puts his hand over her mouth, and carrying her off, ties her to a tree until she will obey his will.

Comanche undoes the hobbles and starts in search of Mona. He finds her and loosening her bonds with his teeth, he frees her; but she, weakened with long standing, falls, whereupon Comanche lies beside her and helping Mona gets her on his back, rises and gallops away. They meet the revengful Darkface and Comanche edges him over a cliff. The Devil Woman finds him so and goes for herbs. Comanche looks over the cliff and starts a big rock over the edge. It crushes the inhuman couple as Manitou, the glid fairy of the Indians, rides on and flourishes a spear. The spell is broken and Comanche gradually fades away and Ortega stands again before his beloved Mona.

THE KIDNAPPED TRAIN (June 8).—As the result of a strike, a foundry lies idle and the men become ugly. The owner upholds the superintendent, who has been cheating both him and the men by falsifying the payrolls. The superintendent's stenographer, a young girl, learns of his duplicity, and telegraphs the owner. The superintendent decides to take more of the owner's money and securities, and, to prevent exposure, locks the stenographer in the office vault. He then takes a train for New York.

The girl's lover, a railroad fireman, knows that she is in the office. He comes for her and discovers that she is in the vault. As the superintendent is the only one who knows the combination, the fireman and his engineer pursue the New York train on their engine and overtake it. After a desperate struggle the car containing the superintendent is dragged back to the foundry by the fireman's engine.

The superintendent is forced to open the vault and release the girl. The owner, learning that he has been cheated and robbed, brings the strike to an end.

BILLY IN ARMOR (June 2).—Billy Quirk and Count Gastrome are rivals for Violet Horner's heart. Vi's dad wishes her to marry into nobility, but Vi loves Billy. Dad has forbidden Billy entrance to his house, but by a clever ruse Billy gets in.

The Count tries to steal some of Vi's birthday presents, but Billy catches him in the act. Billy, who is in a suit of armor, steals them.

Later, by dropping the presents into the pockets of the different guests, Billy makes each think that they are kleptomaniacs. Dad, worried, telephones to the police. A diamond brooch is lost. Billy finds this and drops it into the Count's pocket. When the police arrive the Count (not knowing the brooch is in his pocket), suggests that everyone be searched. The brooch is found on him and he is arrested. Billy then succeeds in getting all the jewels into dad's pocket. Dad discovers this while standing in front of the armor. Billy raises the visor of the armor and catches dad looking at the jewels, and threatens to tell the guests that dad has done the stealing. Thus he succeeds in getting dad's consent to marry Violet.

MARY'S ROMANCE (June 3).—Mary is a country girl, and lives on a farm with her parents. However, she is very romantic and her head is full of ideals, gained by reading numerous romantic books. John, the farm hand, has induced Mary to promise to marry him. Mary is out reading one day, when Donald Belmar, on a hunting trip from the city, comes across her. He flirts with her and she sees in him her ideal of the books, she listens to his flatteries and is very much smitten with him. Arthur, a small boy, sees the flirtation and informs John. John arrives on the scene just as Belmar is kissing Mary. John assaults Belmar, nearly chokes him to death. Belmar goes away and John takes Mary home, Mary refusing to speak to him. The next day Mary received a letter from Belmar telling her how happy he was while with her and inviting her to come to the city to visit him. This she decides to do, and in the night leaves home. She arrives in the city and the next day goes to Belmar's home. To her surprise, she discovers that Belmar is married, and that she has been deceived. She returns home, but her father orders her from the house. There being nothing left to do but commit suicide, she journeys to the river and decides to end her life. John calls at her home and Mary's mother informs him of Mary's return and of how she was treated by her father. John runs to the river and is just in time to save Mary from a watery grave. Mary realizes the true depth of John's love and they make up their quarrel. They go to the minister and are married, Mary vowing to always look upon John as her only ideal. They return home and upon explanation are reconciled to her mother and father.

THE NEW TYPIST (June 8).—The clerk and the stenographer are in love. The boss, who is married, never suspects it. The stenographer goes out to lunch and loses her pocketbook. She returns to the office crying. The boss comforts her and makes good the amount she lost. She continues to cry and the boss kindly pats her on the back. The clerk sees this, and imagining that he is about to lose his girl, becomes insanely jealous. He writes a letter to the boss' wife, telling her to watch him and the typist. That afternoon the typist and the clerk make up and the clerk takes her in his arms and kisses her. At this moment the boss enters and kicks the clerk out. The typist attacks the boss and she also is discharged. The boss then phones an employment agency for the homeliest typist they have, hoping thus to do away with all lovemaking in his office. They send a very, very, homely woman, and she is installed as typist. Meanwhile the boss' wife determines to find out about her husband's doings with the typist, and getting a revolver, goes to the office. After first having written the typist that she would kill her. The old typist returns for her bag and the new typist chases her out. She tells the clerk and he goes back. Meanwhile the boss' wife has arrived, and upon seeing the typist, realizes that her suspicions have been false, as her husband could never leave her for one so homely. The clerk arrives and is chased out. The typist, scared by the revolver, also runs out and seeks a policeman. However, hubby returns and embracing his wife, she tears up the note that aroused her jealousy.

BLACK AND WHITE (June 8).—Harold calls on Mabel. While he is there her friend Lily calls. Harold seems to be smitten with her and ignores Mabel. When she leaves he escorts her home. The next day, he again calls on Mabel. He leaves and she follows him. He goes to Lily's house and Mabel is insanely jealous. She returns home. She having ordered a bottle of toilet water from the druggist's, upon her return home the package is waiting for her. She opens the package and notices that there has been a mistake. The druggist, besides the toilet water, has sent a bottle of nitrate of silver. On this bottle is a caution label, warning one that to apply it to one's skin would turn the skin black. Mabel decides to send it to Lily as toilet water, and changes the contents of the bottles. She sends the bottle up to Lily with a letter that it is great for the complexion. She opens the package and places same on the mantel. Harold calls and they go into the next room. Then Mabel calls to see how her game works, and is surprised by the entrance of a sneak thief. She faints. Harold and Lily hear her scream and rush in. Lily says that the toilet water will revive her and she applies the supposed water to her face. She awakens, and when she sees the bottle in Lily's hands she realizes that she has been caught in her own trap. She returns home and her colored butler imagines she is one of his own tribe and attempts to make love to her. She makes known who she is and is left to her own remorse.

THE PILLAR OF PERIL (June 5).—May Rodgers and Ray Sterling are classmates at an university. A mutual attraction ends in their engagement on graduation day. May goes home to the ranch house of her father, while Ray enters the forest service. After receiving his outfit, Ray rides into the mountains to the Cedro station, where he reports to the chief ranger and is put on fire patrol. Meanwhile, May has visited her father's different cattle camps and is becoming familiar once more with riding.

While riding one day she meets Ray and takes him home to introduce him to her father. When Rodgers, Sr., learns that Ray is a forest service man, he displays a good deal of resentment and orders him from the place, because of the natural enmity of a certain class of stockmen for the service.

In the forest there are two half-breed trappers whose carelessness in the handling of brush and slashings has caused them trouble from the service more than once. Notwithstanding this, however, these men continue to pile brush near their cabin. To their place comes May on one of her trips. Fearless she asks for a drink and they invite her into the cabin to get it. Once in their habitation one of them attempts to kiss her. His companion interferes and it looks for a moment like a first-class fight, but the trappers end their difficulty by determining to play a game of cards for May. They bind her and begin playing. May's quick wits assure her that a fire cannot long pass unsuspected in that country and at that season when there were many fire patrolmen about, and she cautiously steals a brand from the fire-place of the trappers' house. She throws this through the window into the brush-heap, which speedily breaks into flames.

Far off in the hills Ray sees the column of ascending smoke. The flames spread and the house is ignited and beginning to burn through as the trappers start for May, their game of cards ended. The winner of the game is opposed by the loser and while they fight Ray gets to the cabin. He carries May through the flames and to safety, while the trappers, awakening to their danger by the growing heat, forget their own troubles in a desire for life and rush outside. May takes Ray home with her and as soon as she tells the story of his bravery in saving her, her father's anger turns to something more charitable and he makes Ray welcome. The story ends with the approval of the father extended to the young folks' plans.

WHEN LUCK CHANGES (June 2).—Young Cal Jim had often called upon Betty but never found the courage to propose. His pal, Mark Halworthy did, however, and Betty accepted.

Disappointed, Cal asked and received a grubstake from Mark and went away into the hills to seek gold and heart balm. Two years later Mark took to gambling. He neglected Betty and, one day, intoxicated, struck her. Then Cal returned and the pair had a joyous meeting, a meeting witnessed by the drunken Mark. He assulted her on her way home and with what remained in her pocket-book went back to the saloon to gamble. He quickly lost the little change and in coming from the saloon, roughly knocked down a bad-looking Mexican who carelessly blocked his way. This same Mexican, Mark had irritated persistently on each occassion of his periodical drunks and gambling losses. This time the Mexican, nursing a fiendish hatred toward Mark, slipped behind the barn and shot him dead. No one could be found on whom to fix suspicion and the matter gradually dropped for Mark was never popular.

A short time after the shooting, Cal, having attended to some small business matter wended his way to Mark's home to divide his bag of gold, according to the law of the West, for Mark, be it remembered had grub-staked him. There he found the widow crying softly. But in the days that followed, Cal found little difficulty in wiping away those tears and leading her to a happiness that should have been their's from the first.

THE WISHING SEAT (June 5).—Some fashionable mansions have "wishing seats" hewn from the living rock. These wishing seats have wondrous powers for old maids and romanceful girls. Thus, it was not unusual that pretty Clarice should desert the crowd about the tennis court and make her solitary way to the old stone bench. There she wishes devoutly for a lover—not such a lover as little Jimmy Randolph who was then paying assidious attention to Jenny Grey, nor the Count Rudolph, nor Billy Hasbrouck or any of the rest of those butterflies of fashion.

High up on a hill commanding a beautiful view, Charlie Benton placed his easel and got out his paint and brushes. In adjusting the easel, the ground gave way and down went Charlie, easel, brushes and all. Over and over he rolled on the soft turf, come up with an unexpected bump and at the very foot of the wishing seat to the horror and surprise of pretty Clarice. Such an answer to a wish!

Later Clarice's mother grew worried over the long absence of the younger folks. So she and papa started on a round of the estate. One by one they came upon loving couples. Billy Hasbrouck and his Mabel, the Count Rudolph and his fiancee, Jimmy Randolph and his pretty Jenny Gray and a half dozen others. Each couple fell in line in the search and at last they came upon the wishing seat—and discreetly turned their backs, for there was Clarice being shamelessly kissed by the artist chap.

VIA CABARET (June 7).—Harry Reeder was a steady visitor at the cabaret and he visited with a single thought in mind—pretty Vail, the singer.

Harry discussed marriage with his father but the aristocratic Reeder emphatically said "No." So Harry did what every other American young man does under the circumstances—marries the girl. They tried to keep it secret, but Harry's dear friend, Bert, who in secret loved the girl, took pains to let Reeder know of it.

Thus the young couple were driven from the parental roof and took a small, cheap bungalow. After that Bob wouldn't let her work—he took the violin and secured her place at the cabaret. Bert often went there and exulted in secret. But if Bert had done nothing more serious than exult in secret, everything would have gone well, but Bert insisted in seeing Vail and times his visits so as to be found there by Harry. One day Bert, refused admission by Vail, pinned a note to the door-post, intimating that she intended to elope with him that afternoon. At the same time the heart of old man Reeder relented and he started toward the little bungalow. Thus Harry coming home found the note a minute after, captured Bert and trounced him soundly. The father, witnessing the incident, found no further enmity in his heart toward the young couple and took them home with him to better things.

THANHOUSER.

A PULLMAN NIGHTMARE (May 25).—The small boy was very happy when he took his first journey in a Pullman car, and he would have been much happier had he been able to win the attention of the little girl across the aisle. She treated him with disdain, however, and the small boy brooded over it.

Perhaps it was his unusual bed, maybe his mental commotion was to blame, or perhaps he ate too heartily in the dining car. Anyway he had some exciting dream experiences, and when he told his father about them later, the man patted him on the head and simply said, "That was some dream, son."

Of course, you could hardly be surprised that the boy dreamt the car was on fire and he was a hero, for Pullman cars get mighty hot at times. "The only thing that worries me," said the father, while talking the matter over later with his wife, "is how Willie ever dreamed that a man on horseback kidnapped a child in a moving Pullman car. It shows the lad has imagination, but it is impossible for me to determine whether he is headed for Washington or Mattewan."

The mother sighed, too, but she hoped for the best.

CARMEN (3 parts, May 27).—Don Jose, the hero of the famous book by Prosper Merimec, and Bixet's celebrated opera, was born in the Basque Provinces of Spain. He was a young, good-looking peasant, devoted to his old mother, and greatly in love with his pretty sweetheart, Mercedes.

The plans of Jose and Mercedes for an early marriage were rudely dissipated by the news that the young man had been drafted for service in the Spanish army. Jose comforted his mother and Mercedes, telling them that he would soon return and they would never be separated again.

The young man proved to be a good soldier, and in a short time was made a corporal. His commanding officer, who had great confidence in the new corporal's ability and trustworthiness, sent him with a detachment of soldiers to preserve order in a certain unruly quarter of the town.

Jose was strolling by a cigar factory one day, when some of the girls employed in the establishment came out. One of them, a beautiful brunette called Carmen, held a red rose between her teeth, and as she passed the young officer, she cast a coquettish glance at him, and then, taking the rose, tossed it to him. He let it fall to the ground unheeded. Furious, she ran off, followed by the mocking laughter of her companions.

But Jose was more attracted by the girl than his manner had indicated. When he thought himself unobserved, he picked up the rose and pressed it to his lips. Carmen, from a distance, saw the action and smiled.

Almost before the soldier realized it, he was completely infatuated with the fascinating cigarmaker. Gradually, though his better nature struggled against it, he forgot his mother and Mercedes, his faithful sweetheart. Then the moment came when he had to choose between his loyalty as a soldier and his devotion to Carmen.

A dispute arose in the factory between Carmen and Michele, another cigar girl. They fought, but the struggle was of short duration, and soon Michele lay on the ground, a dagger wound in her side. The soldiers rushed into the factory, and Jose, much against his inclinations, made the girl a prisoner and took her before his commanding officer.

Carmen was committed to Jose's charge until she could be turned over to the proper authorities. And then, the girl, confident of her power, exerted all her wiles to make the young man forget his oath to his country. She succeeded and Jose let her escape, but at the cost of dishonor to himself.

Then Jose was cast into prison, but Carmen tricked his jailers and Jose escaped. They fled together to the mountains, where they were welcomed by the gypsies, Carmen's people. There Jose led a life that was far different from the peaceful, religious atmosphere of his native village, and the stirring martial days when he was a soldier. The gypsies were smugglers and he became one of their band. The uniform of a soldier, which had been a familiar and welcome sight to him in former days, was an object of fear and hate, now that he was a violator of the laws, not its defender.

Jose's mother, in her quiet home in the mountains, was dying, mercifully unaware of her son's disgrace. Just before she passed away she gave the cross she had worn all her life to the weeping Mercedes, Jose's former sweetheart, who still loved him, and told her to give it to Jose with her blessing.

Mercedes set out on her quest, but to her surprise and grief, found that Jose was no longer an honored soldier of the Spanish king, but a fugitive from justice. Her search seemed hopeless, for none knew where he had gone.

Although an outlaw, Jose was not unhappy, for Carmen made him think he stood first in her affections, but when she met Escamillo, the noted toreador, her attitude changed. The idol of the Spanish populace was a far more attractive figure to the beautiful gypsy than the fugitive soldier, and Jose soon found himself supplanted by the toreador. Frantic, he reproached Carmen, but she laughed at him.

Escamillo, desirous of exhibiting his professional skill to Carmen, invited her to be present at a bullfight. The girl, sneering scornfully at the jealous protestations of Jose, accompanied the toreador to the arena, where the bullfight was to take place. Mad with rage Jose followed them. Carmen watched the bullfight with absorbed interest, and blew kisses to Escamillo as he bowed low to the plaudits of the crowd. It was her farewell to the toreador, for at that moment, Jose, leaping forward, buried his knife in her bosom.

The soldiers crowded around Jose and made him their prisoner. He gazed in a dazed manner at the dying Carmen; then feeling a gentle touch on his arm, he turned and looked into the eyes of Mercedes, his faithful sweetheart. Pityingly she told him of his mother's death, and gave him the cross and her message. Jose bowed his head in sorrow and remorse. He had forsaken the ones who had loved him for a woman who brought him to disgrace and death. Silently he turned, surrounded by his captors, and made his way toward the prison.

BARNEY OLDFIELD'S RACE FOR A LIFE (June 2).—The girl is loved by the hero and the villain. The hero wins the consent of the girl to marry him. The villain refuses to accept the girl's decision, and his advances are resented by the hero, resulting in a personal encounter between the two men in which the villain is thrashed. Burning with rage, he secures the assistance of two other villains, and the girl is captured and carried to the railroad track. She is fastened to the rails.

Taking a handcar, the villains race down the track. A train is not due for a long time, and the intense hatred of the villain will not permit him to wait. He determines to steal an engine and drive the iron monster over the girl. In the railroad yard the train crew is on board a train about ready to depart. The villains overpower the crew, and the engine starts on its mission of death.

But hold! the villain may yet be frustrated in his vile work! The hero has been apprised of the dastardly deed about to be committed. He must beat the villain to the scene. But how? Barney Oldfield and his racing car! The famous speed marvel listens with sympathetic ear to the story gasped in his ear by the hero, who seats himself in the car. The auto leaps forward and the race is on.

Hanging from the cab window the villain sees the racer coming like a lightning streak along the road. He throws the throttle wide open and the engine fairly leaps on its way. Sixty miles an hour—seventy—eighty. The villain realizes that something must be done quickly and brings forth his dynamite bombs. These are lighted with the big black cigar which he is smoking. One by one they are hurled at the automobile racing madly along the railroad track. But Oldfield and the hero escape unharmed, beat the train and rescue the girl—just as the engine rushes by. The hero is pursued by the police and kills five of them. Having no bullets left in his gun he chokes himself.

PASSIONS—HE HAD THREE (June 5).—Henry is a big, fat country boy with three passions. He likes eggs, milk and girls. He steals the eggs from the nests, sucks their contents, and refills the shells with water. When the family sit down to breakfast and the shells are broken the crime is discovered and Farmer Jones places a big bear trap, covered with straw, in front of the nests. Henry sees this done, however, and says nothing.

Henry weighs about 260 pounds. The Jones cow, Loretta, seems suddenly to have gone dry. Of course Henry does not tell them that he has been making secret visits to Loretta with a cup.

Henry is in love with Jenny Brown. Si Black is also enamored of the fair Jenny. Si only weighs about 102 pounds, and when the rivals become engaged in a physical conflict it looks dark for Si until he practices a new kind of Jui-Jitsu on the stomach of his foe. For the nonce, Henry accepts defeat, but turns the tables on Si when he lures him to the concealed bear trap and pushes him onto it. The jaws close upon poor Si's legs, and Henry calls every one to come and see the captured egg thief.

HELP! HELP! HYDROPHOBIA! (June 5).—The professor does not approve of his daughter's suitor. His disapproval is so marked that it is finally noticed by said swain—Jim Brown—when he is kicked out of the house by the father of his lady love, and he resolves to be careful in the future and not be subjected to further indignities.

The Professor has been experimenting with germs, and discovers some new and deadly ones which he exhibits to some of his medical friends. The germs have been raised in a culture of milk, and when the professor escorts his guests to the door the milk bottle and the cup are left on the table.

Unfortunately, Jim Brown seized this particular moment to make a call on his lady love, accompanied by his dog, making his entrance through an open window. The dog is thirsty, so he innocently pours more milk into the cup and gives it to the animal. The professor, returning, sees what is taking place, and crying: "The dog is full of deadly germs," runs away. The dog, attracted by the queerly acting, screaming man, runs after him, and soon there is tremendous excitement, half the town running with the Professor, and the others running after him and the dog. After many narrow escapes from the deadly teeth of the dog, the professor finally reaches a place of safety.

RUNA AND THE BLACK HAND (May 24).—Runa, a spoiled little girl, resents the arrival of a baby brother, who takes attention from her. She and the nurse and baby go to the parg and while there she sees a stork, and is told by the nurse that the bird brought her little brother. She decides to make it take back the intruder. While the attention of the nurse is attracted, she removes the baby and leaves him by the stork pond. Some time before this, Runa had investigated the pail of a workman who is tarring a tree. When the nurse returns she finds the print of a black hand on the bench where the baby was. It is quite clear to the police that the child has been taken by the Black Hand.

Angela has had a quarrel with her lover, Angelo, owing to the fact that she has no dowry and therefore cannot marry him. She is weeping in the park when she hears the baby's cries and goes to it. Her pity overcomes her and she takes it home. Angelo returning once more to beg her pardon, finds the child and is suspicious. The girl then explains the finding of the baby. He discovers the print of a black hand on its clothes. They are terrified and decide to return the child where they found it. Before they can do so, they are arrested and brought to the station house where they meet the unhappy parents. Runa, now repentant, confesses and when the baby is restored, the father and mother embrace her. She leaves the print of her little black hands on her mother's dress. All is then discovered. She explains that she returned the baby to the stork because since it came nobody loves her any more. Father and mother, realizing how they have hurt the child, forgive her. Angela gets her dowry through the reward offered by the father for the one who finds his child.

HEARTH LIGHTS (May 26).—Paul Norton, a young artist, dwells with his mother in a country estate of fading grandeur. Learning that Kent Raokin, a wealthy young art student, is stopping at Marvin Mansion, a nearby summer estate, Paul hopes to interest him in his paintings. Kent and the Marvins are leaving in the late autumn for their city home, when Paul calls with a specimen of his work. Ula Marvin admires his work but Kent, who loves her, has only sneers for it and Paul is left alone in humiliation as the Marvin auto departs. A white rose lies in his hand, a token of sympathy from Ula, covertly given. Kent opens his studio in the city and fails miserably. The critics condemn his work. He asks Marvin for Ula's hand, but is told to prove his worth.

Desperate, he sends for some of Paul's pictures and exhibits them as his own work. The pictures create a sensation and renown comes to Kent. He pays court to Ula more successfully. Far away, Paul sits by his mother's hearth caressing a withered rose. He has Kent's check for $75 in payment of his pictures. On a cold winter day, Ula sets out on an errand to the country mansion in an auto. The gasoline gives out and the chauffeur departs in quest of more. At a village store he gets drunk. Paul discovers Ula nearly frozen and takes her home. She is made comfortable and as she sleeps in the glow of the fire, Paul is inspired to paint his great picture "Hearth Lights." Ula is enthusiastic and poses for him. Love deepens between the two and she yields to his embrace. But he regrets his presumption and vows that they must not meet again. Kent learns that a prize of $5,000 will be given for the best painting entered in a certain club gallery. He secures "Hearth Lights" owing to Paul's poverty. Ula sends a clipping of the offering to Paul who hastily paints a picture. Paul's entry is his poorest work and at the exhibition he finds it in an obscure corner. Paul hides himself in a corner in the main gallery; Kent receives the prize for "Hearth Lights." Ula arrives late and discovers Paul's entry. Her disappointment hurts Paul. Kent enters, triumphant, and admonished by her father, Ula yields to his lovemaking. Kent shows her his prize winning "Hearth Lights." His perfidy dawns upon her and she denounces him before all. Paul is attracted to the spot, and Kent, hopelessly cornered, returns the check, which is transferred to Paul together with fame. Paul is urged to stop with the Marvins. Within the magnificent walls of her home, Paul clasps Ula in his arms, while far away his mother dreams, alone in the light of the hearth.

THE MASTER CRACKSMAN (2 parts—May 31).—Robert Thatcher invents a device to protect banks from thieves. This is bought up for a few thousands by Thomas who later makes a million out of Thatcher's invention. Thatcher discovering a weakness in his system, perfects this, and when he offers the perfect invention to Thomas for $50,000, his offer is refused and he is ordered out of the office. This breaks his heart and he dies in poverty. His young son, Robert, about to finish his course at an institute of technology, discovers the truth about the Thomas patent and how his father was cheated. He gets work in the Thomas shops and deliberately sets about to prove the weakness of the "Safe Protective" system. When he has gained all the knowledge he needs—he sets out to break every bank carrying the Thomas system. His little sweetheart, Madge, afraid to let him go alone, accompanies him, attired in boy's suit and cap.

The Thomas people receive reports from all their protected banks, telling of a mysterious cracksman, who, with master hand, opens every safe, proving that the Thomas System has a flaw. But strange to relate, the bank breaker steals not a cent.

A detective is put on the case and one night he apprehends Robert and his little "pal" in the act of breaking into the Shoe and Leather Bank. The girl breaks down and Robert tells their story to the detective whose sympathy is awakened. He goes to Thomas and tells him that unless Robert is given $50,000 and a share in the business created by his father's invention, he will spread the story broadcast through the medium of the press. Thomas is forced to agree to this demand and Robert comes into his own at last.

MAJESTIC.

LEGALLY RIGHT (May 25).—A wealthy man left his estate to his daughter, intending that his only brother should be her guardian. The document was awkwardly constructed, one of the sections reading "My daughter must live under the same roof with her uncle until she is of age; and be married under that same roof before her twenty-first birthday or else her fortune goes to the aforesaid uncle."

What the man really meant was that his daughter could not wed without her uncle's consent before she was twenty-one. What he really did say was that she had to marry under his roof before reaching her majority.

The fortune was fairly large and the uncle was tricky. He determined not to let the girl marry any one and thereby secure the money himself. For a time it looked as though his scheme would be successful, but a shrewd man found a way to circumvent him. This resourceful individual was a justice of the peace, and a great friend of the girl's father, and the sheriff of the county with whom she was in love. He put a job on the crooked uncle just five days before the girl's twenty-first birthday. The uncle was arrested for fighting and sent to the county jail for five days. The jail is the sheriff's home, and under these circumstances it was also the uncle's roof, so the justice of the peace married the girl and the sheriff under "the uncle's roof" (the prison corridor outside his cell). It was still the uncle's roof when the girl reached her majority, for the uncle had to serve out his term, while his neice and her husband naturally set up housekeeping in the sheriff's quarters.

Thus did a crook find that there is more than one way to interpret a will.

HER FAIRY GODFATHER (May 27).—She was a good enough cook, as cooks go, but the trouble was that her heart was not in her work. The master of the house complained bitterly that when she should have been studying how to make chicken a la Maryland, she was wasting her time reading sensational novels or flirting with a policeman.

Under the circumstances her employers felt justified in refusing to grant her favors, so when she asked permission to attend a picnic nearby they did not hem and haw about the matter, but told her frankly that she could not go, then to make her perfectly happy, they went themselves. The girl had her revenge, however, for she found that although she could not attend in person, she could attend in spirit. For she had a delightful dream in which, as she explained afterwards she made "the queen of the May look like the second cook in a poor house." It was all the work of her fairy godfather, whom she found to be a spirit every bit as effective as a fairy godmother. He wore a blue uniform, it is true, and instead of a wand used a club for his incantations, but he got results, and what more could be asked?

Yes, the girl is very fond of her fairly godfather, and she hopes the civil service board will make him a police captain some day.

BRONCHO.

A DIXIE MOTHER (2 parts—June 4).—Jefferson Davis refuses to permit the enlistment of old Judge Morton in the Confederate Army, and his enthusiasm is slightly wounded. Judge Morton's son, Dick, is not of the same calibre as his father, but is the petted darling of his mother. When Dick calls upon his sweetheart, Betty Reed, he learns that she is very much interested in Jim Cobly, who is dressed in a fine new Confederate uniform. When Jim leaves, Betty and Dick have a quarrel, and, while she confesses that she loves him, she reprimands him severely for his cowardice. Burning under the vitriolic criticism of his sweetheart, Dick musters up courage to enlist, which pleases his old father. He is placed in the company which is in charge of Captain Jim Cobly. It is not long before the men know what actual warfare is, and the Confederate losses are heavy. Judge Morton is appointed a colonel by General Lee with instructions to recruit a regiment, and he takes up his task with enthusiasm. A bomb bursts near Dick and many men are killed and blown to pieces. An arm hits Dick in the face and he becomes stricken with fear and finally deserts his company. He is shot at and wounded by his comrades, but the advancing Unions prevents them from following him. He reaches home and tells his mother why he deserted. His mother later learns that a squad of soldiers are tracing her son, and knowing the fate that would befall him if they were to catch him, orders that the old negro servant break the windows and smash the furniture to make it appear as if they were attacked by Unions, and to make it look more realistic she shoots herself in the arm. The soldiers arrive and Dick tells them that he fought a number of Unions single handed. The sergeant believes him and declares that he will make a favorable report for him.

A troop of raiding Northern soldiers is on its way, however, and Col. Trent receives word of it, and finding that they are headed toward Charlton, his home, orders a troop of cavalry and rushes toward Charlton. Two Confederate scouts take refuge in the Morton home, and when the Northern soldiers reach there they find the house barricaded. The scouts, firing from the windows, hold them off, but the house is riddled with bullets. There seems to be no hope, and Dick, suddenly fired with courage by the pitiable condition of his mother, determines to break through the Union lines and secure help. A dead soldier lies near the house, and he leaps from the window into a tree, cautiously climbs down, and, unseen by the Union soldiers, manages to change uniforms with the dead man. Rushing out to the front, where the doors are being battered down, he cries out: "A large force of Confederates is coming!" Dick is quickly questioned, and deludes the Northern officer, who decides to retreat. Dick has no chance to escape, and is compelled to go away with them.

Around a bend in the road Col. Morton and his troops madly gallop. The Union soldiers wheel their horses and try to escape. Col. Morton takes careful aim at Dick and fires, and Dick falls heavily from his horse. His father is horrified when he recognizes Dick, thinking that Dick—in his blue uniform—is a traitor. The old negro finds Dick, and carries his lifeless body in the house. Mrs. Morton rushes toward her son, but is stopped by the Colonel who says: "Don't touch him—he is a traitor!" With breaking heart, the mother springs to the defense of her son, and the Colonel learns that Dick was indeed a hero.

KAY-BEE.

A TRUE BELIEVER (2 parts—June 6).—The Rev. Joshua Trent, through old age, was supplanted by the Rev. John Gunn. Mrs. Brand, the wife of Colonel Brand, the leading man of the city, headed a delegation of women to receive the new minister and introduce him to the retiring one. Trent received him with a cordiality that was not returned. One day as Gunn was dining with the Brands a small girl, having finally located the whereabouts of the new minister, asked him to come and administer the last rites of the church to her father who was dying of small pox. Gunn recoiled and quickly slammed the door in the girl's face. Col. Brand was greatly surprised but made no comment. As the girl was running down the street she met Trent, who, learning of her mission, went with her to her squalid home, administered the last rites, and adopted her, fulfilling his promise to the dying man.

When war broke out Colonel Brand received a commission in the Southern army. Gunn spied for his brother, who was captain in the northern secret service, and by attending an afternoon tea at the home of the Brands, learned of General Lee's plans. He sent this news to his brother and thereby brought about heavy losses to the Confederates. General Lee, in a conversation with Brand, told him that his losses were no doubt caused by the work of spies, and started an investigation. The spy, working in conjunction with Gunn was apprehended, but managed to escape. He was pursued, however, and killed. Old Trent was arrested, suspected of complicity with the spy. A note was found on the dead spy signed "The Minister" which thanked him for the money and the information. The note was shown to the old minister and when asked if he had written it, replied in the negative. When he was searched a note was found on his person, much to his surprise and horror, expressing thanks for the money forwarded and for the information given, which was of great value to the north, and signed by the chief of the U. S. Secret Service. The note was slipped into the old minister's pocket by Gunn who feared for his own safety when a search was being made. Trent pleaded his innocence, but Colonel Brand ordered him imprisoned.

Nellie, the name of the girl adopted by Trent, visited him and the old man tried to cheer up the girl. At the trial Trent was sentenced to death and taken away to await his execution. Just as the sergeant was to give the command of "Fire," a distracted, dishevelled man rushed in upon the scene. It was Gunn whose conscience had troubled him. A week later a freshly made grave bore the inscription "To the Memory of John Gunn" on the tombstone. Hand in hand, Trent and little Nellie laid flowers upon the mound, kneel and pray fervently for the soul of the dead man.

FOR TWO PINS (May 22).—Mrs. Doodledum has the sobriquet of "The Old Scratch," because she wears hatpins which protrude beyond the edge of her hat and stick into persons' faces, leaving marks of disrespect. A law is passed forbidding the wearing of hatpins unprotected by guards. Mr. Doodledum, thinking to please his wife, buys two guards for her.

A stubborn wife is Mrs. Doodledum, and she swears that she will not wear the shields. While maneuvering and arguing the point with her husband, a hatpin point grazes his eye. He pretends that he has been punctured and makes a great ado, putting a large cloth over his head. Mrs. Doodledum, regretting her obstinacy, waits on him hand and foot and then some. She finally discovers that he is fooling her. She pretends that she has injured her knee. Accordingly both are laid up, although they really are in perfectly good running order. The doctor is summoned and prescribes an eyeshield to be put on the injured knee, a kneecap put on the wounded eye. Mrs. Doodledum tires of the masquerade, and pulling the bandage from her husband's face, denounces his deception. It is then discovered that ki-isses and em-bra-ces are the best little remedies for marital illnesses.

THE HOPES OF BELINDA (June 4).—How would you feel if you walked into a village hotel, saw a traveling man showing a picture of your wife to his friend, calling her a peach and telling about writing to her? And then suppose you coldly decided to trail this man and followed him to the depot. There you should see a typical village dandy also showing a picture of your wife to his friends and telling them that he was going to the city to see her.

Jones was frantic. He decided on a cold heartless revenge. He followed them. He bought rope, plenty of it, he imprisoned them, tied them in chairs, when they called at the house. He flourished a gun in their faces and told them he was going to kill them when his wife returned from downtown.

She returned. Murder was about to be committed when Belinda, the hired girl, ran into the room and saved three lives. Belinda was an old maid. Belinda advertised. A traveling man and a village dandy answered the ads and sent photos. Belinda was intoxicated with joy. She was afraid to send her own picture for fear they would quit writing, so she sent pictures of her mistress and this is what caused the trouble. Jones and his wife saw the ludicrous side and were reconciled.

GREGORY'S SHADOW (June 6).—Old Joe Gregory hates both his nephews and loves his young ward, Esther. Of the two boys, Rick is the more detested, because Rick and Esther are sweethearts and Gregory is jealous of him. The second brother, Jim, is a weak character, a spendthrift and indulges in gambling. Jim asks Rick for a loan. Rick has repeatedly helped Jim out of holes, and this time refuses to do more. Jim, desperate on account of an impending note, decides that he will appeal to Uncle Joe Gregory.

The two brothers occupy adjoining rooms. Rick is asleep in bed, when Jim asks Gregory to come to his room a moment. Reaching Jim's room, the two men talk. Jim begs in vain for a loan from Uncle Joe. The old man denounces him as a spendthrift. A bitter quarrel follows. Jim goaded by the old man's taunts, grapples with him, demanding the loan. Gregory, in a high rage, whips out a revolver and shoots him. Jim staggers and falls over a chair, his head banging down one side, and his legs the other. The old fellow creeps out, keeping his eyes fastened on the horrible sight, fascinated.

Rick is awakened by the shot and springing from bed, rushes into Jim's room. Reaching the side of his brother, he half lifts the limp body, then gently lowers it, and picks the revolver up from the floor. Standing thus over his brother, revolver in hand, he is surprised by Gregory and the servants who burst into the room. Immediately, Gregory points to Rick as the murderer. Evidence is black against Rick. Although stoutly declaring his innocence, an officer is summoned and he is placed under arrest.

Gregory now begins to chuckle. The two brothers are disposed of and the coast is clear. He continues his attentions to brokenhearted Esther, and tells her he will spend a large sum to try and clear Rick, if in return Esther will promise to marry him. Esther, harried thus, consents. However, old Gregory feels pretty sure that Rick is doomed. But Nemesis is on Gregory's trail. The old man discovers that whenever he is alone, a shadow pursues him (not a vision), but a shadow, black and awful, which springs upon the wall and the shadow is Jim's limp figure over the chair. Gregory at first believes the shadow is caused by objects about the room, cast by the firelight on the wall. In moving everything he discovers the shadow remains fixed, and he becomes gradually palsied with fear. This terror grows upon him until he takes to his bed and suspicion turns to him. Yet, he will not confess, although Esther and, in fact, all are convinced of his guilt. At last Gregory dies, and as he dies, the shadow appears to all present only now, instead of the figure of Jim across the chair alone, two figures are seen, Jim and old Gregory, who has just shot him. Rick is thereby cleared.

PILOT.

THE GOVERNOR'S ROMANCE (May 29).—Governor Madden resolves to personally investigate the reports of anarchistic activities in his state. He shaves his beard, which greatly alters his appearance, and donning rough clothes, goes sleuthing in the slums. He rescues Bianca, an Italian girl, from toughs, and accepts an invitation to her home, where he meets Norvelli, her uncle. He falls in love with Bianca, and forgetting his mission, spends most of his time with her. She reciprocates his love. Norvelli sounds him upon his politics and it developes that he, Norvelli, is the head of the anarchist organization in question, and of which Bianca is one of the leading spirits. They urge him to join, and hoping to win Bianca from them, he does so.

At the first meeting in which he participates, it is decided that the governor must die, and Bianca, insisting upon assuming the full responsibility of membership, draws the black bean. Vainly Madden tries to persuade her to leave the work to other hands, but the girl is adamant.

She will keep her oath. She breaks her engagement with him, and sends him away. If she escapes the consequences of the act he may return to her if he wishes to. He returns to the capital, and awaits developments. A week later, Bianca steals into the gubernatorial mansion on murder bent, and in a smoking-room, awaits her opportunity. The governor's spies who have had her constantly under espionage since their separation, apprises him of her presence, and he resolves to put her love to the supreme test.

With his secretary, he walks to the door of the smoking room, and there instructs him in a changed voice: "If the mayor calls, show him into this room. I am going to smoke." "Yes, your excellency," replies the secretary.

Bianca hears and raises her revolver to be ready. Madden enters the room. She recognizes him. A tense moment, during which the nerveless hand holds the weapon to his heart, then recovering from her stupefaction, the girl realizes that she has been duped, and staggers back all but overcome.

Again she raises the weapon, fury-maddened, but again her finger falters on the trigger. She cannot do it. He steps toward her with outstretched arms, but with a stricken cry, she waves him back and err he can prevent it, turns the gun upon herself and fires. The wound does not prove fatal and she recovers. Norvelli and his brethren come to her bed-side, and voluntarily release her from her oath, and promising to plot no more against the goverment, are pardoned by the governor.

THE DOG AND THE GOAT (May 30).—A little peasant girl is very ill, and the doctor tells her mother that she must have goat's milk. It is not very easy to procure, and little Lily's mother fears that her child will die. Fortunately, this deserving case comes to the notice of a wealthy lady, who is the owner of the property upon which Lily and her mother live. The Chatelaine makes Lily a present of a real live goat, so that she may have the necessary milk. Lily has also a dog, which takes a fancy to the goat, and thus they all become inseparable chums. When Lily is well enough to go out, she takes the goat into the forest, where a gamekeeper sees her, and not knowing that it is a gift from the Chatelaine, thinks that it has been stolen. Despite Lily's tears, he takes it from her and locks it up in a hut. Lily tells her mother, but before they have time to tell the Chatelaine, Rover, the dog, misses his old playmate and goes to find it. In an amusing manner, a true demonstration of the fact that animals can think, and are not entirely guided by instinct as many people believe, extricates the goat from its temporary prison and leads it home. Explanations follow, and all goes merrily.

PAT, THE ELECTRICIAN (May 30).—Pat is an electrician, and in this capacity is called in to attend to some defective wiring in a large house. There he has a most alarming time, and succeeds in wrecking the establishment in a wonderfully short space of time. A fire is only just averted by the mistress, who has the presence of mind to cut off an operation which the would-be electrician quite overlooks.

ZIGOMAR—III (Feature Release — 3 parts).—Paulin Broquet, the great Parisian detective, has brought the notorious bandit, Zigomar, to justice. Determined not to let the law punish him, he had taken poison in the Hall of Justice. Then he was brought to a hospital where he lay motionless and was visited by hundreds of persons. Among the visitors was a slender woman, dressed in black, who secreted herself in the hospital, and, when all the others had gone, went to the bedside of Zigomar and administered an antidote for poisoning. She was none other than La Rosario, the accomplice of Zigomar. Almost instantaneous with the administering of the antidote, Zigomar opened his eyes and sprung from the bier. They were about to leave the room when the surgeon entered to take a portion of the skin from the bandit's arm, which was all the great detective desired as a recompense for the capture of Zigomar. But he was quickly pounced upon, gagged and placed upon the bier where he was found the next morning by the detective.

Later the bandit set a trap for the infuriated Broquet into which he unsuspectingly fell. When the detective was in this predicament, Zigomar offered him $250,000 if he would let him alone. Not acquiescing in this, Zigomar then thrust his captive into an iron cage where he would have starved to death had it not been for the timely rescue by his lieutenant.

The next dastardly trick of Zigomar was to secure the safe which carried $50,000 belonging to the owner of the Grand African Circus, which he had won as a prize. He and La Rosario, disguised as servants, joined the circus and by the aid of a powerful elephant managed to get the safe to a manhole into which is was lowered to Zigomar and La Rosario. But it slipped from the ledge and soon sank out of sight in the mud. The case for the apprehension of the thief was placed in the hands of Paulin Broquet, and, disguised, he started to investigate. In the circus parade the next day he saw Zigomar and made a grab for him. La Rosario saw this, and, obedient to her command, her trained elephant took Broquet around the waist and hurled him to the ground. In the confusion Zigomar and La Rosario escaped.

After a time of suspended activities, Zigomar attempted to rob the biggest bank in Paris; but in this he was frustrated by the detective. Swearing vengeance he tried to wreck the train upon which the detective was traveling, but one of the detective's spies got wind of it and warned him. Ascertaining that the detective was to make his journey by motorboat instead of by rail, Zigomar and La Rosario, at the point of revolvers, forced an aviator to carry them high up in the air, and, when rirectly above the motorboat, Zigomar dropped several explosive bombs upon the frail craft, blowing it into pieces and injuring the detective so seriously that he was placed in a hospital.

When he was convalescent, Broquet received a letter of invitation from the banker, whom he had warned against the diabolical machinations of Zigomar, to come to his house and see how he entertained his guests. While there, the banker showed Broquet how he, by an ingenious arrangement of mirrors, was able to see the strong room of the bank. While they were looking Zigomar and his band broke into the strong room and began to loot the safes. By pressing a button, the strong room was soon flooded and the bandits captured.

KINEMACOLOR.

LOVE IN THE DARK (2 parts).—The heroine is deprived of sight by a peculiar accident—a premature blast just as she is passing a big excavation, and she is saved from worse injury by the young engineer in charge. During her convalescence the young engineer is very devoted, and although she has never really seen him, Bertha consents to become his wife when she recovers her sight. Before this occurs the engineer is called away on another contract, but leaves his photograph where Bertha can see it as soon as the doctor will permit the bandages to be removed from her eyes.

Another admirer, whom she has never seen, substitutes his photograph for that of the absent engineer, and endeavors to hoodwink the heroine into the idea that he is her fiancé. By intercepting letters from the engineer, the schemer almost persuades her to fulfill her promise of marriage, when the real fiancé returns to confront his wily rival.

Face to face with two suitors, neither of whom she has ever seen, the girl is puzzled to pick her real sweetheart—when she has an inspiration to blindfold herself, and make her choice literally "in the dark." That sixth sense which the blind seem to develop, guides her aright, and the young engineer is made happy, while the wily rival is hoist with his own petard.

PAYING THE PENALTY (2 parts).—When a young man jilts his fiancée, and on the very eve of his wedding day runs away with a wicked widow, there is bound to be retribution in some form or another.

It happens that the deserted bride falls among good Samaritans, and in the hospital where she recovers from the shock of her desertion, she meets her real mate in the person of a young surgeon. She takes up nursing as a profession, and shortly after their marriage her husband is appointed Field Surgeon of a California oil company.

Almost the first case he has to attend is that of the false fiancé, who has suffered a severe accident in the oil fields. A trained nurse is required, and the doctor's bride volunteers. The situation when she finds herself at the bedside of her faithless lover of long ago is developed in the pictures better than it can be told in print.

Suffice it to say that she "heaps coals of fire" upon the faithless one's head while nursing him back to health, and the finish enforces the moral that it is better to forgive than to receive forgiveness.

PEARLS OF THE MADONNA (2 parts).—A pilgrimage is on its way across the desert; among those going to the shrine are Jaquita, a young girl, and a rich woman, who is crippled and who has vowed to give the wonderful pearls about her neck to the Madonna, should she be healed. Jaquita covets these pearls. At the shrine the miracle takes place, and the lame woman walks. The pearls are hung about the neck of the statue. Jaquita tries to steal them, but is not successful.

At home the girl thinks of nothing but the pearls and vows to marry the man who gets them for her. Horrified, all but one of her lovers leave her. Jose, however, struggles with his love for the girl and his religion. Love conquers, and he starts across the desert to the shrine. He gets the pearls. Later the theft is discovered, and the guilty pair are stoned out into the desert.

Out on the desert the desperate pair determine to commit suicide, but in the sky a vision of the Madonna appears, they kneel in prayer and journey to the shrine, replacing the pearls on the neck of the statue. So they repent. Jaquita as a nun praying at the shrine, and Jose as a monk working in the gardens of the cloister, make a very beautiful finish to a notable picture.

BEYOND REPROACH.—Albert is a "Raffles"—a social highwayman, who, while mingling with high society, takes toll of their jewels and pocketbooks so cleverly that his pilferings are unsuspected even by his big brother, Jim. Both love the same girl, but Albert has the luck to steal her heart, on the very evening when detectives have been detailed to shadow and arrest him at a grand reception. It happens that suspicion is shifted to Jim, and on being searched, a diamond brooch and an engagement ring are found in his pockets. Having just witnessed his brother's acceptance by his lady love, Jim does not explain that he purchased this jewelry in hopes of winning her himself; and when the knowledge of Albert's guilt is forced upon him, he decides to pay the penalty rather than spoil the girl's romance.

Albert reforms after his marriage, but the knowledge that his brother is paying the penalty of his crimes in the penitentiary, weighs upon him, and his health fails. Feeling that his end is near, Albert writes a full confession, but when this document is delivered to Jim he tears it up, refusing to secure his release at the price of disgracing his brother's widow and child. So Albert's memory is left without reproach.

Gundlach Projection Lenses

The Only Lenses Which Guarantee You The Best Pictures
The Only Lenses Giving The Greatest Possible Illumination
The Only Lenses Exact in Focal Length To Within 1-100 of an Inch

There were no high grade Lenses on the market until GUNDLACH LENSES were made and none now that equal them in optical quality and illuminating power.

The GUNDLACH NO. 2 PROJECTION LENSES made the long throw possible and already hundreds of theater owners have taken advantage of this opportunity to increase their theaters in length and seating capacity adding to their profits at the same time.

The superior quality of GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES is recognized by the leading makers of machines and they will be supplied to order in place of the ordinary lens equipment at very little increase in price.

No matter how well satisfied you are with your picture we invite you to order a GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENS for trial to see the difference. Nearly all our lenses are sold to exhibitors who have ordinary lenses, but are looking for something better. In many cases a customer orders one lens for trial and then re-equips all his machines, sometimes the machines of several theaters.

GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES are used by the Kinemacolor Company of America because they must have the best.

GET IN TOUCH WITH ME BECAUSE

I have equipped more complete motion picture theatres in the United States than any other individual—Exhibitors have paid me retainers to act as their consulting and advisory Engineer to prepare plans and specifications for new theatres and for reconstruction and improvement of projection, lighting, ventilation, seating, etc., in old theatres. Why do exhibitors pay me for advice? Why do exhibitors place their orders with me for complete equipments? Because I have had more experience than anyone else in working out the intricate problems of projection with special reference to perfect illumination. You know that your picture is your whole show. I know how to make that picture stand out on your screen clear, bold, brilliant and lifelike. It requires experience to do this. I am at your service. I have hundreds of letters like these:

They Have Confidence in HALLBERG

On another page of this week's issue of The Moving Picture World you will find a partial list of orders received as a result of last week's ad. I ask you to look for it, as I want to gain your confidence and business.

I want to help you, Mr. Exhibitor, to improve your picture or to equip your new theatre. My price is no more than that of any other reliable distributor, and I am sure that my experience and advice which is free to my customers, is worth many dollars and is of more value than confidential, special, would-be discounts, cut prices, etc., used by some of my competitors in pulling unwary exhibitors into their fold.

Better Pictures At Less Cost

The use of a G-E Rectifier to furnish direct current for a projector not only greatly improves the quality of the pictures, but in addition it materially reduces the current consumption.

Even with the best economizers, the alternating current lamp is so much less efficient for projecting pictures than the direct current lamp, that the use of the rectifier will make a substantial saving in the cost of electricity.

When no economizer is used, to produce the same amount of light the alternating current lamp requires four times as much current as the direct current lamp and rectifier.

Write our nearest office for Booklet B-3107 giving results of tests of comparative current consumption of alternating current lamps with and without economizers, direct current lamp with rheostats and direct current lamp with a rectifier taking current from an alternating current circuit.

Coming

121-123 4TH AVE. PITTSBURGH, PA.

Here's where we "shine." Imagine an artistic slide like this one, beautifully colored and carefully made in every respect, for 35c! Seems almost too much for the money. Made for all multiple-reel features.

Banners and lantern slides constitute a very small part of our stock. There isn't a single advertising help you might need that we cannot supply. One-sheet posters and three-sheets for single reels and multiple-reels, photographs of prominent players, heralds, snipes, oak and brass frames for lobby display, and a thousand other things too numerous to mention are carried in stock and offered at prices that we defy you to beat.

The World Provides Nothing Better No Matter What It Costs

MIRROROIDE as standard as gold coinage (patents pending). Absolutely sold under a bona-fide, five-year guarantee. It can't crack, peel or tarnish! MIRROROIDE curtains are pure silver, white or tinted, as you desire. Three tints—silver white, silver flesh, Nioco green. Two grades—surface finishes, medium matte and pebbled.

They produce the results you desire. Perfect projection without haze, glare and out-of-focus effect, so peculiar to other forms of metalized screens. Endorsed the world over the world's best.

Billington! Mace! Garwood!

New Majestic Stars

in the

New Majestic Films

C. J. HITE, Producing Manager

What a trio! Imagine what your patrons will say on the NEW STRENGTH OF YOUR SHOW when the wonderful new Majestic Films come out! And that will be soon—see release dates below. Just think, after Sunday, May 25th, there will be a steady procession of the magnificent new Majestics, with such stars as popular "Billy Garwood," for three consecutive years with the world's best Independent company; pretty Francelia Billington, than whom there is none more beautiful; Fred Mace, the very best comedian of his kind in all the world of photoplay, and — we'll announce THE OTHER STARS in a week or so. Yes, there will be others! But let there be mystery about them that long!

Meantime Tell Us What You Think of the Wonderful Acting and Photography in the New Majestics. We Want Opinions!

Sunday, May 25th, the New Majestic is "LEGALLY RIGHT," in which "Billy" Garwood and Francelia Billington eat a honeymoon breakfast in jail and give you some tall laughs; and Tuesday, May 27th, the film is a marvelous split that takes you into the secrets of the evasive Navajo Indians of far-off Arizona, and treats you to a pretty trick-subject at the end, "LIFE AMONG THE NAVAJOS — HER FAIRY GODFATHER." Go to your exchange with a red-hot yell for BOTH these reels now! Remember, ONLY at "Mutual Service" exchanges.

THE
Foster Brothers

Produced in Australia, Employing Aboriginal Natives

Foster brothers on a hunting expedition in Australia shoot at the same instant, inadvertently killing a native. The victim's father, according to the Aboriginal doctrine of "An eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth," demands the slayer's life. One would give his life to save the other, but his act of self-sacrifice is discovered in time to settle the matter in another way.

Art Is the Keynote

OF

The Thanhouser Three-A-Week

We try to be artistic in our every line of effort. We try to write artistic stories, to give them an artistic presentation with artistic players, in artistic settings, and depict it all in artistic photography. That's why a single Thanhouser release on your program lends tone and class to the whole show.

Released Sunday, June 1st	A VICTIM OF CIRCUMSTANCES A stern parent learns that his daughter's sweetheart wasn't the only victim of circumstances. An artistic comedy.
Released Tuesday, June 3d	THE CAGED BIRD A princess flees from the formality and ceremony that totally envelops her. An artistic adventure story.
Released Friday, June 6th	THE RUNAWAY The Thanhouser Kid becomes a wanderer and saves the drowning Kidlet. An artistic Kid-Kidlet playlet.

COMING! SUNDAY, JUNE 8th "Miss Mischief," featuring the most flirtatious of flirts; and Tuesday, June 17th "The Snare of Fate," a Lonergan heart-interest drama in two reels.

Thanhouser Film Corporation, New Rochelle, N. Y.

"THE COMEDIAN'S MASK" (2-Reel Drama).
Released Monday, June 9.

King Baggot excels himself in a masterpiece of human interest. The story is of an actor, whose reputation and future as a comedian are in jeopardy while his wife repeatedly betrays his trust.

"THE HIGHER LAW" (Drama).
Released Thursday, June 12.

A gripping story of love and hate. One of the sort that will hold you in breathless suspense from start to finish.

"THE WAR OF BEETLES" AND "HY. MAYER'S CARTOONS"
(Split Scientific and Educational).
Released Saturday, June 14.

An animated and intensely interesting subject of peculiar merit. Hy. Mayer's famous drawings complete a reel that will establish a new mark for educational pictures.

NESTOR

"THE SPRING IN THE DESERT" (Drama).
Released Monday, June 9.

A commanding story of life in the West. An original and soul-absorbing picture told in the Nestor way.

"THE MAN WHO TRIED TO FORGET"
(Drama).
Released Wednesday, June 11.

An entirely new idea embodied in one of the cleverest and biggest one-reel productions of the year. Its very novelty and the strong element of life as it is are enough to make it a winner.

"THE KNIGHT OF HER DREAMS" (Com.).
Released Friday, June 13.

Critics who saw this film at a private exhibition are still laughing at the genuine humor of it. It's a rare treat, and brims with hundreds of mirthful incidents.

GEM

"HEARTS AND FLOWERS" (Drama).
Released Monday, June 9.

A splendid one-reel picture of the difficulties of a young American beset with adversity. His ultimate success is achieved in a typical Universal way—after many hard struggles against heavy competition.

101 BISON

"THE GRAND OLD FLAG" (2-Reel Drama).
Released Tuesday, June 10.

One of the first of the new series of Cuban war pictures. Two Americans become involved in an insurrection. Their thrilling experiences combine in a realistic and highly educational feature.

"THE CAPTURE OF AGUINALDO"
(2-Reel Drama).
Released Saturday, June 14.

A great big, dashing Universal feature that will pack your theater to the doors. Action in every foot, a punch in every picture, and a never-to-be-forgotten thrill in each reel. Don't miss it!

CRYSTAL

"FALSE LOVE AND TRUE" (Drama).
Released Tuesday, June 10.

You simply can't afford to miss this Crystal production. They have surpassed themselves in a reel of heart interest and fact that will give your patrons something to remember for weeks after.

"AN EXPENSIVE DRINK" and "HER JOKE ON BELMONT" (Split Comedy).
Released Sunday, June 15.

Now, it's not the kind of drink you think it is. That is just where the novelty of it will win you and every one of your patrons. With it a practical joke enacted in a laugh-getting way.

POWERS

"MRS. LACY'S LEGACY" (Comedy).
Released Wednesday, June 11.

We've all had a legacy at some time or another, or we expect one. Here's a chance to have a whole lot of fun, and learn of a new way to dispose of one. A giggle in every inch of the picture.

"THE STRENGTH OF THE WEAK" (Drama).
Released Friday, June 13.

The title almost tells the story. You can't beat it for business getting purposes. It teaches a moral, and illustrates life as it is lived by those of whom you hear but little.

REX

"THE KING CAN DO NO WRONG"
(3-Reel Drama).
Released Thursday, June 12.

The story of a soldier of fortune of no time or place. It is up to date, and yet is historical. A marvelous co-mingling of happenings that will both happily surprise and astonish you beyond expression.

"THE PRETENDER" (Comedy Drama).
Released Sunday, June 15.

Bluffing was his conception of a life of ease. His friends teach him a lesson that is both humorous and dramatic.

VICTOR

"SINCERITY" (Drama).
Released Friday, June 13.

You are sincere in the management of your theater. Your patrons are sincere in their attendance. This picture depicts a new form of sincerity that will appeal to everybody everywhere.

ECLAIR

"WHEN LIGHT CAME BACK" (2-Reel Dr.).
Released Wednesday, June 11.

A typical Eclair production, enacted in a manner which has made that brand famous. It is a strong story, fraught with attention compelling incidents.

"HE SLEPT WELL" and "SCORPIONS"
(Split Comedy and Scientific).
Released Sunday, June 15.

You can't beat the antics of Snookums, the Newlywed baby, for pure fun and laughter. He goes himself one better in this release. A splendid scientific completes a strong one-reel attraction.

FRONTIER

"THE CALL OF THE ANGELUS" (Drama).
Released Thursday, June 12.

A semi-religious subject that will win hundreds of church-goers to your policy of instructive pictures. Don't miss the chance to give them a truly good picture.

"THE TWINS OF DOUBLE X RANCH"
(Comedy).
Released Saturday, June 14.

Rip-roaring fun from beginning to end. Twins in life or in pictures are always productive of humor. "The Twins of Double X Ranch" have gone all others one better in a breezy thousand feet of mirth.

STATE RIGHTS

CRITICS SAY:

KELLY From the EMERALD ISLE

with the Popular BARNEY GILMORE is full of thrill and punch

Moving Picture World says:

All the sensational feats will make the audience wonder how the players dared risk their lives. All the characters (always excepting the villains) will make a strong appeal. The bluff, good natured bigness of Barney Gilmore, himself, is full of suggestion of an honest, true heart in his brawny chest. It is just the big arms of him that will fit around the neck of a pretty colleen, like Sheilah. And Sheilah, too, with her black curls and pretty, coy ways, fits into the story with distinct charm. The gallery will be attracted by her. The photography is excellent throughout.

The Morning Telegraph says:

Barney Gilmore, with his pleasing personality as Gerald Kelly, a rollicking, care-free Irish lad, dominates this film completely and the result is very pleasing. Film personality is far rarer than stage personality, but Mr. Gilmore's buoyant self fairly radiates from the screen. Blanche Cornwall makes a very entrancing little Sheilah MacGuire, Kelly's sweetheart, while Joseph Levering is the villainous Doolin, Kelly's would-be Nemesis.

Good "bits" are frequent. A balky donkey is made to drag a go-cart in the right direction by hitching him in the shafts wrong-end-to. Then Kelly goes down a rope over precipitous cliffs, about 80 feet high, with his sweetheart hanging on his neck.

The biggest "punch" comes in the scene where Kelly is bound to a railroad track in front of an oncoming train. With a mighty effort he clears himself of his bonds, leaps on the cowcatcher as it hangs over him and lies there kicking, but safe, as the train rushes past. Either this is a great piece of cutting, back-away stuff, or Barney took an awful chance with his life. Whatever it is, it is scary enough on the screen to suit anybody.

"CALIFORNIA POULTRY"

(Release Monday, June 9, 1913)

Made under the personal direction of S. S. Hutchinson, president. Many miles of California hills and valleys were covered before this completed story of a giant industry was ready to be laid before you. The model chicken plants of California are models for the world. An interesting, highly instructive educational on a subject of importance.

"HEARTS AND HORSES"

(Release Thursday, June 12, 1913)

A vivid, highly sensational and distinctly out-of-the-ordinary Western, backed by a splendid plot, superb photography and good acting. A story with a "kick" which is never finished until the tail piece flashes across the screen. You will like it—and, what's more to the point, your patrons will, also.

"REWARD OF COURAGE"

(Release Saturday, June 14, 1913)

A game leg prevented him from swimming, golfing and dancing. An envious rival plugged his auto and went off with his girl. Then, chance threw opportunity in his way—how he hauled her from the raging sea and made her his wife make a charming social story. Magnificent settings, and superb photography. Jack Kerrigan at his best.

Mary Stuart

Adapted from the drama by Frederick Schiller

To be released June 21, 1913

Wise exhibitors are already placing their orders for this magnificent three-reel production. It is a business builder which will attract new patrons to every theatre in which it is shown. It will hold them in the spell of its intrigues, its pathos, and its tragedy.

The plots and counter-plots; the attempted assassination of Elizabeth; the killing of Rizzio, Mary's favorite; the disastrous meeting of the two queens; loyal Mortimer's futile efforts in Mary's behalf—all lead with increasing intensity to the great execution scene.

It is a masterly theme handled in masterly fashion. Photographically it is a work of art.

The Twin Brothers

Drama (1000 ft.)—Released Tuesday, June 17, 1913

Both Brothers Played by One Man at the Same Time

There have been other films in which the same person appeared on the screen in two roles at the same time, but never before has a man been seen to snatch a picture from himself and shake hands with himself.

It is a wonderful exhibition of the photographer's skill which will puzzle and delight every picture patron. The story itself is one of brotherly love and self-sacrifice, told in a convincing manner.

Reasons Why Every KALEM Release is a Headline Feature

BECAUSE the Premiere Motion Picture Actress, Alice Joyce, appears each week in a Kalem feature drama.

Because Ruth Roland, the celebrated comedienne, and John Brennan, the peerless fun-maker, appear each week in rollicking, sure-fire comedies.

Because Kalem is completing two additional studios, elaborately equipped, for the production of one-reel headliners exclusively.

Because Kalem issues 3 and 6-Sheet, 4-Color Lithographs of striking character each week, which help you to advertise one-reel features that are just as big attractions as any multiple-reel special.

Because Kalem is releasing a number of sensational railroad dramas which will completely eclipse the splendid business-getters of the past.

Because Kalem has in preparation a series of novelties never before equalled in motion picture history.

Every Licensed Exchange in the United States can supply you with all Kalem subjects and will gladly provide them upon request.

Facts and Comments

FOR some time past the Moving Picture World has published a classified list of educational subjects for the convenience of readers interested in that class of motion picture. The purpose of this list is to encourage the use of the educational subject, not so much by schools and churches as by the motion picture theaters. Indications are that many theater managers are finding an increased demand for the picture that instructs as against those that merely amuse, and managers will find the list of great help to them in selecting proper subjects. The range is wide, covering almost every topic, the greater part of which will be found to be of interest to the average motion picture audience.

On obstacle to the more general use of educational pictures has been the difficulty in getting "what you want when you want it," but this is an obstacle that will be gradually overcome as the demand for the educational picture increases. During the past year there have been made by the licensed manufacturers alone more than double the number of educational pictures made in the year previous, which would indicate that the demand had reached the manufacturer. There is still lacking the element of availability, or to be more definite, the cooperation on the part of the distributing exchange that is necessary to enable the theater manager to get educationals when he wants them and of the character he requires. This will be remedied when the theater manager succeeds in impressing the exchange manager that the public wants instruction as well as entertainment.

It is largely up to the theater manager to improve his daily program by the use of the educational picture. If not possible to show an educational picture every day, and it is not always possible where the program is short, as many as three might be used during a week without materially affecting the receipts. Then there is always the possibility of making a hit with an all educational program on an otherwise dull day of the week. We are in receipt of word from several small town exhibitors who have found this plan to be a good one. They have also discovered that the frequent use of educational pictures has placed them on a better footing with the thoughtful people of the community. It is a plan worth trying.

OUR observation last week regarding the proneness of the "old showman" to cheapen and sensationalize the picture theater touched a responsive chord in the heart of a reader of the Moving Picture World. "I am convinced," writes this reader, "that the real future of the motion picture business lies in the direction to which the paragraph in question points." Our correspondent is a business organizer and has had a good deal to do with the motion picture business during the past year. His point of view has enabled him to get a truer perspective of actual conditions than those who are engaged in the business daily possibly could obtain. To him there seems to be as great possibilities in the showing of clean, wholesome educational pictures as there is in the exhibition of pictures of the ultra-sensational character, and he is certain that the best business men in the game today have the same belief.

It is gratifying to know that the efforts of the Moving Picture World to point out the path that leads to the permanency of the picture as a form of amusement are not cast entirely upon barren ground. Undoubtedly there are others who have the same opinion as our correspondent; in fact, we are coming rapidly to believe that the movement for good pictures has outstripped the craze for those that are sensational.

WHILE the advocate of the educational picture is urging its merits, it is not unusual for some careless manufacturer to issue a so-called historical subject so full of errors of fact that one is tempted to use strong language. An example of this disregard for historical truths is called to our attention by a correspondent. The picture in question is a recent one dealing with the assassination of Abraham Lincoln. Reciting the scenes which give a grossly distorted conception of that tragic event, our correspondent ejaculates "Punk," and further observes that it is "an insult to American intelligence to exhibit such rot." Other instances are quoted by our correspondent in which historical facts, too well known to be trifled with, are twisted and distorted to fit the requirements of the director who was intrusted with the production of the picture. As a remedy the suggestion is made that a school of history for aspiring motion picture writers be established.

Economy of Attention

By Louis Reeves Harrison

If you have ever been to a three-ringed circus, where there was a spangled lady of abbreviated garments jumping through paper-covered hoops in one place, a death-defying loop-the-loop in another, and a clown trying to ride an obstreperous burro in still another, and you have tried to see all three at once, you were in very much the same situation of a spectator at a moving picture show attempting to become acquainted with the leading characters in a screen play, to follow the story amid a maze of swiftly-presented scenes, and to discover where the line of sympathetic interest lies concealed from view.

In the thousand-foot reel very little time is allotted to approaching a dramatic crisis as we do in a novel, to introducing those participating so that we become interested in their distinguishing characteristics, but the multiple reel production affords opportunity to make people in the visualized portrayal breathe the breath of life that they may become unforgettable figures when the main incidents are set in motion. A neglected portion of the art is that of making those characters known as "the leads" so vital and significant as to require no straining of attention to ascertain what their relations are to each other and what each of them is likely, apt and liable to do, in the sequence of events to follow.

It is all very clear to the director. He has the details of the creation impressed on his mind in the course of his work; actors grasp the idea during rehearsals; even the critic senses the meaning without trouble—that is his line of business—but the spectator has barely time to disentangle his thoughts from one presentation before another makes a bid for his consideration. He must be given a sharp, swift and clarifying view of the minds and hearts of principals if he is to follow their careers with lively and intelligent interest.

If you were walking along a crowded street and observed two or more people driving by and so engrossed in a dispute that the horse was given free rein, you might speculate upon the issue of their quarrel, wonder if they would injure each other or run over some innocent passer-by, and your concern about them would be on a par with that of a spectator watching the average screen presentation, with a slight difference. The picture show spectator might languidly forecast both action and results. He might easily assume that the man of compressed lips who looked out of the corner of his eyes to note if he was observed would probably come to no good end, while the young man of frank smile and hair brushed off his brow would eventually draw the heroine tenderly into a lingering embrace and press his lips fondly on hers.

In either case you would not care very much what happened, because the parties in question might be marionettes so far as your interest in them was concerned, and there is the weak spot in nine photodramas out of ten.

The power to evoke men and women so interesting that we want to know more about them and follow their adventures with keen solicitude is not given to all who think they know how to put over a picture play, and it is a fine art to present, even these, so that we can readily anticipate their emotions if not their thoughts at the high moments of stress and storm. Then, vital as they are, their especial attributes and aspects must be in conformity to the story in which they are to figure. In most cases they make the plot or are what the plot permits them to be. There can be no guesswork about the conjunction of character and action if the play is to succeed.

If it is impossible to give strong characterization to more than one, it is possible to intensify one so that the audience can follow a single line of consistent action without effort and with deep interest in what befalls the sympathetic center of all that is going on, but that action must be logical beyond question. There need be no attempt to make the photodrama respond to amateurish criticism, be "true to nature," but in dealing with a single human creature taken from a group and set apart for the purpose of compelling interest, a playwright must not obtrude the arbitrary. If falsity of conduct is now paraded it will destroy interest and become so disappointing that the whole structure may fall and become ridiculous.

The old saying, that it is only a step from the sublime to the ludicrous, rose out of inconsistency of characterization, or of action, more generally the latter. A sure way of dispersing all the interest that has been aroused is to have the hero or heroine do what is not reasonable. A surer way is to have them do what is manifestly impossible in the natural course of events. The fondness of studio directors for something striking and unusual—this does not mean original—too often results in an artificiality that is as obvious as it is depressing. Nothing is so fatiguing to attention when it has once been engaged as a situation highly improbable if not manifestly impossible.

If an arbitrary supposition is essential to the development of an otherwise attractive play, let it be something that has occured before the main and present action has been set up, preferably in an announcement on the screen. It can be tolerated under such circumstances for the sake of what is to follow. The audience will put up with an unlikely state of affairs in the past—any old thing may have happened—in order to see what is to result from an extraordinary condition, but there must be no straining of credulity or attention in what follows.

A perpetual exception is pure farce, and occasionally pure romance. For the sake of a little fun, we may accord that two men who have never met look so much alike that their nearest friends and relatives cannot tell them apart, as in the "Comedy of Errors" done over and over again, but that is a supposition difficult for most of us to entertain seriously and not one calculated to hold us enthralled in any phase of life with which we are familiar. Double exposure offers a strong temptation to use this purely arbitrary situation in screen productions in spite of the fact that it is a legend so long familiar as to have become absolutely moldy.

Any careful student of audiences soon learns that plays fatigue general attention that are forced by the arbitrary will of those who produce them and are not in accord with the logic of character and circumstances. People in front are there to be entertained and do not concern themselves with the structural defects of what is shown on the screen, but when they become vaguely conscious that all is not as it should be, that they are wasting their attention upon what is false to common ideals, they feel that they have been defrauded.

It is the critic's business to point out where interest falls away and point out defects to be remedied. If he has no native gift of playmaking, he learns by study and observation where the weakness lies that causes both the photodrama and the audience to suffer, so that worn out devices may be sent to the dump heap and a standard of common sense set up in their place.

How Our Pictures Educate Abroad

By W. Stephen Bush

Innsbruck, Austrian Tyrol, May 16, 1913.

In Austria the motion picture has become an issue in politics. Across the border in Germany, the motion picture will, before long, be a most important issue in politics. The medieval Toryism and the more modern bureaucracy pursue the motion picture with all the instinctive and eternal hatred which the lovers of darkness have always felt for the light. The reactionary forces, which even at this day are very strong in both countries, detest and persecute the motion picture chiefly because it is either French or American. Even the most liberal use of the censorial scissors cannot cut away the spirit and the atmosphere in the French and American screen plays. They exercise a subtle but a very certain influence on the German and Austrian mind, and it is this influence which the ultra-conservative rulers fear and resent.

Both here and in the land of the Kaiser a most curious state of affairs prevails; it is difficult of analysis, but it is most instructive to Americans. Everywhere the motion picture is regarded as a distinctly American invention, but just what this new American idea is like is a mystery to legions of people even in the principal cities. I have met a large number of cultured people whose notions on the subject were quite hazy. Some seemed inclined to regard it as a form of spiritualism, while others thought it was some sort of a "base imitation of the dramatic art." With the possible exception of the very large cities, the rich and the powerful hold themselves aloof from the motion picture and "all its works," its theaters and its audiences. On the other hand, the masses crave for the motion picture.

On the basis of careful observations, and relying on the best possible sources of information, I am inclined to believe that the number of motion picture theaters in the countries mentioned will within the next three years be trebled. This will happen in spite of the many trashy films and in spite of all the government can do, simply because of the educational value of the motion picture. It may be quite true that such education as may be had from books is quite abundantly provided, but of the larger and broader education, of that mental training and that freedom of vision which leads to initiative and to enterprise, there are but weak traces. Education here moves in very old grooves; it is unprogressive and stereotyped. To a great extent it is little better than a drill of the memory; there is too much litter and too little spirit. Add to this the natural tendency of the people to divide themselves into three or four classes, whether they get on a railroad train or enter a school or patronize a restaurant, and you have a condition extremely favorable to mental stock and to top-heavy conservatism. In this state of affairs the motion picture acts like a solvent—it brings a new and much-needed light. It is today the greatest missionary of Americanism where Americanism would do an incalculable lot of good.

From frequent views of American life the people of Germany and Austria learn with growing pleasure that there is a big country far to the west of them where manhood counts for more than rank or even money, where women are always and everywhere treated with courtesy and consideration, where the policeman is not the final arbiter of things and where men know how to think and how to dare. They begin to feel how cramped their own position is. They begin to feel how restraining and choking are the influences of caste and tradition, and their desire to see American pictures grows apace. All the popular parties of Austria and Germany now realize what a splendid ally they have in the motion picture, and it is a fact that every time the motion pictures needed political friends the leaders of the progressive parties came forward in their defense. Even the officials of the government are now beginning to realize that a policy of arbitrary and tyrannical suppression will lead them nowhere, and as a result they seek to regulate rather than suppress.

A curious phase of this coming greater conflict between the friends and the enemies of the motion picture in Germany developed but yesterday. Under the constitution of the empire every citizen is free to pursue any calling he chooses without any special grant or license from the government. Acting under this constitutional guarantee, enterprising citizens opened moving pictures in a small town after complying with the regulations of the building and fire departments. The authorities interfered on the ground that there were more moving picture theaters than the people had any use for—at least such was the view of the authorities. The exhibitors at once took an appeal, and it was decided that the city magistrates had exceeded their authority and that the constitutional guarantee protected the exhibitors. Other courts, however, in different jurisdictions, have decided differently. The country stands on the eve of one of the biggest struggles ever made on behalf of the motion picture, and I believe that the friends of the picture have every reason to be hopeful as to the outcome.

Unprejudiced observers are free to admit that whatever progress in standards of living and in industrial development have been made in these countries have been made in imitation, conscious or unconscious, of American models. The field for further development and improvement is past, and I only voice the fervent wish of thousands of English and American travelers when I say that pictures of American hotels and especially of American railway travel are very much in order not alone in Austria and Germany, but everywhere in Europe. A course of, say, fifty reels or more showing American methods of transportation is bound to do much good. Pictures dealing with the social, commercial and political life of our country would, I am sure, be very welcome here and very useful. What Europe needs is a demonstration of the possibilities of American travel and the motion picture is undoubtedly the best medium for such demonstration.

Nothing can be more promising than the start of an express train here. The crew of the train is in a wild state of excitement. Uniformed officials rush about giving orders in frenzied haste, bells are ringing, women and children are hysterical and strong men weep and some even swear. Half a dozen underlings urge the people to get aboard quickly "because this is the fast express" to Berlin or Vienna. Whistles blow furiously, anguished relatives are driven away from the platform and everything indicates the starting of a transcontinental train with no stops between the Atlantic and the Pacific. I forget my previous sad experiences and my hopes rise high. After all this may be the express for which we have all been waiting so anxiously. More clanging of bells, more shouts and whistles, and the supposed transcontinental starts on its journey. Five miles out it shamelessly stops at an old shanty and waits for three minutes because the farmers are late with their milk.

Today I cross the Alps into the land of Dante.

"Alone in the Jungle" (Selig)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE name of Wm. N. Selig stands alone in the field where wild animals play their parts with amazing fidelity, in conjunction with men and women, in moving pictures which unravel thrilling stories of jungle and tropical wilds. These wild animal productions have a novelty and realism all their own. To those untutored in the manner of their making, these films thrill and puzzle as no other type of pictured story can be expected to do. These stories are necessarily elemental; but the wild animal side of them conjures up in the mind the loneliness and perils of untraversed forest shades, where in every thicket there may lurk a ravenous or a savage foe.

Having seen all, or nearly all, of the Selig wild animal series, I am inclined to the opinion that "Alone in the Jungle," a two-reel special that will be released June 14, surpasses all its predecessors in thrilling encounters with wild animals of the tropics. In these films one is treated to a lion hunt where the killing is clearly pictured. The fearful struggle between a leopard and a man in the thick undergrowth is also shown. But the most astounding of all the sights is the chasing of the heroine of the story by an enormous black-maned African lion. We watch him stalking her stealthily through the undergrowth, until she is cornered on a shelving precipice, overlooking a lake. In her great nervous trepidation we see her losing her hold and falling headlong into the water beneath, and then swimming for dear life to the farther shore. Close in her wake the great lion is seen to plunge into the water and making headway with a speed approaching that of a dolphin.

The girl reaches the bank and, with difficulty climbing the slippery slope, rushes off into a sheltering thicket. The lion also gains the shore and charges in pursuit. Then the rescuers follow immediately afterwards, and one of the marksmen is seen taking careful aim at a point in the thicket, where the tossing branches show signs of a struggle. They rush to the spot and find the girl lying motionless under the dead lion, one of her arms encircled by his mighty jaws. In a short time she is revived, and it is seen that she has escaped injury, excepting a few scratches.

How is it all done? It certainly looks like the real thing; but the live girl and one's knowledge of the rending powers of the jaws and claws of that ferocious animal makes the brain whirl. There must be a secret behind it. There is; but it is one of the secrets of the making of wild animal pictures which, if known, would deprive the spectator of the gripping thrill that seizes him.

These films were produced by Colin Campbell, on the Selig animal farm in California. They tell the story connectedly, and the backgrounds create the impression of surroundings in tropical South Africa. Great care has been taken to heighten this impression by the costumes worn, the glimpses of home life in the jungle, by the improvised rafts for crossing streams and lakes, and by the sight of native carriers. The animals, of course, contribute most to the nature of their habitat.

Scene from "Alone in the Jungle" (Selig).

Thomas Santschi and Miss Bessie Eyton carry the leading characters with ease and strength. As Helen Brown, Miss Eyton shows great nerve. It takes quite a lot of it to dodge behind the trunk of a tree and abide the passing of a monster lion, which shows that he is undecided whether or not he will make a jump for you. The scene showing her capture of a young cub lion is both wild and appealing. Frank Clarke, Miss Lillian Hayward and Wheeler Oakman are effective in the roles of John S. Brown, Mrs. Brown and Concho (a halfbreed negro overseer), respectively.

The Hon. John S. Brown and family, refined English people, have settled on a plantation in tropical South Africa. Jack Arden, also of English gentle blood, who lives on the adjoining plantation, is in love with Helen Brown. She loves him in return, and is overjoyed to learn that he is about to visit her home to engage in a lion hunt with her father and brothers. During his stay he asks Mr. Brown for Helen's hand in marriage, but his suit is prolonged because of her tender years. Jack bows to the wishes of Mr. and Mrs. Brown and sets out on his return trip, accompanied by his retinue of natives. Helen is permitted to accompany him as far as the landing.

During his visit to the Browns, Jack had incurred the hatred of their halfbreed foreman, who secretly admired Helen. The halfbreed follows the lovers stealthily, and attempts to force his attentions on Helen as she is on her way home. She trounces him soundly with a black-snake. As she leaves him writing on the ground, to remount her horse, the overseer is attacked by a leopard and escapes at the expense of severe lacerations.

Just before meeting the halfbreed, Helen had captured a cub lion. The male lion was on her scent to recover his offspring, and, just as she was about to mount her horse, she spied him in the brush. Terrified, she tied her horse to a tree and sped through the forest.

In the meantime the halfbreed overseer made all haste to the Browns' home and reported that Helen had eloped with Jack Arden. Mr. Brown and his sons armed themselves immediately and set out in pursuit of the fugitives. They found Jack near the landing, where he had made his camp for the night, and learned of the treachery of the overseer.

In anguish over the dangers to which Helen was exposed, Jack and the party set out to find her. As has already been told, they arrived just in the nick of time to rescue her from the lion.

A SEVEN-PART "EAST LYNNE" COMING.

"East Lynne," famous in story and drama, has been done in seven parts by the Barker Motion Photography Company, of London, and has been secured for American exhibition by the Apex Film Company, of which Mr. P. P. Craft is president. This picture is an adaptation from Mrs. Henry Wood's book of the same title, written about 1840, and is given in 117 scenes covering about 7,000 feet. Careful attention to the details of production is one of the principal claims of the producers for consideration. Britain's premier emotional actress, Miss Blanche Forsythe, enacted the part of "Lady Isable," supported by a strong cast. Commenting briefly upon this picture, The Kinematograph Weekly, of London, says: "The staging, photography and acting of the film are all perfect, and on every hand the film is being spoken of as the best yet turned out by an English firm."

BUFFALO HAS G. F. POSTER DEPARTMENT.

George Balsdon, manager of the poster department of the General Film Company, writes from Buffalo, N. Y., to the effect that the Buffalo branch of the General Film poster department will be ready for business on June 2. It will occupy the fourth floor of the building at 122 Pearl Street, having a floor space of 3,000 square feet, and will carry a complete line of advertising and supplies. Mr. Friedman, formerly in charge of the Detroit office, will be the manager.

PUBLIC MEN HAVE NO "PICTURE RIGHTS."

The other day application was made to Magistrate Arthur C. Butts, of New York, by the National Baseball Commission and Israel Ludlow to summon to court the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and the Commercial Motion Picture Company to answer for the offense of taking pictures of the World's Championship series of 1912, between the New York Giants and the Boston Reds, for which games the privilege had been sold to Pathe Freres. In the application the "right of privacy" was pleaded by J. J. McGraw and others.

Judge Butts denied the application and handed down a decision to the effect that McGraw was a public character and as such did not have any rights that had been violated in the case. An appeal will be taken from this decision.

Philadelphia Convention Opens

A Great Gathering of Enthusiastic Exhibitors and a Fine Trade Exposition With Many New Ideas.

THE second annual convention of the Pennsylvania State Branch No. 3, of the M. P. E. L. of A., opened at the Continental Hotel, Philadelphia, on Tuesday, May 27, scheduled to last two days. Delegates began to arrive on Monday night and at the beginning of the first session on Tuesday morning there was a very large gathering of moving picture men representing all branches of the trade. The Philadelphia daily papers were quick to realize the importance of the convention and as a consequence all of them came out in their Tuesday issues with front page articles and illustrations. Representatives of all papers were on the job at all times, and the population of Eastern Pennsylvania was made to realize that there was something doing in Philly.

The convention went into session for a short while Tuesday afternoon. The meeting was called to order by Walter Steumpfig, president of the Pennsylvania State League. The first speaker introduced was Mr. Herman Lowe, Commissioner of Supplies of the City of Philadelphia, acting for Mayor Blankenburg, who was unable to attend. Mr. Lowe welcomed the moving picture men to the city and officially recognized the motion picture as an educational institution and a great power for good. Answering Mr. Lowe's address, President Neff, of the National Exhibitors' League, made a very able speech informing the previous speaker that the aim of the Exhibitors' League has always been for the betterment of the business, but that in many instances lawmakers and city fathers have not always done what they might have done to help the motion picture become an educational institution. For that reason, as well as for others, the exhibitors were there assembled; not in a spirit of pessimism, but in a spirit of courage and belief in the great future in store for the moving picture, confident that the day is not far off when there will be no question in the mind of anybody in regard to the great worth of kinematography.

After these two addresses the convention adjourned to accept the invitation of Mr. Siegmund Lubin to visit the plant of the Lubin Manufacturing Company, at 20th Street and Indiana Avenue. A large fleet of automobiles left the hotel, with pennants flying, and formed a long procession to the studio. "Pop" Lubin was in one of his best moods and entertained his guests like a Chesterfield, ably assisted by Arthur Johnson (li'l Artha), and others of the Lubin staff. In the evening there was a fine showing of unreleased photoplays, both licensed and independent, at the Continental Hotel. Music for the occasion was provided by the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company, using one of its latest models of motion picture orchestrions. Following the exhibition a lively cabaret entertainment was enjoyed to the limit, which ended the doings for the day.

The program for Wednesday, the second day of the convention, was very interesting and was laid out as follows: 9 a. m., parade up Market Street and around City Hall; visit to the plant of the Curtis Publishing Company, with motion picture record of same; 10:30, convention called to order; executive session and election of State officers and national vice-president; 1:30, afternoon session of convention; 7:30, banquet for exhibitors and ladies and the trade in general.

In conjunction with the convention was a very interesting trade exhibition by firms that cater to the needs of exhibitors. The Rudolph Wurlitzer Company made its presence especially felt by reason of the excellent music continuously furnished from the high-class instruments, for which it is justly famed. Motion picture machines represented were: the Edison, Power's, Simplex, Standard and Motiograph. Other exhibits were the Sanozone spray, Keasbey & Mattison Company, Swartout Ventilator, Westinghouse Electric Company, Calehuff Company, Electro Vaporizer, Famous Players' Film Company, Globe Ticket Company, Newman Manufacturing Company.

JUDGE SCORES PLAINTIFF.

In the case of Harstn against the General Film Company, an action to recover $2,000 damages for assault said to have been made by employees of the General Film Company when the plaintiff was ejected from the premises at 219 Sixth Avenue, Judge Schmuck, at a hearing before him in a special term of the City Court, ordered several paragraphs of the plaintiff's complaint stricken out as scandalous and assessed the plaintiff $10 costs.

“When the Circus Menagerie Broke Loose”

A Two-Reel Vitagraph Scream.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

OF ALL the farce-comedies ever thrown on the screen this is probably one of the most amusing, and it is certainly one of the most remarkable in many other interesting respects. I was prepared as soon as I saw the title for the utilization of material that has already been employed with doubtful success—nearly all circus stories adhere to stale and conventional lines—but I had another guess coming. I began to shake with laughter before the first reel was half through, and I think that the hard-worked critics who review all the releases and become, in consequence, plunged into the dark pessimism of those who know that the worst is now and not yet to come would have laughed for the first time this year and echoed the marvelously-expressed sentiment of Owen Hatteras, "I never seen nothing I would of rather saw."

Scene from "When the Circus Menagerie Broke Loose."

A train-load of wild animals is wrecked in a cutting, near the village where they were to be exhibited in cages—the wreck is shown—and a miscellaneous assortment of lions, tigers, leopards, bears, elephants, kangeroos, monkeys and snakes enjoy an animated vacation in the homes and shops of townspeople. The animals are far from being a sluggish lot. They are on edge. A vast amount of courage and pains must have been expended in handling vicious beasts that are not stupid from over-feeding—there is really more savage action than can be seen in a dozen "thrillers" where wild beasts play important roles.

Scene from "When the Circus Menagerie Broke Loose."

The way that the four-footed creatures perform their roles is so excitingly realistic that the spectator marvels if he does not shudder over the unswerving veracity of what is shown in their attempts to gratify their indiscriminate appetites. The monkeys obtain undisputed possession of a well-stocked fruit stall, and their antics when they start in to crowd a month's supply of food into one grand feast is funny enough from in front, but it is a safe bet that more than one of them soon after suffers from colic, acute indigestion or other ailment of the alimentary tract to which the little replicas of human vanity and greed are subject. Quite another matter is the invasion of houses and shops by the larger animals.

A tremendous lion leaps into the window of a house—a veritable exterior is this remarkable picture—two great tigers invade another home; leopards enter a barber shop, and huge black bears destroy the interior of a grocery. Two of the most ferocious of all enter the butcher shop, and Hugh Mack, the butcher escapes by shutting himself up in the ice box, but his cashier, a girl, is imprisoned in her cage unable to escape while the hungry animals tear the place to pieces. The courage of the girl and the antics of the fat butcher form one of the many nerve-thrilling episodes which follow one another in swift succession throughout the presentation after it is well under way.

Possibly the rarest view is one which has all the marks of an accidental meeting between two of the enormous cats. One of them has been engaged in tearing a library to pieces when a bookcase falls on him. He emerges from the debris in a rage and to prove that he can lick a dozen like the fellow who hit him, he tackles his running mate and they have it out on the spot before the camera man fully realizes that he is taking a big chance of spending his vacation where it is hotter than Luna Park. One leopard empties the barber shop. After ripping down the fixtures, including the shaving-cup rack, he yawns and gets into the barber's chair. From this throne he surveys the wreck he has made with an Alexandrian sadness that there are no more worlds to conquer.

What the black bears do to the interior of the grocery store is a whole comedy in itself. They smash things generally, the clown upsetting a bag of flour over himself, and the biggest exhibiting superhuman intelligence in trying to destroy the grocer's scales. One would almost believe he had been running a charge account at the place. Every conceivable situation in which there is a comedy element seems to have been covered in this play by the animals themselves, while the scared humans are merely supers. The cast is so large that I can only mention Harry Morey. He utilizes his splendid comedy opportunities to the limit and scores a decided success. He is the central figure among those nearly frightened to death and, when it is all over, when the menagerie men have gathered in all the big beasts, he braces his shattered nerves at a friendly bar with a number of others gathered for mutual congratulations upon their narrow escapes.

Morey is badly used up, but he gathers confidence as his numerous libations begin to take effect and sets them up until he and his friends get as drunk as chauffeurs. Their merriment is at its height, when two or three forgotten and thirsty anacondas squirm in along the floor and prove that what men see under certain trying circumstances is no irrelevant and incoherent glimpsing of the unsubstantial. Some of the small scope views of the tremendous beasts are almost terrifying—in fact, it is the swift transition from the appalling to the ludricous that will set almost any audience going—and it is plain to see that the entire production has cost a lot of trying effort. Much credit is due those responsible for this novel and varied creation. It strikes a high note in an era of very low farce comedy, and the animals are as funny as a motion-picture idol who takes himself seriously.

PERFECTS DEVELOPING DEVICE.

Charles A. Ziebarth, factory superintendent of the American Film Manufacturing Company, has perfected a device to automatically time development of positive prints so as to obtain perfect prints. Under the old system, the developer was compelled to gauge his own time. The device in question, however, does away with any possibility of error and invariably results in a perfect print, timing the development to the fraction of a second. The American has ever been in the vanguard of manufacturers seeking to place on the market clear, stereoscopic photography and its reputation will be further enhanced by the automatic timer. Mr. Ziebarth is himself the inventor.

NEW GAUMONT AGENT AT PITTSBURGH.

Announcement is made by the Gaumont Company, Flushing, N. Y., that the Ideal Feature Film Company, 402 Ferry Street, Pittsburgh, Pa., has been appointed exclusive agent for all Gaumont features for the State of Pennsylvania.

"The Struggle" (Kalem)

By George Blaisdell.

HERE is a picture that will hold men. It is a story of the evils of absenteeism on the part of owners of industrial property; men who are contented to take the profits that may accrue to them by reason of the operation of an enterprise, but whose concern ends there. The welfare of the employees, without the walls of their employment and more especially within, is a matter which is taken for granted. It is not necessarily an indication of hardness of heart on the owner's side, but at least it is of indifference or thoughtlessness. Author Henry Albert Phillips here tells us of an employer who had left all matters of management to his superintendent, a man unworthy of trust and incapable of handling men. Mr. Melford has staged the story in a most convincing way. He has gone into a great rolling mill. In the first scenes he establishes his atmosphere and sustains it throughout. He has successfully drawn upon the employees of the mill for many of his characters; and so skilfully has he kindled in them the feeling of the reality of the scenes in which they are participants that the beholder will be unable to determine which are and which are not regularly of the screen. The picture will hold men because it is a representation of circumstances that many of them have faced in life—the resort to a strike as the only alternative to continued ill-treatment by a man unworthy of holding in his hand authority over others. To such men there will be a steady thrill throughout the two reels. To such women as have undergone the experiences portrayed by Miss Sais there will come a response, too.

There is a fine cast. William H. West is the mill owner. Paul C. Hurst is the foreman. Carlyle Blackwell is Bat. To these three and Miss Marin Sais falls the most of the work. Mr. West is most convincing in his portrayal. Mr. Hurst in depicting the brutal foreman gives a characterization that reaches the point for which he must have striven—surely he will get the ill-will of others than those working under him. It is fine work in an unpopular part. Mr. Blackwell as the leader of the strikers will add to his reputation. Miss Sais contributes to one of the best scenes in the picture—where she tells the employer of the character of his representative and denounces him for permitting it. In the struggle between the foreman and her sweetheart she is a true child of the people. Instead of standing aloof, as we almost always note in similar scenes on the screen or on the stage, she takes a hand. "The Struggle" is a picture that should go well in any community, and especially well in manufacturing centers; it is in the latter that the feelings of the men on the screen will be thoroughly understood.

LUBIN WILL PLAY RELIANCE AND PATHE.

Billy Hallman, captain of the Lubin baseball team, has his boys using up every available moment to practice for the Reliance and Pathe Freres games, which will take place on the 7th and 8th of June respectively, at the Reliance grounds at Lenox Oval Park, 145th Street and Lexington Avenue, and Pathe Freres grounds in Jersey City. A special car will leave Philadelphia on Saturday with about 200 Lubin fans, among which will be found Pop Lubin, Mr. and Mrs. I. M. Lowry, Lottie Bricoe, Daisy Evans, Florence Hackett, Howard M. Mitchell, Jennie Nelson, Harry C. Myers, Pete Volkman, Arthur V. Johnson, R. J. MacFarland, Tom Cochrane, Jos. Smiley, Barry O'Neill, Clara Lambert, Lloyd B. Carleton, Geo. Terwilliger, John Ince, Robert Drouet, Lionel Adams, Harrington Reynolds, James Humphreys, H. A. D'Arcy, Robert Fischer, Tom Kerry and Bennie from Lubinville.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

SAN FRANCISCO EXHIBITORS' BALL.

The Grand March Led by Mayor and Mrs. Rolph. Big Street Parade Led by Chief of Police White.

By W. A. Cory, Secretary.

THERE was something doing every moment on Photo Players' Day in San Francisco. The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League worked hard to make May 2nd, a day worthy of remembrance, and they were paid for their efforts by a grand turn-out all along the line of the parade. A fact worthy of note in passing was the general comment by everyone that there were three times as many people lining the curbs to watch the parade as there were the previous day to see the big circus parade.

The excitement began at 9:30 in the morning, with the arrival of Mabel Norman of the Keystone Company, Carlyle Blackwell of the Kalem Company, and Miss Anne Schaeffer and George C. Stanley of the Western Vitagraph Company. The players were met by State Secretary, W. A. Cory, and representatives of the Golden Gate and General Film Exchange, who took the players to their hotel, where they made ready for the pageant, which started at noon at Van Ness Avenue and Market Street.

Mabel Norman having been voted the most popular player in California was chosen queen of the occasion, and occupied the first automobile with Carlyle Blackwell and W. A. Cory and wife. Then came the two Vitagraphers, and following them, Mr. Gilbert M. Anderson, the popular "Broncho Billy" of the Essanay Company, followed by twenty-four of Anderson's daring cowboys and cowgirls in picture costume and mounted on their cow-ponies. The famous old stage coach which we have seen "Broncho Billy" hold up countless times, was also there in all its glory. Several beautiful floats, representing miniature picture shows, and other spectacular features followed. Next came the members of the San Francisco and Oakland Exhibitors' Leagues in gaily decorated automobiles, headed by a band of twenty pieces. The parade made a beautiful spectacle, and proved the best sort of advertising for the ball which opened at 9:30 that night, with Mayor and Mrs. Rolph leading the grand march. Following Mayor and Mrs. Rolph, came the visiting actors and actresses, the committee in charge of arrangement and their ladies, with Anderson's cowboys and cowgirls dressed in Wild West costume, followed by the different members of the league and the dancers.

The actors and actresses were introduced by Chairman Cory, and made happy little speeches, which were greatly appreciated by the great throngs present. The only one to avoid making a speech was "Alkali Ike" who, owing to his diminutive stature was enabled to hide behind the skirts of some kind lady and could not be found until the dancing was well under way.

Motion pictures of the parade, which were taken by Miles Brothers, and were exhibited on a screen, caused a great deal of merriment among the spectators as they recognized themselves in the photographs.

No expense was spared in the management of the affair; the aim of the committee being to boost the business in general, rather than make money out of this particular occasion. The entire Scottish Rite Temple, which is the most beautiful building of its kind in San Francisco, was rented for the occasion, one floor being reserved for society dances, another for those who wanted to rag, large orchestras being provided in each hall. This arrangement left everybody happy, and the crowd divided up according to individual taste. The ball broke up about two o'clock Saturday morning, with everybody voting it a grand success, and eagerly awaiting next year's second annual grand ball.

FLOOD SUFFERERS' FUND DISTRIBUTED.

The committee to distribute the fund contributed to relieve the motion picture men who suffered loss by the floods in Ohio and Indiana met at the Phillips House, Dayton, Ohio, last week and apportioned the sum of $553.

VICIOUS BILLS KILLED.

California Exhibitors Clean the Slate at the State Legislature—Censor Bill Also.

By W. A. Cory, Secretary.

California has just had its share of freak measures introduced in the State Legislature directed against the motion picture. One measure introduced by Senator Strowbridge, if passed, would have completely put every motion picture theater in California out of business. Among the most drastic provisions were penalities for exhibiting any picture depicting a death scene, discharging of a firearm, any robbery, hold-up fight—in fact there is nothing that is not taboo except a straight scenic. The bill also provided that no minor under sixteen years of age would be permitted to enter and remain in the theater after eight o'clock P. M. unless accompanied by the parent or guardian.

In discussing this phase of the bill before the public morals committee, the committee made it quite plain that it would expect that in enforcing this provision of the proposed law, that the owner of the picture theater would make a round of inspection at eight o'clock and eject all of the children who could not find a grown person to claim them. He was also to be held responsible for being a good judge as to whether they were sixteen years of age or not.

Another bill which was fathered by Assemblyman Woodley of Los Angeles, provided for the establishment of a State Censorship Board, to be established and maintained at Sacramento, the State Capitol. There were to be three commissioners, who were to receive fat salaries of $3600.00 a year, with Secretaries, office expenses, traveling expenses, and other luxuries which were to be paid for by the motion picture people; all films before release would have to be shipped to Sacramento, censored by the Board and returned to San Francisco or Los Angeles, the two points of distribution. This latter feature of the bill will immediately be seen to be impracticable by everyone who has even a meagre idea of the motion picture business.

A joint committee of the California State League No. 12, San Francisco Local No. 1, and the Los Angeles Local No. 5, went to Sacramento and remained almost continuously while the Legislature was in session. A desperate attempt to put these bills over was made during the closing hours of the Legislature, and by consolidating the two, the advocates were able to slip them through the Senate, but the Committee was successful in killing the bills in the Assembly after staying in the assembly hall for 32 hours without sleep. We are therefore safe for two years more.

To show the unfair attitude of certain persons toward the motion picture, the exhibitors' committee agreed to submit to censorship if justly applied. That is, that all other places of amusement and vaudeville theaters, be censored as well as motion pictures, the contention being made that it was the immoral vaudeville acts and not the pictures which needed the most attention from those interested in our national welfare, and the proper upbringing of youth.

Of course, the legislators would not agree to this, and also refused to amend the bill permitting a representative of the motion picture exhibitors to be a member of the proposed censorship board. This was expected; in fact the offer was made with the idea that the proposal would be rejected and furnish the committee with good fighting material.

VIRGINIA EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE.

A successful convention of the motion picture exhibitors of Virginia was held at the Hotel Jefferson, Richmond, Va., on Friday, May 23. President Neff of the National League was present. An open meeting was held in the morning at which there was a large attendance. An address of welcome was delivered by D. C. Flaherty, city attorney.

The work of organization was taken up in earnest at the afternoon session. Officers were elected as follows: President, C. E. Tandy, Richmond; first vice-president, C. A. Turner, Portsmouth; second vice-president, A. H. Campbell; treasurer, D. P. Wine, Harrisonburg; secretary, E. J. Sparks, Richmond; sergeant-at-arms, A. F. Parrish, Richmond; national vice-president, H. C. Stradford.

These exhibitors were elected delegates to the National Convention in New York: Mrs. A. E. Thorp, Richmond; C. E. Tandy, Richmond; J. W. Myrtle, Staunton; J. C. Boss, Norfolk; W. T. Crall, Norfolk. Alternates: M. L. Hofheimer, Richmond; J. Weinberg, Lexington; D. P. Wine, Harrisonburg; J. T. Hill and R. B. Holstein, Petersburg.

A grievance committee consisting of J. T. Hill, C. A. Turner, Mrs. A. E. Thorp, M. L. Hofheimer and J. W. Myrtle were elected.

A constitution and by-laws were adopted and Norfolk was chosen as the place for the next meeting.

PREPARATIONS FOR THE MARYLAND CONVENTION.

A general meeting of the members of the Maryland League, to complete the preparations for the Maryland State Convention, was held at the Grand theater, Baltimore, Md., on Tuesday, May 20. There was a large attendance and the interest in the coming convention was great. The following committees were appointed:

Finance: Messrs. Bennett, Brodie and Benjamin; banquet: Messrs. Alexander, Hartlove and Durkee; committees on decoration, the press and exhibitors reported progress.

Everything points to a large and enthusiastic gathering of Maryland exhibitors on the date named.

MASSACHUSETTS EXHIBITORS MEET.

A meeting of the members of the Massachusetts Branch of the Exhibitors' League was held at the league's headquarters in Boston on Tuesday, May 20. No business was transacted owing to the lack of a quorum, and another meeting was called for May 27. It is expected that delegates to the New York convention of the National League will be chosen at that meeting and that action on the resignation of the president, Joseph Mack, will be taken.

CINCINNATI LOCAL OUTING IN AUGUST.

At a meeting of Cincinnati Local, held at the Hotel Sinton, Cincinnati, Ohio, on Tuesday, May 20, arrangements were made for a big outing in August. A committee of arrangements was appointed and a big time is expected.

CONVENTIONS SCHEDULED.

Kansas State Convention—At the National Hotel, Topeka, June 2nd and 3rd.

Missouri State Convention—At Springfield, June 10th and 11th.

Maryland State Convention—At Baltimore, Emerson, Hotel, June 3rd and 4th.

Delaware State Convention—At DuPont Hotel, Wilmington, May 26th.

Michigan State Convention—At Vincent Hotel, Saginaw, June 10th and 11th.

Minnesota State Convention—At Radisson Hotel, Minneapolis, June 10th and 11th.

Washington State Convention—At Seattle, June 17th.

LESTER L. KAHN DEAD.

Lester L. Kahn, vice-president of the Golden Gate Film Exchange of San Francisco and Los Angeles, and manager of the Los Angeles office, died on May 13 after an illness of four days. The deceased was twenty-four years old, but had established a splendid business reputation and had a wide circle of friends in the motion picture business on the coast. His death was a great shock to his friends and business associates.

At a meeting of the board of trustees of the Southern California Motion Picture Men's Association, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God to remove from our midst our late Brother and friend LESTER L. KAHN; and

WHEREAS, It is but just that a fitting recognition of his many virtues should be had; therefore be it

RESOLVED, by this Association, That while we bow with humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well, we do not the less mourn for our Brother who has been taken from us in his youth.

RESOLVED, That in the death of LESTER L. KAHN, this Association laments the loss of a member who was every ready to proffer the hand of aid and the voice of sympathy to those calling on him for aid; an active member of this organization whose utmost endeavors were extended for its welfare and prosperity; a friend and companion who was dear to us all; a citizen whose upright and noble life was a standard of emulation to his fellows.

RESOLVED, That the heartfelt sympathy of this Association be extended to his family, in this their great affliction.

RESOLVED, That these resolutions be spread upon the records of this Association, and a copy thereof be transmitted to the family of our deceased member and friends. Also a copy forwarded to The Moving Picture World for publication.

M. Stutz,
R. W. Woodley,
C. E. Halsell,
G. H. McLain,
E. J. Tally.

We hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of resolutions adopted May 14, 1913.

R. D. ARMSTRONG NOW AMERICAN SCENARIO EDITOR.

R. D. Armstrong, the American's first scenario editor, is again, after a lapse of almost two years, back on the old job. Mr. Armstrong is one of the best known scenario editors in the business and is the author of a book soon from the press entitled, "The Making of a Negative." Mr. Armstrong is sending out a call for one, two and three reel stories.

The Veritas "Quo Vadis?"

A Three-Reel Production by the Quo Vadis Film Company.

WHAT more noble subject to test the advanced excellence of motion photography than this story which deals with the life of St. Paul from the time he participated in the stoning of St. Stephen until he was beheaded by Nero, and on the same day that the venerable St. Peter was crucified and burned in the Roman arena with other Christian martyrs? This story portrays the grandeur of Pagan Rome, the Rome of the Caesars, when Christianity was in the throes of early persecutions, and the martyrs were burned, crucified and moistening the amphitheatres with their blood.

Two scenes in this remarkable three-reel production alone require the services of more people than have ever been used at one time in motion pictures. The vast arena scene showing the Roman populace hysterical in the gluttony of blood; the tremendous burning of Rome motion-panorama, covering in quick succession various sections of the imperial city and showing with vivid, fascinating realism the flight of the mobs of refugees from their burning homes; these scenes alone stir the soul to the utmost. More than three thousand people participated in the production of "Quo Vadis," and the wonderful subject, replete with the inspiration of divine love, has at last been given an interpretation impossible to the dramatic stage.

Scene from "Quo Vadis" (Quo Vadis Film Company).

The story of "Quo Vadis" is that of civilization. Rome was the richest, most luxurious, most cultured, and yet the most degenerate city of the world. The dawning of Christianity found Rome unconsciously tottering. The bestiality of the Emperor Nero and his court fastened its morbid appetites on the persecutions of the Christians.

To represent the golden profligacy of the Rome of that day is an almost forbidding undertaking for a modern moving picture producer; but in this film there are scenes of pomp and pageantry which exceed in magnificence the dreams of the most optimistic stage director. Discarding all the postery lack of detail common to the modern spectacle, the producers of the film have gone into every phase of the luxurious life of that time and have placed on the reel a most wonderful reproduction of superfluous affluence, and satisfaction of whimsical passions. As extreme as Rome once was in the hour of physical prowess and intellectual advancement, as strong as was her morality and healthfulness when Rome ruled the world, so in proportion did she sink to the very depths of dissipation and excesses, just prior to her destruction.

In depicting the sufferings of the Christian martyrs there is a scene in this three-reel film which would make a sensation of any motion picture. It is the stoning of St. Stephen. We have heard of this ancient punishment frequently, but its violence, the intense agony of the victim, have never before been realized.

"Quo Vadis" is a film which sets a new pace in motion photography. Not only has it displayed the remarkable vitality of the action picture, but it has demonstrated that photodrama production has so far surpassed even the dreams of its greatest champions that nothing now seems impossible for its ultimate accomplishment. It is the people's greatest possession.

"THANHOUSER"—IT'S A DOG!

The Thanhouser Kid isn't a new story, or the Kidlet, or theaters so christened—but isn't it unusual to learn that a dog is called "Thanhouser"! Well, that's what the kid owners of a Toledo, O., English bull have gone and did! The dog, of course, being British, didn't like being named after a Yankee film, but had no appeal from the decision of the Ashbrook Supreme Court. The Ashbrook "supremers" are Dorothy and Virginia, daughters of H. R. Ashbrook, boss of the Superior Film and Supply Company, of Toledo, and they say that the best announcement slide they know is "Thanhouser's" bark.

MR. CALLAGHAN IN NEW YORK.

Mr. G. H. Callaghan, who has represented the American Theater Curtain & Supply Company in territory adjacent to Baltimore, Md., has been transferred to New York, where he will take charge of their booth and exhibit in the Heidelberg Building, Broadway and 42nd Street.

"The Boomerang"

Broncho Multiple Release.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

CHARACTERIZED by stirring scenes of battle that have made Tom Ince famous as a producer and by some fine acting, this photodrama has grave defects, some of which could have been avoided by a more careful choice of title. In these days of aggressive Japanese demands and American apologetic attitude, there is a purpose in pictures of warfare. No one wants war, and we are not disposed to court it, but it looks as though some reminder of the way we acquired independence and maintained our unity was necessary to keep alive the splendid spirit of those who died in defense of country and high principle.

Scene from "The Boomerang" (Broncho).

The fighting impulse is stirred by the exceptionally fine battle scenes of this producing company, and they deserve great credit for their accuracy and consistency of portrayal, but they lose in effect when grafted upon a story that is not strong enough to carry them. The producer can not rely on a selection of spirited scenes of battle to hang a story on; he can only use them to enhance interest in a structure that would stand without them by itself. Stripped of its military vesture, "The Boomrang" placards its own plot in advance. The leading figure in the story is to commit an act which will react, the consequences of his project will recoil upon the projector in a way that he did not intend or expect.

Scene from "The Boomerang" (Broncho).

This photoplay was shown to me with the subtitles out, and beside me was seated an individual whose knowledge of moving pictures was very limited, yet the plot was so obvious that he forecast it in a few words. Thus one of the most important elements in the success of a production, tension, was marred by the title, if it was not entirely eliminated. I speak of this weakness because an audience will stand for a great many minor faults if there is aroused a keen desire to see how a story is to turn out, where attention is directed in mental doubt and speculation as to the issue, and because there might have been considerable suspense in this case if the title had kindled rather than destroyed it. The audience soon grows weary if not intent on what is to come.

Lieutenant Calhoun is beloved by two women some twenty years before the war. The natural choice of his heart is Virginia, daughter of a Southern gentleman. The other is Helen, daughter of Calhoun's superior officer. Calhoun is ambitious—the role is admirably depicted—but he listens to the calling of his heart and effects a compromise to attain his ambition—he secretly weds Virginia. Duty calls him away; Virginia seeks refuge with "Aunt Betty"—another fine impersonation—and gives birth to a male child. Calhoun is guilty of cruelty in writing to his wife at this time, but he is not informed that his wife has given birth to a child, and the latter is spirited away by Aunt Betty.

Aunt Betty seems to be the guilty party. She conceals Virginia's marriage from the latter's father in the first place, then she leaves Calhoun in ignorance that he has a child, an injustice to both father and son. Calhoun marries Helen and is seen twenty years after in a situation of entire satisfaction with his second choice. War is declared. Who is to enlist our sympathetic interest now that we have swallowed and assimilated more than one forced situation? Enter Calhoun's son, a fine manly fellow. We readjust our attention and try again. The boy enlists in the Union Army, that of his father, and he will certainly do something noble. Not he. He betrays the service he has entered, proves false to his oath and becomes a voluntary spy.

The upshot of it all is that Calhoun is betrayed into the hands of the enemy by a son whose existence is unknown to him and is there forced into a fatal duel—good old prop of the theatrical playwright—which leaves a fatherless boy in the South and an unhappy widow in the North and affords the spectator no high degree of satisfaction. The public prefers the working out of a single and logical idea where tragedy is contemplated and will never give approval to the ignominious death of a character where there are extenuating circumstances affecting his misdeeds.

DAVID BELASCO EARNS $5.00.

When the check teller of the Broadway Trust Company cancels check number 3273, for $5.00 signed by the President, Adolph Zukor, of the Famous Players Film Company, and drawn to the order of David Belasco, he need not feel called upon to question the marginal notation "on account of talent." It may occur to him that a clerical error must have made it five dollars instead of five thousand. But, take it from Daniel Frohman, who hires the "talent," five dollars is right.

Not even Mr. Belasco himself is disposed to question this valuation. Indeed, he is highly elated that as a picture actor he was able to earn the regulation day's stipend on his very first appearance. He has accepted the five spot, if only for the satisfaction of reducing Daniel Frohman's sinking fund by that amount, but he has also insisted on indirectly forcing Daniel Frohman to practice what he preaches, by sending the five to the Actors' Fund, of which Mr. Frohman is president.

It all came about, when, one day last week, David Belasco visited the studio of the Famous Players Film Co., where motion pictures were being produced of "A Good Little Devil." He became so interested that, after watching the rehearsal for a few minutes, he found himself running up to William Norris, Mary Pickford, Ernest Truex and the other actors, correcting or polishing some bit of stage business. Though Belasco was unmindful of his surroundings, Director Ed. Porter was not. The reel continued to wind, the rapid click of the machine went on, and when Mr. Belasco and the others were ready to stop for luncheon he was courteously informed that a motion picture had been made that would be called, "David Belasco conducting a rehearsal of one of his companies."

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

THE far Pacific West is rising nobly to the call of moving pictures. Not long ago attention was drawn in these columns to the fine type of structures in Vancouver, B. C., Seattle, Portland and Los Angeles, devoted solely to the presentation of moving pictures. Now word comes that Seattle is about to break all records in this country, if not in the world, by building two palatial homes for pictures, each of them to cost, when ready for opening, $500,000. One of these will be erected in the Metropolitan district, the other at the corner of Fourth and University streets. The Seattle Times has the following article about the latter:

"From a standpoint of the advertising which it will bring to Seattle, the King Theater, to be constructed by the Metropolitan Building Company for the King Amusement Company, is perhaps the most important of all. Not only will this building convert the locality in which it is to be erected into Seattle's 'Forty-second and Broadway,' but there will be no other theater like it in the world. The structure will be steel and concrete, with finishings in Alaskan marble, and furnishings of Alaskan cedar. It will be two stories high, but there will be no stairs. Ascent from the one to the other will be made by gradients. It will be not only the most ornate and costly moving picture house in the United States, or in the world, perhaps, but it will be the only moving picture house that is designed especially for the accommodation of women. Architect William Houghton has provided not only restrooms, but the upper story is to be fitted up as a roof garden, enclosed with glass, and so arranged that it will be possible to decorate it to represent almost any scene that is desired. This part of the building will be used for lectures, receptions and similar purposes.

"Apart from the furnishing, the structure will cost at least $250,000. The organ alone will cost about $20,000.

"'Don't skimp anything on this structure,' was the order that went out when the building was decided upon yesterday. 'We want to make this the best thing we have, and something of which Seattle can be proud.'

"Mr. King, the lessee of the new theater, was formerly connected with Hoyt & Thomas, in New York, and later with John H. Russell. The lease runs for a term of twenty years, during which time the rentals will amount to approximately $420,000. It was financed largely by Alaskans. Manager King has made special arrangements for pictures."

Unknown Far North to be Pictured by Essanay.

George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, has had in mind for some time past the exploiting of the Mackenzie River and other unknown far northern tracts by the camera. He has waited until the most favorable opportunity presented itself. This has been offered recently, when a party, composed of James K. Cornwall, B. K. Miller, Emerson Hough and G. B. Fraser, set out on an Arctic trip, which will cover a route of 8000 miles, by the time they return, 4000 of which passes through practically unknown territory.

James K. Cornwall, widely known as "The Prophet of the North," is the member of parliament at Ottawa for Alberta. Mr. Cornwall had been a resident of the Northwestern wilds long before a railroad was dreamed of in that section. He started out as a pilot on the rapids of the Mackenzie many years ago, and from that lowly occupation rose to be the controlling figure in several great trading posts that were established by him to compete with the old Hudson Bay Company. He was the pioneer of several great railroad enterprises in the Northwest and had much to do with the extension of the Canadian Northern Railroad, into the unknown Northwest. The leg of that railroad from Edmonton to Athabasca Landing has just been opened, and it is intended to continue it through to Fort McPherson near the mouth of the Mackenzie River.

B. K. Miller is the millionaire sportsman and big game hunter, of Milwaukee. Mr. Miller is also noted for his researches as a naturalist. He has just returned from a trip through central Africa, where he has been hunting big game for the past year.

Emerson Hough is, probably, better known than either of the gentlemen mentioned. He is the author of several works of fiction, among them "Mississippi Bubble," "Heart's Desire," "54°-40' or Fight," "Purchase Price" and "John Rawn," the last named being his most recent work. Mr. Hough is, perhaps, better known by his famous series of short stories, fourteen in number, known as the "Curly" series, which have appeared in various eastern magazines. Mr. Hough and the other members of the party have been friends for years, and he will write several magazine stories from the material obtained on the trip. It is expected, too, that he will be able to secure material for a series of scenarios for moving picture use.

G. B. Fraser is a halfbreed Indian and a favored protege of Mr. Cornwall. He is being prepared to become Mr. Cornwall's successor at Ottawa from the Peace River district. His knowledge of the far North and his familiarity with the language of the natives will make him a valuable member of the party. Essanay is represented in the group by C. A. Luperti, an expert camera man, who will take moving pictures of every incident and scene of importance during the entire route. Mr. Luperti took with him, out of Chicago, 15,000 feet of negative, and an outfit, in the shape of tents and other impedimenta, that would come well nigh to filling half of a baggage car. This is positively the first time that a camera man for moving pictures has ever gone down the Mackenzie River or ever visited other unknown tracts that will be traversed by the party.

Once a year the Hudson Bay Company sends supplies to their outposts in the far Northwest and North, and the party will avail themselves of the Company's boats down the Mackenzie. The party will leave Edmonton in about a week from the date of the writing of this article (May 24). On arriving at the mouth of the Mackenzie they will portage across the watershed to the Bell River, thence down the Bell to the Porcupine River, pursuing its course until the Yukon River is reached. Very little is known of the Bell and Porcupine Rivers and the members of the party expect to meet and overcome several difficulties, in the way of falls and rapids, before the Yukon is reached. They will go up the Yukon from the confluence of the Porcupine to Dawson City, and thence will make the overland trip, via the White Horse Rapids, to Skaguay. The steamer will then be taken to Seattle. The members of the party expect to arrive in Seattle about September 1st.

In the meantime, those interested in moving pictures will await with great interest the results of this 8000 mile trip.

Opening of the New Isis, Denver.

The opening of the New Isis, Denver, recently, marked an epoch for moving pictures in the Rocky Mountain city. The New Isis is owned by S. L. Baxter, who has already been a consistent supporter of moving picture programs.

The New Isis is a work of art. Its designer is M. J. Kenney, and no theater in Denver is in more perfect taste from gallery to doors. The building is concrete reinforced, and fireproof even to the doors. It is finished in buff, green and gold. The buff and green are in their most delicate shades. The lamps are Egyptian, to carry out the design of the not too decorative walls. The building seats 2,200, and the lower auditorium, with arched sides, has the appearance of great immensity. Retiring rooms for men and for women are located in the basement, and the general retiring room is walled with mirrors. A ventilating plant worth $15,000 is a feature.

Chicago Film Brevities.

I am in receipt of a letter from Miss Martha Russell (Mrs. Charles C. Pyle) stating that Mr. Pyle and herself are motoring to Chicago from Austin, Texas, in their new Haynes touring car. Miss Russell, in all probability, will make New York her headquarters for some time to come. As was stated in these columns some time ago, Miss Russell has been leading woman for the Satex Company for some time.

Alvin B. Giles, advertising director of the Advance Motion Picture Co., this city, advises me that his company is making an industrial four reel moving picture of Kansas City, Mo. This work is being done under the auspices of the Commercial Club of that city.

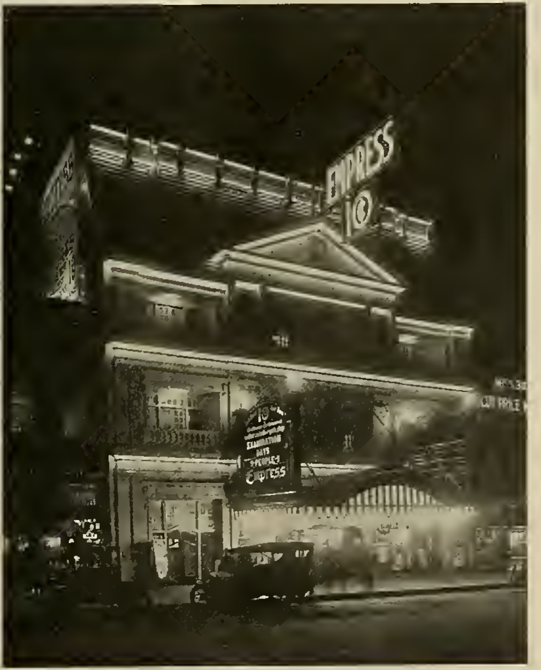
Among the Picture Theaters

News and Views of Houses Here and There.

EMPRESS THEATER, OMAHA, NEB.

THE Empress theater, located at 16th and Douglas Sts., Omaha, Neb., was opened January 20, 1913. This theater is unique as to general planning, and it has very artistic exterior and interior designs, as the photograph of the interior attests. The house is owned by the Starland Company, of which Mr. Paul LeMarquand is president. The theater contains many innovations that are entirely new, such as elevator service to balconies, inside exit inclines and interior emergency fire escapes. It is built on a lot 66 feet wide by 132 feet deep and has a seating capacity of 1,749. The house played to 43,792 paid admissions during the opening week. The entire basement of the theater is taken up with a two-story in height cafe and restaurant, with a balcony extending around the four sides. There are seventeen exits, all so arranged that the auditorium can be emptied in less than three minutes.

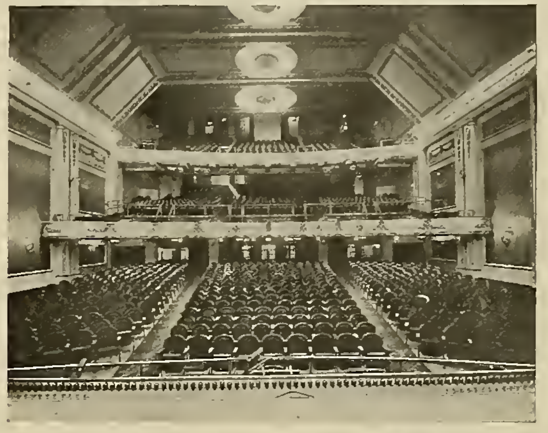
At present the policy of the theater is vaudeville and moving pictures, and the admission price is ten cents. The ticket office is located at the main entrance doors that lead to a large vestibule and the main lobby. From the main lobby one enters the main floor auditorium at the center; two wide marble stairways lead from this lobby to the upper balconies and foyers. These upper foyers are for the incoming patrons to wait when the auditorium has full capacity. From the main lobby on the first floor one can also take an elevator to either balconies and foyers. The exits are built inside the buildings and are so arranged and separated from the entrances to all floors of the auditorium that the public can exit without seeing or interfering in any way with the incoming entrances. The emergency fire escapes are separate iron stairways from exit stairways and are built on the inside of the building so as not to harm the architectural treatment of the front.



Empress Theater.

The theater is complete in every way, containing manager's office, mezzanine and balcony foyers, women and men's retiring rooms, commodious dressing rooms with bath connections and ventilating and vacuum cleaning systems. The interior is designed in modern French style. The general arrangement, the beautiful decorations, the stage, the auditorium draperies, the upholstered opera chairs, all harmonize and give the entire interior of the theater one of the most artistic effects. The acoustic qualities are perfect and a delight to the patrons.

The theater building is of reinforced concrete construction. The two balconies are supported by cantilevered beams, thereby eliminating all columns in the auditorium; the balconies cantilevering about 25 feet and extending back over the first floor foyer and lobby to balcony foyers, which are directly back of the front wall, giving the balconies spaciousness and greater seating capacity. Across the front of the first balcony are ten loggia boxes and back of these boxes are twenty rows of seats extending to balcony foyer. The second balcony contains seventeen rows of seats which extend back to foyer.



Interior View of Empress Theater.

The exterior facade is of terra cotta. The mansard roof is of terra cotta tile. There are four exterior balconies on facade which are accessible from balcony foyers and emergency fire escapes. Over the theater entrance is a beautiful marquise with crystal pendants studded with electric lights. The metal work of the roof and marquis are finished in verde antique. The entire building has an illuminated effect at night, which brings out very distinctly every architectural feature of the facade, as the accompanying illustration of that view will show.

GORDON PHOTOPLAY THEATER, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

The Gordon Photoplay House at Rochester, N. Y., which opened its doors on February 17th, is believed to be one of the most modern and pretentious motion picture theaters in the country. It is located at 71-77 Clinton Avenue South, is built of brick and seats 1,800 people, about equally divided between the first floor and the balcony. It is modeled after the plan of the New York Hippodrome, being very wide and having six aisles.

Perhaps the most strictly modern feature of this theater is a moving stairway running from the first floor to the balcony. This escalator is located in the rear of the house close to the main entrance, so that holders of balcony tickets have but to take a few steps and then be whisked to the upper floor. There are side stairways at either side of the house and 21 exits.

The interior decorations of the house are old rose and gold with here and there a touch of blue. The seats are air-cushioned, with leather coverings. There is a commodious ladies' waiting room with plenty of rockers and equipped with 12 large mirrors, a convenience that is much appreciated by the fair ones.

A pipe organ was installed in this theater at a cost of $25,000, and Richard Henry Warren, of the Church of the Ascension, New York, was persuaded to come to Rochester at a high figure and play it. In addition to this organ, which is equipped with chimes ranged around the front of the balcony, there is an orchestra of eight pieces, it being the aim of the management to make the house as well known as the home of fine music as a place to see good photoplays.

The Gordon was built at a cost $250,000 and is owned by the Gordon Brothers Amusement Company, of which N. H. Gordon, of Boston, is the moving spirit. Thomas S. Powers, formerly owner of four New England houses, is the resident manager.

GORDON'S PHOTOPLAYS

Gordon Photoplay Theater.

The policy at the Gordon so far has been to change pictures twice each week, on Mondays and Thursdays, although during Holy Week, one film, "Satan," was continued for the entire seven days and did the biggest week's business since the house was opened. Again, the week of April 14th, it presented "The Prisoner of Zenda" for seven days.

The scale of prices at the Gordon is five cents for women and children in the afternoons and ten cents for men. In the evening all seats downstairs are 15 cents, and all balcony seats 10 cents. The Gordon is a steady advertiser in the newspapers and finds this an extremely profitable method of getting business.

GRAND THEATER, BANDON, OREGON.

The accompanying photograph is a view of the Grand Theater, Bandon, Oregon. The manager, W. C. Sellmer, says that it is the farthest west photoplay house in the United States. The seating capacity of the Grand is 450, all the seats being upholstered opera chairs. It is steam heated and has all appointments that go to make a moving picture theater nice and cozy. A five-piece orchestra furnishes the music.

MILLS OF THE GODS
4000 FEET PICTURES

Grand Theater.

Although the house is fitted with a stage measuring 22 feet by 40 feet, no vaudeville has been used for a long time. The manager says that it didn't pay, and he gives emphasis to the words "didn't pay." He gives a good program of licensed pictures for which he charges a general admission price of ten cents. When features are shown he raises the price to fifteen cents and finds that his patrons are willing to pay the extra charge to see features.

The operating room of the Grand is constructed of fireproof material, has a Power's No. 6 projecting machine and a mercury arc rectifier.

THE SAVOY THEATER, McKEESPORT, PA.

The illustrations accompanying this article are views of the Savoy theater, McKeesport, Pa., of which Mr. H. A. Victor is the proprietor and manager. The Savoy, which is the oldest picture theater in that city, originally had a seating capacity of 420, but a few weeks ago Mr. Victor began increasing the capacity to about 700. Mr. Victor, by the way, is the oldest exhibitor in McKeesport in point of service.

Savoy Theater.

The interior photograph shows a section of the inside of the Savoy on the night of Mr. Francis X. Bushman's appearance there several months ago. A souvenir photograph of Mr. Bushman was given to every patron that night, and many of the McKeesport girls, it is said, still have them where they can see them first on arising for the day, and last on retiring for the night. Mr. Bushman made a very interesting address and shook hands with a large number of the audience.

PALACE THEATER, VANCOUVER, WASH.

We publish herewith an engraving of the front elevation of the Palace theater, 605 Main Street, Vancouver, Wash.

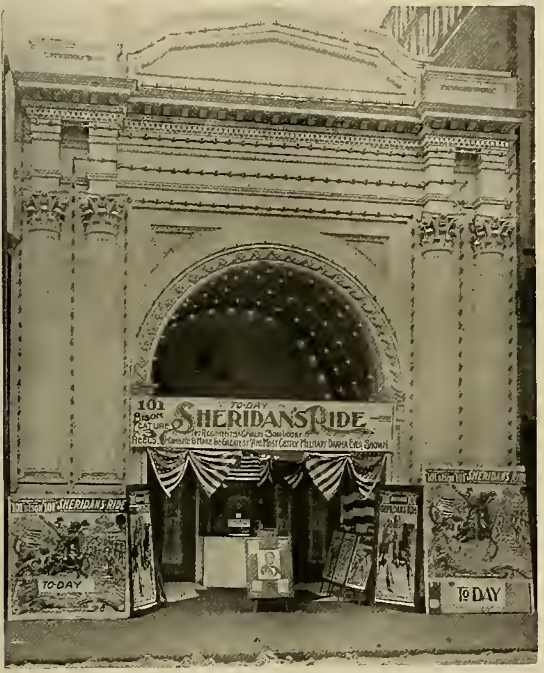
PAL CE TH ATRE.

Palace Theater.

Mr. C. Engleman opened the house February 10, 1909, and has made quite extensive improvements since that time, costing in the neighborhood of $3,000. Electrical wiring is through conduits. Six reels of film constitute the show for which an admission price of ten cents is charged. The music is furnished by a Wurlitzer piano-orchestra costing $2,285, a $1,050 flute-electric piano, in addition to the regular pianist and trap drummer. A Power's No. 6 machine projects the pictures. The seating capacity of the house is 381. Mr. Engleman is also the manager and has been doing well since he opened the place.

REX THEATER, OLYMPIA, WASHINGTON.

The Rex theater of Olympia, Washington, is known as "Olympia's Leading Motion Picture House." As will be seen by the photograph published herewith it is a very pretty place of amusement, and we have no doubt, judging by its exterior appearance, it is the leading picture house in that city. In other words it is a capital house in the Capitol of the State of Washington. It was erected two years ago by Messrs. J. K. and L. B. Nave at the corner of Fourth and Washington streets. The building is built entirely of cement and its dimensions are 35 feet by 80 feet. Its seating capacity is around 400 persons. The house is fitted with opera chairs, a Weber baby grand piano, a stage and scenery. Vaudeville is very seldom used, the house being a strictly picture theater. There are two aisles, each two feet ten inches in width. The operating room is of fireproof construction with motor-driven Power's No. 6 machine in almost constant operation. The size of the picture is 11 feet by 14 feet from a sixty-five foot throw. Among the many up-to-the-minute apparatus in the operating room there is a dissolving stereopticon, a spot light and a mercury arc rectifier. The theater represents an investment of $6,000. Business is very good.



Rex Theater.

CRYSTAL THEATER, CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA.

The accompanying illustration is a view of the Crystal theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa. It is situated in First Avenue East, between Third and Fourth Streets. Its seating capacity is 708. It has cement floors, nicely carpeted. The indirect lighting system is used. The seats are so arranged that those seated are not disturbed by those coming in or going out. It has a stage measuring 11 feet by 18 feet. There are five five-foot exits, four exhaust fans and a fireproof operating room. The cost of the building is in the neighborhood of $15,000.

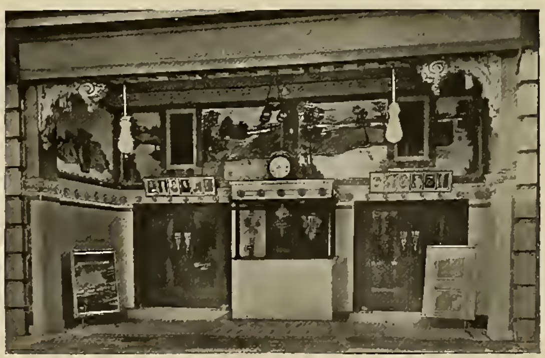
CRYSTAL THEATER

Crystal Theater.

The manager and proprietor, Mr. William Hemsky, has taken a ten-year lease on the premises. Mr. Hemsky has recently changed the name of the place from the "A Muse U" to the "Crystal." The entertainment consists of three reels, and a four-piece orchestra furnishes the music. A $900 Wurlitzer self-player piano is in the lobby.

ROSE THEATER, HIGH POINT, N. C.

The Rose theater at High Point, N. C., is situated midway between Raleigh, N. C., and Chattanooga, Tenn., and bears the distinction of being the finest moving picture house between those points. This statement of the proprietor seems to be proved by the accompanying illustration of the Rose. In the first place the lobby is not vitiated by any unsightly display of posters, there being but two neat posters and these are nicely framed. The glass panels in the entrance doors are decorated with landscape designs and the box office windows bear the emblem of a knight with the painting of a rose in the middle panel. Directly above the entrance doors are framed photographs of prominent photoplayers. The walls of the lobby for a height of eight or ten feet are of white tile brick, with plastic relief work and landscape paintings near the ceiling. The flooring of the lobby is of mosaic, with the name "Rose Theater" worked therein. The interior is equally as pretty. A mirror screen 9 feet by 13 feet is used. The music is furnished by a Welte Brisgovia orchestrion. The seating capacity is 350. P. C. McIntire is the proprietor and manager.



Rose Theater.

An English company is shortly to film "Hamlet," with Mr. Forbes Robertson in the leading role. This should be particularly popular in America, as the great actor commences his farewell tour of the States next autumn.

The Moving Picture Educator

THE ADVANCE OF SOME, AN EXAMPLE TO OTHERS.

Rev. W. H. Jackson.

Boards of Education everywhere seem convinced as to the value of the kinematograph as an aid to instruction, the majority of them, however, are holding back on account of the first cost of installing the necessary apparatus. This great care in spending public money is always commendable, although it is not so frequently exercised. In the present instance, however, it does seem that no reason can be advanced which can justify any delay. The cost of a moving picture outfit is not large and is limited to the first outlay; it is not one of those things which is constantly requiring additional expenditures, its first cost is the last, and covers an ordinary life time. Again it is perhaps one of the cheapest additions to a school outfit that has ever been found necessary. The cost of either a manual training equipment, or of a gymnasium, is ten times greater than that of the kinematograph; and yet every up to date school is trying to get these other advantages. A particular thing in favor of the picture machine is that unlike many other additions, it does not require an extra building, or any additional room or enlargement; it can be used in any ordinary sized auditorium or large class-room.

The Greek Government in Advance.

That the Grecians, as a people, should be the first nation to make an official move looking to the universal uses of the moving pictures in the schools of the country is most commendable to them, and a reflection to such countries as England and America. Identical with this welcome news of Grecian advance comes the melancholy information that in England, the London Educational Authorities have decided that "on account of the cost" they cannot yet see their way clear to the adoption of the kinematograph. As the "cost" is the only thing in the way this is another endorsement of the value of the picture, even if it is weak evasion of a paramount duty on a flimsy basis; it is to be hoped that the example of the Greeks will prevail over that of the Londoners.

By a strange process of reasoning these same London authorities met the "cost" of sending one hundred scholars to Paris for the purpose of seeing that which all the thousands of school children could have seen by aid of the picture, if Paris had been kinematographically taken to London; really this seems a lame and halting method of procedure entirely unworthy the wisdom of so important a body of rulers. In justice to America it is only fair to state that while no governmental action has been taken in either nation or state, there is a great and wide-spread growth of the work of the moving picture in educationalism, colleges and private institutions are all being gradually equipped, indeed the work is so thorough that the appropriation of public will only be necessary to make complete and universal the general adoption of the moving picture in general education.

Emphasizing the Colored Picture.

In taking up the question of picture teaching, the Greek government has ordered special attention to be given to the colored pictures, the reason advanced is that natural-history, science and chemistry subjects are increased in pedagogical value thereby; this is no doubt true, and the nearer every picture can come to nature the better for the scholar, it should, however, be kept in mind that to ask all perfections from the beginning may be asking too much, the picture first by all means, and then afterwards as much detail and thoroughness as possible.

Although the time has not arrived for the American government to make any special move towards the adoption of the moving picture in general education, partly because the matter is one for local or home authorities; they have always shown that they are alive to the value of the picture, and are using the kinematograph in many departments; the latest governmental move is that of Recruiting the Army by Pictures.

The plan proposed is to show pictures of "army life" in the picture theaters throughout the country. This seems almost like subsidizing the picture houses, but where is the exhibitor who will not be glad to help the government in its laudable desires? When it is known that 30,000 young men are required every year to equip the military establishments of this country, it will readily be seen that a large number of recruiting stations have to be maintained at great cost, this new plan will prove it is hoped both economical and superior; it is certain that the power of attraction will be more effectual in its appeal to young men than conscription; again we have the advantage.

Teaching Safety.

Further advance in the campaign of "safety teaching" which the moving picture has introduced is marked by the adoption by the Pennsylvania Railroad company of a series of lectures designed to show how tasks at which men have been injured may be performed safely; also with a view to increasing the safety of passenger traffic by reducing possible dangers to a minimum. Perhaps a description of some of the films may be of service in suggesting to readers the value of this "safety" plan now being so generally adopted, making the moving picture a "life preserver" in addition to its other well-known advantages. One of the films showed an employee being taught how to handle tools; another an employee learning how to operate safety appliances. In another picture, a mechanic was shown at work under a freight car, courting injury, and a foreman who illustrated the manner in which the work might be performed without danger. Still another view showed how a car is thrown off the track through the neglect of the engineers to observe signals. "Regular subjects"—photo dramas, and comedies—were thrown on the screen between the instructive ones, thus making an attractive exhibition relieved of the monotony of one subject. Other films are contemplated for the general public, teaching safety in travel with useful hints in times of danger.

Oxygen—Its Valuable Uses Simply Taught.

Oxygen is life. Without this well-known gas no living being, or even plant life, could exist. This fact is splendidly taught by this excellent set of Eclair pictures. No scientific picture has been issued which teaches so great and valuable a lesson, in such a thorough manner, and in so short a time as this one. A young scholar without any knowledge of oxygen whatever may go into the class-room and in the course of fifteen minutes receive a never to be forgotten lesson, which shall be of increasing value in the future. Interesting experiments are pictured as they take place in the laboratory with a greater power of explanatory detail, because of the enlarged pictures. Oxygen is shown mixed with Azote which modifies its strength, and composes the atmosphere of the air.

How oxygen is made, or obtained, is very interestingly shown by the heating of bioxyde of manganese in a retort. It is then shown that the gas has been obtained by the plunging of a piece of burning wood into a test tube filled with gas, and which now bursts into flame. The great value of oxygen as a life saver, is illustrated by the way in which an apparatus filled with the gas is carried like a knapsack on the back, with a breathing attachment so that the wearer can safely go anywhere, where otherwise breathing would be impossible. The rescuing of miners in a mine in which there has been a fire-damp explosion, or the working beneath in deep waters in now readily and thoroughly understood by the beholder. The brilliant effects of this all important gas are shown when a piece of burning coal becomes intensely bright and sparkling. A piece of steel spring, when brought to a white heat and placed in oxygen, burns more brilliant and sparkling.

The combined uses of oxygen and acetylene are explained by means of the oxy-acetylene pipes. The great strength of oxygen is found when a jet of the gas is projected on red burning steel upon which it leaves a white mark or line. A block of steel over two feet thick, cannot resist its penetrating powers when a steady stream of this gas is poured upon it, and which it finally cuts in two parts. As a primary lesson in the science room this film will prove invaluable as it lays the foundation of that sort of knowledge upon which higher subjects can be built.

THE EDUCATIONAL PICTURE.

By the Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton, S. T. B.

Vitagraph's "A Soul in Bondage."

This release of May 15th, is one of the best pictures that has been produced by any manufacturer so far this year. It is not only a real story, well acted and properly produced, it is also one of the few that measures up to the standard of a good ethical and educational photoplay. It is the story of the penitent sinner who reaps both the whirlwind of her former vicious life and the reward of her later virtuous one; yet there is nothing overdrawn or morbid, it is true to the facts of life and American social conditions, and while the treatment is comprehensive and definite it is delicate and artistic and avoids all offensive elements, and the action itself, without any preaching whatever, points up and emphasizes the moral, "Be sure your sin will find you out," and although "the wages of sin is death," "the gift of God is eternal life." It is not a story for children, but it is an excellent story to make men and women think, and to make them think in the right way.

Pathe's "An Itinerant Wedding."

We regret deeply that we must call attention to this release, also of May 15th, but the interests of the manufacturer and the exhibitor as well as morality compel us to make a protest. The story is that of a wedding surreptitiously begun, continually interrupted, and finally completed. We have no objection to such a story and can even see a good fantastic farce comedy in it when properly handled; but when it comes to enacting the marriage service itself, which is not only revered and loved, but held holy and sacred by thousands of persons, in a travesty of this kind, it evidences something more than merely bad taste on the part of the producers who made the picture and the members of the censor board that passed it. When in addition the burlesque is emphasized by actual quotations from the marriage service so thinly veiled that the only changes made are "do you take" for "wilt thou take" and "I do" for "I will," and by using as the officiating minister a church clergyman properly dressed, who performs the regulation ceremonial acts of the service, the offense more than borders on the profane and sacrilegious. This class of picture does more harm than anything else to the business; it is responsible for a large part of the troubles of the exhibitor to-day, and for almost all of the antagonism on the part of educators and other civic, social and religious workers. It is a great pity that a company that has so often and ably demonstrated its ability to produce and stand for all that is best and highest in the picture art should have allowed such an example of the worst to be released under its trade mark.

Pathe's "The Spider That Lives in a Bubble."

On the other hand, as an example of what Pathes can do when they choose, there are no better illustrations than their release of April 10th, "God is Love," which is a photodramatization of one of Tolstoi's stories, and their forthcoming release for May 30th, "The Spider That Lives in a Bubble." This last is one of their "Nature and Science" series and portrays the life and habits of the water spider which dwells in pools of stagnant water, or in streams in which the current is sluggish and filled with reeds and water plants. Here the spider builds its nest of the air bubbles floating on the top of the water, fastens it to the reeds and grasses by the thread which it spins, catches its prey and watches over its eggs unceasingly until they are hatched. To indicate the value of this picture, it is only necessary to say that the above description is merely an abstract of the actual sub-titles or leaders, and to call attention to the fact that it belongs to the same series as those which brought forth the encomiums of the American Philosophical Society a short while ago.

Releases April 20 to 26.

Following each title are given the volume and page of the Moving Picture World where the synopsis and comment on that particular picture is to be found, the volume number before, the page number after the colon. The notes after certain of the titles are not intended as synopses, but merely as hints on the uses for which the picture is or has been found available. Music for the Picture

BY CLARENCE E. SINN

A VERY important adjunct to the orchestra—especially the moving picture orchestra—and one which is growing in favor every day is to be found in the musical bells, chimes, marimbaphones and instruments of like character, as well as xylophones and orchestra steel bells. To J. C. Deagan more than any other one man is due this growing popularity of these instruments. Mr. Deagan has done two very important things toward this end; first, he has evolved a very superior bell. Second, by means of his clever electric appliances any ordinary pianist or drummer can play them. Also, being of so simple construction, a boy of average intelligence can install them. Of course, he has long made a feature of bells and xylophones, etc., for artists' use, but undoubtedly the impetus given to the demand for these instruments in late years is due principally to J. C. Deagan's electric inventions which make their playing an easy matter. It takes long practice to acquire the even "roll" necessary in playing the xylophone or steel bells; it takes none to manipulate a Deagan key-board and get the same result.

A favorite manner of installing the bells is to string them around the auditorium high above the heads of the audience. Some years ago as perhaps you remember, when any one of the bells thus installed got out of order, you had to place a ladder under the bell in question and climb up to fix it. Mr. Deagan has eliminated all this. By his "no contact" mechanism he has reduced their chances of getting out of order to a minimum; and if they should need regulating (which is seldom) it can be done by the performer without leaving his seat. They can be played loud or soft at will; single stroke or roll as desired. A shut-off key is provided; drummers will appreciate this feature who remember the discordant jangle resulting from accidentally touching the key-board when reaching over for some "trap."

I visited the factory of J. C. Deagan the other day and was much impressed by what I saw there. He occupies three floors of the pretentious Deagan Building in Chicago—25,000 feet of space on each floor—75,000 feet of floor space in all, in addition to the out buildings, dry-rooms, etc. Every thing but the wood and metal is made in the factory. The wood (for xylophones) is cut especially for J. C. Deagan in Australia; the metal for bells, chimes, etc., is made to order by a special process. These raw materials are received at the Deagan factory and are cut, shaped, polished, tuned, plated and a lot of other things by expert artisans to become the things of beauty which you finally see and hear in the exhibiting department. There were orchestra bells to be played by hand and by the electric key-board. Other electric bells in such profusion that space forbids naming them. Electric cathedral chimes; these are the same shape as the usual chimes; long tubes of a beautiful tonal quality with a hammer fixed to strike in exactly the right place and operated from a key-board. The chimes may be placed in the orchestra, lobby or any part of the house. (The same is true of all the J. C. Deagan electrical instruments.)

An electrical marimbaphone was shown. It is impossible to convey a definite idea of this instrument. Though made of steel bars with resonators and is the same shape as a xylophone, its tone especially on the low and medium notes is something like that of an organ. The illusion was more pronounced when heard at a little distance. Mr. Deagan describes its tone quality as "like that of musical glasses," but he is too modest; the tone is bigger and fuller than any musical glasses I ever heard. I saw a large xylophone which is played from an electric key-board also. The hammers are of the regular type—hard wood heads and rattan handles, thus insuring the correct tone—and any piano player can play a xylophone solo upon it that would be the envy of an expert xylophonist. This can be hung in the lobby of your theater if desired. I haven't got room here to tell all the interesting things I saw, but the J. C. Deagan catalogues may be had for the asking and they will tell you more things than I can and tell them better. We visited the plating-room, where each article to be plated receives at least three coats; some of them more. They are just completing a new instrument called the "Nabimba." This will probably be on the market by the time you read this article, otherwise I would be chary of mentioning it at all. It looked like a xylophone—bars of wood with resonators suspended beneath. When struck with the hammer two tones were produced, one the regular xylophone tone, the other a sustained reedy tone something like the low notes of a clarinet. Impulsively I looked to see where "the wind came from" to make such an effect. Of course, I couldn't find anything of that sort, but it had me guessing and I said so. "You keep right on guessing," said J. C., "and come away before you see too much. I only wanted you to hear it, not examine it." That's all I can say about it, only that it is a wonder. And I am still guessing.

From the "Crown Theater," Hartford, Conn.: "I am enclosing my musical program to Kalem's 'The Cheyenne Massacre.' Though they had a special piano score for this picture, I did not use it, as I would have had to make an orchestration. My orchestra consists of five men in the winter months and four in the summer. At present I am using violin, cello and flute, which can't be beat for playing pictures and for good music. People want good music and not noise. I have a large library of nearly all the standard overtures, selections, waltzes, etc., and keep a record of all I play, so my audience don't hear the same music all the time. I change programs three times a week; every number is changed and not played for months again, except when some number is repeated by request. I have trained my men so they have all the cue-music at their finger tips—the whole orchestra—so it is as easy for me to play a picture with them at it is alone on the piano. Every leader should have his men learn all the National airs, a galop, a march, a waltz and dramatic music, so they can play it the moment he wants it. In that way a picture can be played at sight, then at the end of that picture he can arrange a program for it. The following picture went pretty good the first time and fine the second, so I had the whole program made up of pretty good music."

"THE CHEYENNE MASSACRE" (Kalem).

Part First.

1. "Brides and Butterflies Waltz." Play introduction while title is on; as the first scene appears (dancing) segue to the waltz. Until title: "Next Morning, Chief Swift, etc."
2. "Indian Summer Intermezzo" until title: "That Night."
3. "Garden of Dreams Serenade" until Indians are seen.
4. "Tom-Tom Intermezzo" until fight starts.
5. Agitato until boy is seen standing alone near ruins.
6. "Alpine Rose—a Flower Song" until scene exterior of post appears; watch for bugle call, then segue:
7. "The Twelfth Regiment March" until end of reel.

Part Second.

1. Introduction of "Danube Waves" waltz until title is on.
2. Agitato until title: "Vengeance of the Red Men."
3. "Big Chief Battle Axe" (Indian Noveltv) until title: Lieutenant Ellis Volunteers, etc."
4. "Venetian Water Waltz" until Indians are seen.
5. Agitato until man with shawl meets Indian girl, then:
6. Chorus of "Silver Bell" or "Red Wing" until he jumps on horse.
7. "Petersburgh Sleighride Galop" until title: "The Attack of Fort Bryson."
8. Agitato until bugler blows bugle.
9. Bugle call, Siegel march, "Weinblut Wein" until soldiers are seen on hill with American flag.
10. "Red, White and Blue" until fight starts, then:
11. Agitato until title: "After the Battle."
12. "Boy Scout March." Lieutenant puts his arms around the girl.
13. "Star Spangle Banner."

Read this over a couple of times and arrange your music in this order. You don't have to use the same waltzes or marches. Play any you have and you will find this program O. K. Let me hear from those who use it. Yours,

R. J. Bessette, Musical Director "Crown Theater,"
Hartford, Conn.

I am afraid I have not got your name correctly, Brother B., as you did not write it distinctly. However, your method of playing to the pictures with an orchestra is correct all right. The only way to get results is to have a lot of music "at your finger tips"—as you say: "every man in the orchestra." This applies particularly to the dramatic music, as it enables all to watch the picture. Will be glad to hear from you again.

"WAMBA: A CHILD OF THE JUNGLE" (Selig).

Part One.

1. "Daisies" (Bendix; pub. by Witmark). First part only until title: "Dr. Rice of the Settlement." Then second movement through two scenes.
2. "Mystic Shrine" (Earl Cameron; pub. by Carl Fischer). Until Wamba arrives at Dr. Rice's home.
3. "Idle Thoughts" (Harry Von Tilzer). Until after title: "Wamba's Baby Dies." Continue No. 3 until Doctor breaks the news to Wamba; then:
4. Plaintive until end of scene.
5. Agitato p. and f. until Doctor R. orders Pete away.
6. Short sentimental until end of scene.
7. "Flight of the Birds" (or any pretty caprice or novelette) until end of Part One.

Part Two.

1. Agitato; through first scene. Then subdue for second scene or short neutral. At end of second scene:
2. Long agitato p. and f. for flight and pursuit by lions; continue until child climbs up the river bank.
3. Short Intermezzo ("In Cupid's Garden"—pub. by T. B. Harms), until Dr. Rice and wife enter house.
4. Agitato until child seen crossing glade.
5. "Mozembique" (Oriental intermezzo by Gruenwall; pub. by O. Ditson), until lion comes to child's hiding place in log.
6. Agitato until Dr. Rice and party leaves Pete's shack.
7. "Amina" (Paul Lincke; pub. by Stern), until end of picture.

A FIGHTING CHANCE (Vitagraph).

1. Novelette until girl is seen at piano.
2. "That's How I Love You" (follow pianist in picture).
3. At change, back to No. 1 until: "Not Knowing Wynne Is Married."
4. Waltz until they enter restaurant.
5. "If You Talk In Your Sleep, Don't Mention My Name." When at piano.
6. "That's How I Love You" (short), then:
7. Waltz lento until: "The Firm Sends Wynne on a Four Months' Tour."
8. "Pearls" (Moret) until: "A Stranger to the Wife, etc."
9. Waltz lento until: "Preparations to Leave for the City."
10. "Dimples" (Bratton) until: "Learning the Charm of Grace."
11. Waltz (for dancing) until change of scene.
12. Restaurant scene. Popular cabaret music, "Home From His Trip."
13. Waltz (Neutral) until: "The Appointment."
14. "You're a Great Big Blue-Eyed Baby" until he sees his wife in box.
15. "If You Talk In Your Sleep, etc.," very softly, crescendo at change of scene. When he meets wife.
16. Sentimental until she plays piano; then:
17. "That's How I Love You," until end, dying away with picture.

Conditions in New Zealand

The cinematograph business in New Zealand is in a fairly prosperous condition, but its progress is being somewhat retarded by the combined influences of overcrowding and film combines. The film distribution is now controlled practically by Jno. Fuller & Sons and the Haywards. There is a small amount coming in from outside sources, but this will probably soon cease in favor of the larger control. The great majority of films shown here, in Wellington, is licensed stuff (first run), with occasional foreign feature films, generally of the type which is not particularly suited to our own special views or tastes. There being no censorship in force here, some managers often sail very close to the wind in relation to questionable film, but, for the most part, the programs put on are clean and free from suggestiveness, which speaks well for the wholesome management shown by the different picture theaters. These places are generally well conducted, well ventilated and comfortable, though heating arrangements for the winter months are mostly absent.

The indirect lighting system, which should be everywhere compulsory, is very little availed of so far.

Projection is fair. There are no restrictions placed upon the amount of current used for projection purposes, so there should be no excuse in this respect. The current used is D. C., 500 volts, from the tramway power supply converted to the required amperage through motor generator sets. Current is charged for at the following rates:

Power, 4d. per unit, net; lighting, 5d. per unit, net. Of course, these prices apply to Wellington only, other places varying according to local conditions.

In comparison with America our screens must be generally much larger, our projection current varying from 45 to 75 amperes, mostly about the higher figure. There are no regulations relating to the fitting out of operating rooms, some of which are highly dangerous and far from being in any way fireproof. Again, an operator may obtain a position without having passed any test or examination. More by good fortune than good management there have been, so far, no serious accidents resulting from the burning of film. The following projectors find favor: Powers, Gaumont, Pathe, and Imperator.

In Wellington, the capital city of New Zealand, with a city population of about 70,000, there are five picture theaters, three of which are continuous shows, running from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m. Admissions: Continuous, 3d. and 6d., while some have a row of reserved seats at 1/-. The evening shows, running from 8 to 10:15 p. m., charge 6d., 1/-, and 1/6, reserving 6d. extra.

In the larger theaters there is usually a 10-piece orchestra, the continuous shows varying from 3 to 6 pieces for the evening sessions, with a piano or pianola in the daytime. The music is, and has always been, of a high standard, though no special attempt is made to play to the pictures. Sound effects have been deservedly dropped some time back.

Advertising is restricted entirely to the newspapers, lobby displays and posters on the boardings. Newspaper rates are about 5/- per inch, single column, and 15/- per inch, double. Little or no originality is sought after in the advertisements, which contain simply the name of the theater, prices of admission and names of films. No attempt is made by those interested in the business to try and elevate the entertainment to a higher educational level.

Most managers, looking ruefully upon the smallness of box office receipts, would do well to subscribe to your paper and study closely the page "Advertising for Exhibitors" each week. None of the local picture theaters are doing capacity business, for the simple season that they stick to the one routine and show no originality whatever either in that or outside it. The managers seem persistently dull of vision that they see nothing of the vast possibilities behind this great industry or, seeing them, are careless of any desire to move from the one groove.

The shows all advertising in the newspapers, there is, unfortunately, no criticism of films possible and good, honest criticism is, in my opinion, one of the first essentials to effecting a higher degree of perfection in the business. Our papers would do well to follow the somewhat belated lead of the American press and devote regularly some space to the reviewing of films and other matters of interest.

There seems to be little demand for scenic or educational film, the taste being for good drama and clean comedy. The cinematograph has, as yet, made no appearance in the schools, the chief drawbacks being the expense of running and the impossibility of obtaining a regular supply of suitable pictures. Its introduction to the schools, however, is merely a matter of time.

We will shortly have the good fortune of seeing Pathe's "Les Miserables" and the Cines Company's masterpiece, "Quo Vadis?"

Several of the films now coming to hand from London bear the leader of the British Board of Film Censors.

Having doubtless encroached too much already upon your space, I will continue my notes in my next letter.

E. MILES SAMUEL.

A heated controversy is being waged in Nottingham, Eng. Rev. H. G. Dockerell, a New York gentleman who has recently taken over the pastorate of the Tabernacle, has let out his church on weekdays to a picture show syndicate. His congregation is up in arms against the action, but Mr. Dockerell has announced his intention of continuing until the debts on the building have been cleared.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

We Are Not "August."

HERE'S an experience letter from Ernest E. Sprague, of the Crystal Theater, Goodland, Kansas. Before we give up the floor to him we want to deny that "august presence" thing. The nearest we come to august is that our birthday falls on the last day of that month, but we don't put any frills on and anyone is welcome to come to our office except book agents and peddlers. Don't be afraid to come in. Now for Mr. Sprague, who writes:

> Ever since my advent into the moving picture game, seven months ago, I have had a hankering to write you, but always felt a certain shyness in approaching your august editorial presence and classing myself with the clever and experienced exhibitors who contribute to your department.
> I have received so many valuable hints from your advice, however, that I am sending you some of my advertising for your criticism.
>
> I bought my theater from an "old showman" type of exhibitor whose parting warning was not to spend any money trying to get the patronage of the better class of people because they would not go to a picture show. Judging from the class of pictures he used and his manner of conducting the theater, I did not blame the "better class" of people in the least.
>
> My theater is located in a town of 2,500 inhabitants, with no advertising medium except a weekly newspaper, and, by putting on a special feature every week I soon built up a good Friday and Saturday business, but the other nights in the week were very poor. As two-thirds of the population of the town is railroad people, I hit upon the idea of giving them a railroad picture Wednesday night of each week, when possible, designating this evening "Railroad Night." The plan was a success from the start, and in two weeks' time Wednesday night was the biggest night of the week, and my house, with a seating capacity of four hundred, was jammed to the doors. I also advertised Monday night as "Educational Evening," and provided one or two reels of scientific, educational, scenic, or travel pictures which have increased my attendance seventy-five per cent. and has made regular patrons of the very best people in the town. I sometimes substitute a religious picture for the educationals and they always fill the house. When a railroad picture is not available I put on a concert or amateur night, made up entirely of local talent; nearly every one participating in these events are choir singers from the churches, so that I have learned that the better class of people will attend a picture show.
> I suppose most of these stunts are ancient history to you except, possibly, the "Railroad Night," and it may have been used somewhere else for all I know. For the manager in a railroad town up to fifteen thousand it will outdraw any three-reel feature if properly advertised.
>
> I am just one of the "little fellows" in a small country town and realize that none of these ideas would be of use to the manager in the cities, but thought some of the other little fellows might find the germ of an idea in them. The dodgers I enclose you are hung up twice a week in every place of business and I make a house to house distribution of them and give one of them personally to some one in each home in town; I know they pull because I can fill my house any night I choose by advertising something special.
> Just a word about service. I see the statement so often that the exhibitor is allowed no choice in selecting his programs. If every exhibitor dealt with an exchange manager like Mr. Drum, of the Denver branch of the General Film Company, there would be no cause for complaint. He has allowed me to select all my railroad and educational pictures and I have even selected my entire program for a week, including the feature.

Now we know why Kalem has made so many railroad pictures; they knew Mr. Sprague could use them.

Any appeal along local lines is a good one. Some day we'll see special programs of farm pictures and special night for trades. That would not be such a poor idea for an anniversary week; Monday night, shop night; Tuesday, factory night; Wednesday, railroad night; Thursday, housekeeper's night; Friday, athlete's night, and any old thing for Saturday.

The Posters.

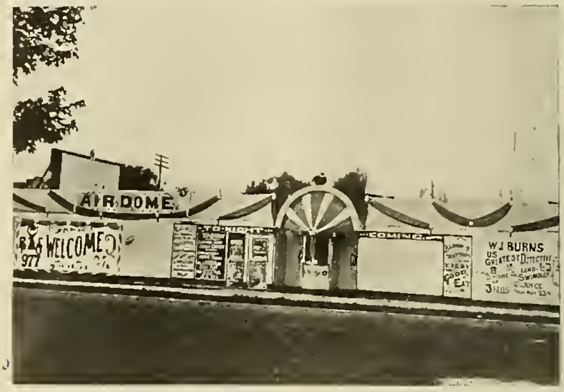
Mr. Sprague's posters are pretty much alike, the majority of them giving the Monday and Tuesday and Wednesday bills with perhaps the Thursday and Friday feature. No straining is made for effect and there is no artistic lying, just a plain, straightforward announcement, interestingly phrased but not so extravagant that the picture will not make good for what is said. We think that Mr. Sprague builds a loyal clientele and holds their loyalty through their confidence. That much is apparent when he says he can pull them in with a special bill. They have come to know that a special bill means a special show. In a town of 2,500 persons you must use the same audience over and over again and it doesn't pay to abuse their confidence. Mr. Sprague holds his people because he plays fair and he got them in because he went after them in the right way.

Why the Songs.

The Savoy Theater, New Orleans, issues an eight-page program with a misspelled word in the advertisements. Merely the titles and brands are listed and the rest of the space allowed the house is used up in advertising the musical program, one house being advertised each day. We think the advertisement of the film should be worth more to the theater than gratuitous advertising of some one else's business. There are twenty-seven lines of announcement and thirty-three lines for the publishers. A couple of lines of comment on each reel would mean more to the house than the fact that Joe Stern's songs are sung or played on Monday, and Daly's songs on Tuesday. The Savoy program is a wasted opportunity.

Plenty of Poster Space.

George C. Cacum, of the Airdome, Clarksdale, Miss., sends two photographs of his new airdome which seats 1,100 persons. We regret that the better of the two pictures is not sharp enough for reproduction as the bare spaces in the cut shown are filled up, mostly with pictorial paper.



There are 86 feet of fence available for poster use, so we cannot blame Mr. Cacum for renting some of the space to local merchants, but we think that the space nearest the entrance should be held for the house to the extent of the width of six sheets on each side.

We do not like those "Tonight" and "Coming" boards because they waste paper unless it is merely tacked up, and if it is tacked up it is liable to get torn and mussed. A better scheme would be to have the poster space so arranged that separate three-sheet boards can be fitted under the signs. If you have three coming features run one on each of the boards. The day the feature shows, take last night's boards out of the "Tonight" space and move the feature over. In that way the same three sheet can be made to serve for coming and tonight and can be taken in overnight, if desired.

Mr. Cacum writes that he provides for both blacks and whites, which is necessary in a town where the colored population outnumbers the whites four to one. Garden benches are provided for the whites and the negroes sit on bleachers, though we don't think they will bleach much.

Four reels of Licensed films and a seven-piece orchestra are the attraction except on Friday, when two features and two regular reels are run.

To Be Expected.

Frank Montgomery did not disappoint us in doing some unusually brilliant advertising work for "From the Manger to the Cross" and equally we looked for an unusual production from the Lyric, Minneapolis, where Mr. Rothapfel made the production. We object to his being called "the Belasco of Motion Pictures," for his work is too original to be termed the copy of another. The Lyric had the remarkable production three days the latter part of April, and Manager Rothapfel made special productions at two afternoon and three evening performances with the pipe organ, concert orchestra and choir, and three other presentations with the pipe organ alone in the quiet hours at noon, at a quarter past one and at six fifteen. All of the advertising carried the hours of commencement and stated when the organ alone would be employed. When the full production was shown the doors were closed and no one admitted until the next performance.

It seems to us that this plan should be followed everywhere. Do not spoil the most remarkable picture yet produced by letting the late comers utterly ruin the religious atmosphere created by trampling over those already seated. It is not probable that even New York will see a production such as the patrons of the Saxe Brothers' house had unless Mr. Rothapfel is brought to town, but you can do as well as you can with it as your means permit.

The advertising was in keeping with the dignity of the occasion. There was no display, just the dignified announcement of the hours of performance and a few words about the film itself. The wording of the warning is given for the possible use of others who may wish to bar the doors.

> During the presentation immediately upon commencing the performance, the doors will be closed and no one will be allowed to enter until the following performance. This is imperative to the success of the presentation and it is hoped that our patrons will assist us in this effort.

It may cost you a couple of dollars on the turnaway, but it will come back to you and more in the long run. Paste this up somewhere until the film does reach you.

No Nice Way.

A Denver fan writes in a protest against the advertising reel and states that a first-class Denver house ran a three-reel "special" advertising a furniture company and telling where the furniture might be seen. He adds: "They ran this on the same day that they ran 'The Black Conspiracy,' and this forced many of us to see the former when we only wanted to see the latter."

To run three thousand feet of advertising picture is an outrage on the good nature of any audience, and no matter how attractive the stuff may be, the use of the film will be resented. No intelligent exhibitor will consider the momentary profit sufficient to offset the damage done the house's permanent clientele, and the manager who indulges in such short-sighted money-making schemes hurts not only himself but the entire business. The moment the advertising reel invades the business to any extent, that moment will mark the commencement of the downfall of the photoplay, for presently the picture lover will be afraid to enter the theaters not knowing whether or not he will be forced to sit through an hour of advertising for the sake of the picture he wants.

Here is a matter that the Exhibitors' League should take up promptly. Advertising slides are bad enough, but the advertising reel is an imposition and a swindle.

The writer of this letter also comments on the use of a reel of "Camille," "the play that Sarah Bernhart made famous," only the name of the play and player being sufficiently prominent to be noticed though it was not the Bernhart "Camille."

Such stuff will automatically put the manager out of business, but the trouble is that such actions do not alone affect the house giving the offense, but the entire photoplay business of the town.

Something Different.

Mr. Blanchard offers something different in advertising for "The Battle of Bloody Ford," at the People's Theater, Sunbury, Pa. He uses the middle column of a three-column space with the Kalem trade mark in the center. Above is the title in eighteen and twenty-four point and below these "reading" notices:

> THE BATTLE OF BLOODY FORD is of the best, ay, the very best, not as so many of the Moving Picture Battles are, merely a large amount of men, horses and gun powder. This Battle takes the troops participating, into the woods and over the mountains, and the effect upon the spectator is in the best sense of the word, thrilling.

> MISS MARION COOPER, who is still in her teens, is a splendid athlete, a good runner, a graceful and skilled rider, and a perfect swimmer, and gives most delightful exhibitions of her accomplishments in this great WAR DRAMA to-night.

That tells just as much as a wild display and attracts more attention because it is unusual.

Coming Up.

The last Cameraphone Bulletin came in with six issues instead of five, the Oakland Theater using the service. We do not know whether the Oakland is a Cameraphone house or not, but the Cameraphone service fits it equally well and gives a better program than they could afford as an independent venture. We are glad to see the Bulletin growing.

A recent contest was, "Why I Like Pathe's Weekly," answered by the children. This naturally means that the elders were interested in the efforts of the children and so the weekly feature was advertised all the way around. That's the idea of giving contests for children. They take it into the home and tell the whole family and the neighbors as well.

One paragraph in the East End Bulletin opens a subject that is worthy of discussion. Here it is:

> Recently we have been advertising and showing a number of two or three-reel feature pictures. But, during the rush hours of the early evening, we have been compelled to cut these off and substitute several new one-reel pictures, in order to take care of the crowds. During the afternoon and later in the evening we follow the advertised program. Our plan has been the cause of our receiving several letters of complaint. We reproduce one which shows that one patron is much displeased. It is absolutely impossible for us to run features of two and three-reel lengths during the busy hour. Try and come in the afternoon and see a BIG show. May 7, 1913.
> Does the Cameraphone management think it is conductive of good business to advertise a program as enclosed, and after attracting a fair sized crowd, to show pictures of an inferior quality? I have attended the Cameraphone Theater (East End) since it opened—but never again. Three times lately I have been "stung" after going there—and fortunately there are other "Movies" in East Liberty.
> Don't you think it would pay to show what you advertise?
> "A Movie Fan."

It is our own belief that if you leave out the advertised feature "to take care of the crowd," there will be no crowd to take care of after a time. It would be better to announce the hours at which the feature will be shown and explain when it will not be shown. The man who pays ten cents at seven o'clock should be entitled to precisely what is given the man who comes at two or three o'clock in the afternoon. If it is impossible to run a feature at certain hours, that fact—and not the feature—should be advertised.

A Stinger.

Bert S. Johnson, of the Elite Theater, Weeping Water, Neb., sends a folder that reads:

IMPORTANT!
Everyone should read this pamphlet.
Reasons why you should not attend the ELITE
Photoplays.

It is folded as a four-page leaflet but the other three pages are blank. It is an adaptation of an old idea, but it was well applied to local conditions. We are giving his letter considerable space because it shows that the man who hustles and gives a clean show can win out almost anywhere. He writes:

> I have never sent in any ideas to this department but have gleaned a good many from these pages. Am in a town of 1,200 and a church town at that. When I opened the theater here fourteen months ago it was freely prophesied I wouldn't stay two weeks, as the people would not patronize a picture show. One of the first things I did after opening was to have a number of pamphlets printed and circulated (sample enclosed). These folders gave the impression at first glance that some one was out with a hammer. It made a hit and set people to thinking, I guess. It wasn't long until Sunday school teachers were giving theater parties to their pupils. I freely advertised that I intended to exhibit only clean, moral pictures. And while some have slipped by that I didn't approve of, I have refused to run some of both Licensed and Independent makes. The Congregational minister, during a sermon against dancing and theater going announced in the pulpit that he had no objections to his congregation attending "Mr. Johnson's picture show as he had a good, clean show." Stick to the clean stuff, boys, it pays better in the long run and you will have the satisfaction of knowing you are helping a good cause.
> The junior class of the high school were to give a class play in the opera house. The night before the play they had a misunderstanding with the manager and decided to have it in the schoolhouse. As they had sold 300 tickets they had to give the play two nights to accommodate the crowd. With a stamping outfit I have I made the following notice and put it up in the post office:
> NOTICE.
>
> The JUNIOR CLASS PLAY will be held at the HIGH SCHOOL to-night and Thursday, as there are more tickets sold than the room will accommodate. Those who cannot gain admittance will find a good program at the ELITE, as usual.
>
> In spite of the fact that 300 tickets had been sold, we had a better house than we did the Wednesday before with other conditions the same. I agree with you that the small-town manager has to hustle and advertise to get the business. Don't over-advertise a feature. Work off the surplus steam in advertising the house. Above all, don't put on anything extra to buck a school entertainment or anything of that sort.
>
> The tornado Easter Sunday almost wiped out the small town of Berlin, ten miles from here. I drove down with the local photographer and we took some views and made a dozen slides. Had them on exhibition the second night after the storm, would have had them Monday night but the roads were too muddy for a car and we had to drive.
>
> I don't expect to see this in print, but I will feel better for having offered my mite. If "Advertising for Exhibitors" was edited as a separate magazine I would pay my $3.00 a year for it rather than go without.

How It Works.

With this, the ticket and three pieces of advertising matter. One of these is a plea to the reader to make use of the parcels post. We don't know who wrote this stuff, but if he keeps on staying in Lamar it will be because he's in jail. He can get a job in some advertising agency. It is all covered in an envelope which says:

> Will you please open this letter and read out earnest and hearty invitation to be our guests at the pretty little Lyric Theater next Saturday afternoon. We enclose complimentary ticket.

Mr. Pinch writes:

> The wife and I just dropped in here to fill a Lyceum date and bought the Lyric. In sixteen months my four predecessors kissed hundreds of dollars good bye and it was costing the boys we bought it from about $60 to $80 a month to keep open. We got it at a small price and then changed the service from junk to good Mutual service and soon had the other houses calling for help. They turned to vaudeville and that made some trouble for us. This is a town of about 3,000 people and my matinees ran from $2.80 to $4. I tried the farmer ticket scheme on contract with the stores, the contracts running to August first. I charge them seventy-five cents a week or three dollars a month. I had eight the first week, now have twelve and expect more. As it also helps the cash business I look on it as velvet. I have a fine little house and am letting the other fellows do the crying.

Photo Wanted.

Will the Crystal Theater, Texarkana, Texas, please send us another postcard of the front posted for From the Manager to the Cross, and send it in such a shape that it will come uncreased. We would like to use the picture of this display, but it came in badly creased. A photomailer should be used.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by Epes Winthrop Sargent

A Fifteen Dollar Pull.

WE are rather surprised to see Henry Albert Phillips, for whose book, "The Plot of the Short Story" we have great regard, embark on a correspondence school scheme with a booklet that is as lurid and as misleading as the advertising of the older schools. One statement for example says:

> This is the sort of thing I learned. That one popular company which may be holding a script of yours today—possibly will have it next year—is behind in its reading just 5000 scripts! Yet if your name and work were numbered among a certain few it would receive consideration the day of its receipt, and mind you, not merely a reading, but an eager consideration with more than half a desire to buy.

We would like to know where Mr. Phillips obtained this interesting information. We thought we knew a lot about studios, but we never heard of one that ran behind to the extent of holding 5000 scripts. All of this, of course, leads to his last proposition that:

> My affiliations mean a steady market for my student's productions. I mean to make "discoveries" both among my students and their photoplays. Already with this in mind I have made arrangements that will bring meritorious scripts and promising students in direct touch with the powers that be.

And all of this is offered for only fifteen dollars. In view of Mr. Phillips affiliation with the Motion Picture Story Magazine, we would not be surprised to learn that the "powers that be," in this case, was the Clearing House, conducted by that magazine, but whether the clearing house or not, we fail to see how Mr. Phillips can deliver the goods promised in the following paragraph:

> This means that I shall have on my desk a weekly report of the particular needs of good paying producing companies and shall daily receive inquiries for special needs that arise in every studio for certain types of photoplays.

This statement seems to be no more correct than the other statement that "More than twenty-five new photoplays are put on every day." We are open to conviction but the Licensed end releases six or seven each day, while the Independent releases seldom exceed six a day and sometimes run but four. This at best gives thirteen releases and perhaps fifteen titles. Mr. Phillips is too optimistic, but what can be expected of a man who declares that he is confident to state from his personal knowledge that scarcely a hundred authors are doing their work in the right way and adds: "There is room for ten thousand, yes, and more."

Ten thousand writers, twenty-five scripts a day! Does the line form on the right or left? Take your turn, please, and no crowding.

We have a high regard for Mr. Phillips as a plot analyst, but as a photoplay teacher we think he claims far too much in offering a personal pull for fifteen dollars.

We Will Try and Explain.

A brutally frank person down in Texas wants to know what we think of a couple of our stories. He states that he has had stories returned by companies with the statement that the plot was too slight or that it lacked comedy. He says they were written "as tersely as was wise." He adds: "The author has about four pages on which to write the action of a thirty-five scene scenario and to hit even the high points he has a lot of figuring to do and cannot possibly include all of the details of comedy." Then comes the cruel blow. He says:

> I might mention one or two of your own stories to show you that I am partly right, at least. I do not mean to discredit your ability when I call your attention to your "Sunshine Sue" and "Collecting the Bill," but to ask you if you really believe that there is much of a plot in either of them. These two stories could have been almost turned into almost a tragedy and without the slightest trace of comedy if the director had have wanted to produce it that way, or if the company had not have been capable of handling comedies. Do you think that I am right?

The correspondent mentions two stories that have been pleasantly commented upon by the critics and which seem to have made a laughing hit. Neither story had much plot. "Sunshine Sue" was the story of a grouchy office ——— that began to smile when Sue came into the place. "Collecting the Bill" was the story of a girl typist who collected an account from a grouch through feminine wiles when masculine force had failed to accomplish the purpose. We are willing to admit that the stories lacked strong plots, indeed "Sunshine Sue" can boast of little or not plot, but we'll be banged if we will admit that either story would have made a good tragedy without alteration.

It is not possible to put a finger on any specific line in the long letter that distinctly asks how it was we came to sell such stuff when his own superior product doesn't sell. but the whole tenor of the letter is one of inquiry and we are going to answer the unasked question.

In the first place we did not even write four pages of script for either of these stories. We have not the carbons at hand and cannot give exact lengths, but it is seldom indeed that we turn the third page on a half-reel story and we did not even do any figuring to get the high points into such narrow compass. We sat down and wrote them off and mailed them and in the course of time they were made and released. We gave the director all he needed to have in the way of comedy business and let it go at that. That w did our share of the work seems to be shown by the fact that sticking to these scripts, the director, who is Arthur D. Hotaling, by the way, made successful stories.

But the reason these scripts sold is not that they were so infinitely superior to all other comedy scripts. They sold because the full story was presented in such a form that Mr. Hotaling could take the script and make it. He did not have to lay his company off for a couple of days while he wrestled with some good idea poorly displayed. All that there was to the script was right there on the paper ready to be made from that script.

"His Widow" seems to have been pleasantly received by the papers and the public. It was put in work the day we left Jacksonville, last winter, after a brief visit to the studio. The night before, Mr. Hotaling came into the room after we had turned in and wanted to know if the widow required real widow's weeds. We waked up sufficiently to explain that in our opinion a maiden lady, widowed on the spur of the moment, would not have crepe in the house. Then we went to sleep again. The next morning the picture was started, the outside scenes being made while the stage settings were being prepared. Had it been necessary to get the crepe, some other story would have been taken up in the wait.

That's why we can sell scripts. We offer a reasonably sufficient idea displayed in such a form that the director can make it from our script. We do not try to get a two-reel idea into a half-reel script, but we do try to make it possible for the director to put in plenty of comedy and we write two to four line scenes so tersely that the director can get the idea and work it out as his surroundings and his people best permit.

Many writers on photoplay subjects profess a fine indifference to the form in which a story is written. They argue that the idea is the thing and that the technical form is unimportant, but we have found that the good idea properly displayed is ten times as likely to sell as the splendid idea that may require a day to straighten out. That's why "Collecting the Bill" sold and our correspondent's stories didn't. We are sending out the same sort of script that an editor or director would write. We are writing stuff that sells and not the sort of stuff we think ought to sell. It is practical, complete, comprehensive and not too costly.

That's why we preach technique of form and technique of plot development. It sells scripts.

Just Think.

We are indebted to a correspondent for a clipping from the Mattoon, (Ill.) Commercial-Star which writes up a local genius who six months ago knew nothing of photoplay writing but who now writes a story a day and has put in a stenographer that she may write two or three a day. Just read this extract:

> Encouraged by her first successes, Mrs. Moore has kept a steady stream of copy on the way to various managers. They have been accepted, more than forty going to one company. Mrs. Moore has been forced to employ a stenographer because the increasing volume of work. She says she means to make Mattoon the home of "Motion Picture Script That Takes."
> "I am writing a play a day," Mrs. Moore said, when seen last night in the library of her home, "and now that I have aid I hope to be able to increase my output to two or three.
> "How did I begin writing script?" Mrs. Moore smiled, "Well I just started, that's all I am able to say. I take an idea and develop it until I have worked out a scenario. I find the work easy and enjoy it. The field is unlimited and the companies are demanding material. Persons able to furnish first class copy have the opportunity of their lives for the producers are unable to keep pace with the demand of the public for new plays."

We don't happen to have that much money, but we would like to contribute to form a syndicate to bet a million dollars that either the reporter or the gifted authoress is not holding strictly to the truth, We might venture half a million on a side bet that the article was more or less inspired by the correspondence schools. Most assuredly the statements in the paragraphs noted are as unreliable as the announcements of these schools.

Holds a Record.

Mattoon, Ill., seems to be out for the photoplay record.' A Mrs. Lulu E. Moore announces in a local paper that she has been writing and selling a story a day and has put on a stenographer so that she can write two or three a day. Another author sends in this inquiry:

> Will you please tell me why it is I bought Technique of Photo Play look it through and studyed it throughly have written 175 plays started 6 months ago some of the scripts are keep as long as 6 and 7 weeks and returned some say the ideas are excellent, but unavable to them some say they are made up in proper form but cant use them now what do you think is trouble? Please advise me who is buying Westerns. And where I Join a script circle? mabe I could learn there the trouble with scripts I am a reader of your Moving Picture World every week Thanking you in advance for ans.

In the first place the letter is so badly written and spelled as to suggest a lack of education that does not argue for the trained intellect that is necessary to the invention of original ideas and their proper transcription on paper. In the second place 175 scripts in six months is too much. Not even the trained writer can work at that speed. We thought we were doing very nicely when we wrote from three to five a week after long training, but it stands to reason that the novice cannot turn out, in presentable form, what is practically a script a day. It is better to write one good script a month and sell it than to turn out thirty that are not salable because of hasty and careless development.

Writing photoplays is not a thing to be learned overnight. It is a thing to be studied carefully and painstakingly and a copy of Technique of the Photoplay is helpful only where the student can study it understandingly.

The probabilities are that this correspondent is turning everything she can think of into a protoplay and sending them around. She is sending them out in proper form as far as the bare arrangement of the idea into scenes is concerned, but this is the smallest part of the matter. The scenes must be properly arranged to tell the story properly and forcefully, and this can be properly done only after study and deliberation. We think our inquirer would do well to abandon the work for which she seems to be so little suited, but if she does want to continue, we would advise taking the best of those 175 plays—say five of them—and working over them until they have something more than the semblance of photoplays. Ten hours work on one script at the start will do more good than an hour's work on each of ten hurriedly written scripts.

Numbering the Scenes.

Someone asked the other day why we advise numbering the scenes at the side of the sheet instead of in the center. He contended that many crack writers number the scenes in the center of the page and in Roman instead of Arabic numerals. We explained that we did it to make it easier for the director. Most directors know what XVIII is, but 18 is the more common form and more quickly grasped. The Roman numeration is all right in marking the chapters of books, but the director wants to pick up the number quickly when he is working, and if the numerals are at the left hand side in the margin he can catch them much more quickly and at the same time in Arabic he does not have to pause a moment to get the difference between XVII and XVIII. There are several ways of starting and numbering a scene, all of which are good and largely a matter of choice. We give several styles:

1. John's home—John sits smoking—Mary enters—John tries to conceal cigar—puts it in pocket—Mary Smells smoke—takes cigar from John—throws out of window.
   Leader—Unable to smoke in the house, John seeks the park.
2. Park—bench close to camera—John enters—lights cigar—smokes.

This is the scheme we follow, allowing an indentation of five spaces at the left in addition to the natural margin and keeping this clear for scene numbers, leaders and inserts. Another style gives this:

1. John's home.
   John sits smoking—Mary enters—John tries to conceal his cigar —puts in pocket—Mary smells smoke—takes cigar from John—throws out of window.
   Leader—Unable to smoke in the house, John seeks the park.
2. Park—bench close to camera.
   John enters—lights cigar—smokes.

This gives slightly more prominence to the scene, but it also adds as many lines to the script as there are scenes. Lawrence S. McCloskey uses this form.

1 John's home—John sits smoking—Mary enters—John tries to conceal the cigar—Puts in pocket—Mary smells smoke—takes cigar from John—throws from window.
  Leader—Unable to smoke in the house, John seeks the park.
2. Park—bench close to camera—John enters—lights cigar—smokes.

In Mr. McCloskey's form the scene is underlined, the underline starting from the number. Leaders and inserts start at the five indentation, the rest being indented ten spaces. We think that our own form with the scene underlined gives sufficient prominence to the scene. Any of these ways is to be preferred for clearness to.

I

John's home.

John smoking—Mary enters—he tries to conceal his cigar—puts in pocket—Mary smells smoke—takes cigar from John—throws out of window.
LEADER—Unable to smoke in the house, John seeks the park.

II

Park—bench near camera.

John enters—lights cigar—smokes.

Practically all studio writers number at the side because they know that the directors like the side numbers. Since it is no more difficult than the middle numbering, why not do it right?

Plain Silly.

We have said that you can get in touch with the photoplay editor if he likes your stuff and your letters are the right sort, but we are indebted to William Wright, of the Kalem company, for a splendid example of how not to do it. It was addressed to the manager of the Kalem company, and so went to Mr. Wright, instead of to the photoplay department. It is hand written in ink on a sheet of paper from which the business head has been cut, leaving a bob-tailed sheet which is of no regulation size. The top is ornamented with a picture of a daschund-dragon on whose curved back several tiny automobiles disport themselves. Under the letter is a sketch of a demijohn with a snake in the neck, and a comic paper Irishman, with a doggerel verse that the writer probably thought was appropriate to St. Patrick's Day. The text runs:

> I asked you once in plain French and once on my bended knuckles if you would please be so kind as to crack the ice and let me be the biggest star in de woild for the Kalem company, and you didn't even let me know if the wind was blowing west or south. If you don't add this freak you will never keep the kale in Kalem, so get busy and let me know if Easter Sunday falls on Monday or not.
> P. S.—What kind of tobacco does Alice Joyce chew?

The way to get next a company is to make good. It cannot be done by showing how crazy you are, nor yet through impertinence.

Like the Hornet.

Make your scripts like the hornet. Put the stinger in the tail. Do not use up your climax before you are half way through the action. Hold it back for the finish of the story where it belongs. We saw today a story that read first rate up to the last seventy-five feet and then it dropped from fast comedy into a cute little love scene that, coming after the faster action, was deadly dull. Pattern after the hornet style of script and put the stinger in the tail. Don't write a snake story and have all the trouble in the front.

The Visual Fact.

If you read in the paper that a man was killed at the corner of Main and Broad streets, it does not make one tenth the impression upon you that witnessing the fact would have done. The one you have seen, the other you have merely read about. Bear this in mind when you write your script and make your facts visual that they may impress more strongly.

Even where you have something that must be told in a leader, you will do well to emphasize that with a short scene, though the scene itself may be absolutely meaningless without the leader.

Suppose that you write that "Ten years later. Elsie has married Jim," and start right in, with this fact established, to show that Tom comes to tempt her. The audience may know that this is Tom and that she is married to Jim, but a five or ten foot scene showing Jim kissing Elsie good bye before he starts to work, will drive home the fact in the leader far better than "Ten years later. Elsie is married to Jim. Tom seeks to tempt her to elope," and the latter part of the leader will take as much film as a short scene.

Too many writers trust to the scene without leader, but the man who uses leader and then drives home the fact with a scene is getting the story over in the best possible way.

Inquiries.

NOTE—No questions can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of addresses to which photoplays may be sent will be mailed on receipt of a STAMPED AND ADDRESSED ENVELOPE.

RUBENA.—Miss Gertrude Bambrick was Bessie in "Frappe Love." You can search us for Eureka. Not guilty, honest.

P. L. W.—Frank Dayton was Daddy Welch in "The Return of Becky."

M. M.—Yale Boss appears in "Newcombe's Necktie," released May 28. He does not appear in the Decoration Day release, which is the release of May 27. Write the advertising department of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., Orange, N. J., for photograph. We do not know about Miss Buckley. Mr. Cruze is with Thanhouser.

COPE—In "The Bred of the West," Tom was Carl von Schiller, Helen, Miss Dolly Larkin, and Jim was Joseph Holland. Crane Wilbur is a charter member of the Screen Club.

E. V. P.—Send a stamped and addressed envelope and we will give you the first address. We cannot supply the second.

W. R. B.—A curse lie upon the parcels post! You are wrong. A blue pencil is not a copying pencil. Shoot over the questions.

CORRECTION—Elmer L. Morrow, and not S. Clifford Smith, played Lane in "The Lure of the Violin," and Bob Worth in "The Struggle." The K. B. Identifier will please take notice.

J. S. N.—In "Human Kindness," Miss Pauline Bush was the girl next door and Miss Jessalyn van Trump the other one.

R. L. M.—Both Mutual and General Film, and probably Universal, exchanges have stories played in blackface, or by real negroes. If you are interested, wait for some coming Lubins. There are four or five comedies coming along played largely or entirely by negroes.

MRS.. G. V.—Your stories would not interest any film company. They do not purchase foreign costume plays, and the second would be more costly than the sketch seems to warrant. Better save your stamps. If you want to sell scripts, write what the manufacturers want, and not what you want to write. We know of no company, other than Keystone, that considers synopses alone.

E. H. O.—Miss Cassinelli has been with Essanay two or three years. We do not recall the paragraph you mention.

C. H. M.—There is only one real answer to your question. Do not write a script with six successive scenes in the same set. If you do you will not be likely to sell it. But you have not six scenes in one set. You have six scenes along different parts of the same trail. You mark these, first: 6—Trail; 7—Another part of trail; 8—Another part of trail, etc. But remember that you do not have to show every foot of the trail. A couple of trail scenes should be sufficient. One scene is one particular part. It would not include the entire trail, but only so much of the trail as the camera can take in at one time.

L. J. M.—We have no line on Pilot regarding the time they hold a script, but they are good business otherwise. Better drop them a line and ask if they ever received the script. We have been advised that the rubber stamp has been abolished. It was due to the newness of the department. You are apt to learn more from rejections than from acceptances. If your stuff barely scraped through, you would keep on writing mediocre stuff, but rejection spurs you to further and more painstaking effort. Try to make your stories more original without getting so original that they are unbelievable.

M. F. M.—There seems to be no rule as to the number of words it is permissible to use in the synopsis of a two or three part story, but you can get a three-part story into 250 words as easily as you can the one part. Remember you do not have to describe every minute detail in the synopses. It is sufficient to give a general idea of the story. If you'll keep that fact in mind, you may not even need the full 250 words, let alone more. At the same time, if you need three or four hundred words to get the story over, it would be better to use them until you learn to condense.

LOIS—There's no use making rules and then breaking them. Glad you understand. The Biograph Identifier has not located the player you want, but is trying. It could not have been Miss Handworth, who was four thousand miles from the Biograph studio this winter.

J. O'B.—We do not know of any company that will accept a half-reel Indian drama. Selig does not make Indian dramas of any sort. Send your story to some company that does make them, and it is probable that your supposed half-reel drama is a full reel.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON

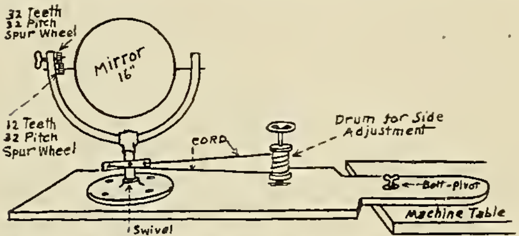
President Shay's Address.

It seems that in setting forth the letter from International President Shay, page 375, April 26th issue, brother Shay's address was not given for which several correspondents have roasted me. Apologies, brothers. The address is Charles E. Shay, Room 605, Gaiety Theater Building, 1547 Broadway, New York City.

That Sunlight Projector.

On page 276, April 19th issue, Mr. C. R. Stewart gave a partial description of his method of projecting moving pictures by means of sunlight. I asked for further information and it is at hand as follows:

> The cross bar is held in place with bolt and wing nut passing through an upright IX, 1-inch piece of brass, which is slotted part way to receive it. This brass piece has a swivel joint at the bottom where it connects with the base plate, and is worked by cords attached to a cross piece, as shown. By turning the drum, the mirror is adjusted as indicated in the sketch—that is, its support is given circular motion; while by turning the pinion gears, it is tilted either way. When I first tried it out, I had a 10 x 14 mirror, instead of a round one. This gave an oblong spot and cut the corners on the aperture. I have four adjustments, but only use two. With them, however, I can follow Mr. Sun any place unless he is gone to his southern home for the winter and gets directly back of the looking glass. I then put another mirror on upright rods on the back of the machine table, a little higher than the round mirror, and reflect the rays from that to the round glass and thence to the machine. I hope this will make everything clear. Before closing, I want to compliment you on the new handbook. It is great, as to its contents; also the bookbinder certainly knew his buisness since you do not have to look for the place you left off if you happen to lay it down.



Bolted on the back of machine table and sets out of window from pivot bolt. Center of mirror in line with reading lamp.

This, Brother Stewart, is all plain enough, but that mirror would have to be slightly concave it strikes me, since you certainly could not do anything with a flat mirror. Given a concave mirror, with an accurately, evenly ground surface, I see no reason why your scheme would not work out all right, though the machine would have to face the east or south for morning projection and the west or south for evening projection, unless you use an auxiliary mirror which would mean a considerable weakening of the light. When I say that the thing would work, I do not wish to be understood as saying it is practical for practical projection in a moving picture theater, though I do believe possibly even that might be done by means of some such apparatus as this in states like Arizona, Colorado and New Mexico, where the sunshine is practically constant every day.

Friend May Is Here Again.

Mr. J. T. May, Atchinson, Kansas, writes:

> I have perfected a motor-drive attachment for the Edison machine. It applies the power to large crank gear 19,068, Fig. 102, page 230 of the handbook. It drives directly on the gear and the belt pulley does not frame with the machine. All wearing parts are standard Edison gears, which can be bought at any exchange. I shall apply for a patent and then send a working model for your examination and approval or disapproval. Now for my customary kick: Why are nearly all licensed films badly blurred? This trouble has been noticed in nearly every film received from the Kansas City exchange during the past two weeks. We run twenty-day service and the same old complaints which were so noticeable at Oklahoma City are to be found here, too. I know the out-of-focus effect is not in the machine, since the Pathe, and one or two other films were perfect. My boss is getting red-headed about it and blames it on me. I have joined Kansas City Local 170. All the boys are first rate fellows and we have a good union.

As to the motor-drive, Brother May, while you may have an excellent device, I would think twice if I were you before going to the expense of a patent. It might pay you, but I doubt it. By the time you figure up the expense of advertising and introducing such a device; particularly if it is only adapted for use on one make of machine, I am afraid you will come out at the little end of the horn. As to the films, I have sent your letter to the General Film Company, with a suggestion that they look into the matter and see what can be done, at least as to the oil and dirt on the films of their Kansas City Exchange. I think it must be the oil that is causing the out-of-focus effect, as no other complaint of this kind have reached me lately concerning licensed films.

Edison Titles and Other Things.

Mr. M. B. Watson, Sedalia, Missouri, says:

> I see you ask for information regarding the sub-titles of Edison films making more noise than the body of the film. I have noticed this several times myself, and so has my manager. I would like also to say that the photography of some of the Essanay and Edison films is so dense that there is difficulty in getting good light through it.

I have referred this matter to the Edison Company for investigation. As to the photography, possibly you are trying to get light through these films without using light of sufficient strength. Some of the Edison and Essanay photography is rather dense, but some of it is intended to be that way and produces a highly artistic effect. You will probably notice that the whites in these films are clear, brilliant and white—just as they should be. As to your complaint concerning non-receipt of handbook, I will look into the matter immediately. The Edison Co. says same stock and perforator is used for sub-titles and body of film, therefore there ought to be no difference in their running.

Charles E. Schneider's Supply House.

Above is a picture of the showroom of Charles E. Schneider's Supply House, Springfield, Mass. Mr. Schneider requests me to say that he is the distributor for Power's Cameragraph for that section of the country. Friend Schneider began the supply business in a very small way. He saw an opening in Springfield, and, while holding down a position as operator, took up the supply business as a side line. Through careful attention to business, coupled with square dealing, he finally reached a point where the operating end of it could be dispensed with. He has now moved into new, commodious quarters at No. 257 Main Street, and devotes his entire attention to the sales of moving picture supplies and to the repairing of projection mechanisms. Brother Schneider is a member of Springfield Operators' Union No. 186, I. A. T. S. E. He is to be seen seated at the second desk, apparently reading a letter from a customer. From the pleased expression on his countenance, we should say the aforesaid customer is ordering at least $2,964.95 worth of goods, cash with the order.

Globe Coloring.

Mr. M. Osborn, Kingsville, Texas., wants a formula for coloring incandescent globes that will not wash off. Brother Osborn will find this formula set forth on page 416 of the Handbook. If he has not a copy of that book, I would advise him to remit $2.50 to The Moving Picture World and obtain one.

Pre-Convention Discussion.

Brother W. G. Woods, President San Francisco Theatrical Federation, and for five years President of San Francisco Local Union 162 (M. P. Operators), sends the following:

> I note your suggestion, May 3rd issue, that locals sending delegates to the coming convention and proposing to introduce legislation for their own benefit and the benefit of the craft in general, should submit same for publication and discussion, in order that other locals might be in a position to indorse understandingly or reject these proposed laws, and so instruct their delegates. I heartily approve of your suggestion, believing such a course to be not only advisable, but necessary, if any concerted action is to be had. It may be difficult to thus secure unity of action on many of the proposed laws, as each local's opinion will no doubt be, to some extent, swayed by conditions in its own locality, while other propositions may meet with the approval of the operators and the disapproval of the Stage Mechanics, or vice-versa. But I believe there is at least one common cause upon which ALL must unite, the building up of a more perfect organization. Without going into details concerning the mass of figures I have before me, I believe the operators to be not more than 20 per cent. organized, if they are that. As regards stage mechanics, I am not in a position to speak authoritatively, but was much surprised to learn that their percentage was not larger than it is. I believe the appeal President Shay made at the last convention for better organization, was largely brought about by his great New Orleans fight, which ended in glorious victory, where one of the hardest things he had to contend with was the supply of more or less experienced non-union stage mechanics from adjacent, unorganized cities.
> President Shay said in part:
>
> > "The experience met with by your general executive officers during the past year—particularly my own—has proven to me, without any question of a doubt, that if we wish to protect the interests of the locals we now have in affiliation, and increase the power we possess, we must put competent, active organizers in the field. —We must break away from the idea of expecting those cities to come to us—and I warn you now that those cities we allow to remain unorganized are nothing more or less than schools for the education of men to take our places in time of trouble, and if we neglect them we are simply inviting our own ultimate destruction," etc., etc.
> With such words, coming from one who knew whereof he spoke, ringing in their ears, what did the convention do? Answer: Raised the per capita tax and—promptly forgot the whole matter; a mistake amounting to a crime, and one which must not be again committed, if we expect to preserve our organization. I say this for the reason that if we continue to neglect the organization of our own craft, other internationals are likely to be more wide awake and do it for us (for themselves, more likely. Ed.), to our everlasting sorrow and disgrace. How best to accomplish this work of organization should be at once taken up by every local in the organization, and some plan be discussed and settled upon, so that concerted action may be had at the convention, and thus real progress be made. And, believing this discussion to be vital to the interests of the organization; also that we have nothing to be ashamed of, or any dark, deadly secrets to hide, why should we not avail ourselves of the medium offered, the Projection Department, and therein set forth our various views? Thus every local in the entire organization will have the opportunity, without one cent of expense to either the international or the union, to acquaint itself with the various plans, discuss them and, selecting that which seems to offer most promise, instruct its delegate to the convention to vote and work for it.
> And now permit me to offer a few suggestions which may be found worthy of discussion by the brothers: (A) Eliminate the 1914 convention, thus saving more than $35,000 to the locals and international, and, in its place, call a meeting of the General Executive Board, which can settle small matters, while large ones can be submitted to the membership for referendum vote. The adoption of this plan would call for the election of our officers for a two-year term, or else an election by referendum in the off year. (B) Dispense with four or five of our present nine Vice-Presidents, not that they have not been necessary in the past, or that their work has not been faithfully performed, nor yet that they have not done more than they were paid for, but solely for the reason that the money can better be expended in helping to place active organizers constantly in the field, at full pay. Organizers will not only bring better results in the way of increased numerical strength, but also more than return their cost in added revenue. These organizers should be four or five in number and should be paid not less than $1,800 per year, with reasonably ample expense money, and should be appointed by President Shay (I say Shay, believing that his work during the past two years has been of such value to us that we would be worse than foolish to retire him—provided he will consent to serve again) rather than elected. I name $1,800 as salary because men competent to successfully perform such work can readily command that salary, without experiencing the discomforts of road work. I say they should be appointed, rather than elected, because, if the latter, the positions are apt to be filled with "good fellows," whose only qualification for the job is the fact that they are personally popular enough to scratch up enough votes from unthinking men to secure the job.
> A debit and credit account should be kept with each organizer and his work should be closely checked, both as to financial returns and the general effect of his work.

Brother Woods then goes on to explain, at length, his views as to how the organizers ought to be handled, and to give figures and facts proving that they would actually not cost the organization a single penny, in that revenues would be increased as a direct result of their work, more than the entire expense would amount to. But inasmuch as to set forth his argument, excellent as it is, in full, would occupy much space, and inasmuch as I do not believe any thinking man will seriously dispute the proposition that organizers are sadly needed, or that their work would return full value to the organization, I think I will ask Brother Woods to pardon me If I do not print the entire letter. He says, however, that "four organizers in the field for an entire year would cost, in round numbers, $14,000, from which should be deducted $4,000 saved in salary of the four Vice-Presidents dispensed with, whose places would be filled by the organizers." He further says: "I find from the quarterly reports of the Secretary, without going into details, that the end of the present year should see an increase of about 1,600 members, with an increase in income, counting charter fees, of about $4,200 for the year. This is a voluntary, practically unassisted increase, and it is inconceivable to think that it would not be many times greater with the aid of competent organizers in the field."

Right, brother, but in your calculations you fail to take into account the saving of approximately $40,000 if the next convention be dispensed with. By substituting the bi-annual for the annual convention we will lose absolutely nothing in effectiveness, and need not worry over revenue with which to keep four, or even five organizers in the field. I heartily indorse brother Woods' views and would like to see this matter discussed freely. It is of paramount importance, but in order to handle so large a matter the delegates simply must study and discuss the ins and outs of it beforehand.

From Hagerstown, Maryland.

Mr. Norman Taschmare, Hagerstown, Maryland, gives news of his city as follows:

> We have three show houses here, two picture and one picture and vaudeville. One house employs anybody who can thread a machine and feed the lamp, to operate. I presume you can imagine what kind of a show they have. We run four eleven-day reels, and I think the brother in Harrisburg uses them next. Guess he finds them in good condition, which is more than I do when they reach me. Sometimes they are torn in two places but not patched, which requires stopping the machine to thread again. Brother Dalrymple's idea, published recently, is good. I want, before closing, to say a good word for the Power's Six A, as well as for its simple little motor-drive attachment. If Brother Fowler, of Ohio, will explain more definitely as to his Six A jump, perhaps I can help him.

It is a strange thing that your manager will stand for the exchange sending you reels in such condition, and it is queer that an exchange will think little enough of its own reputation to send out reels which evidently have not been inspected at all. That particular exchange evidently needs stirring up with a prod-pole. I wish I knew what one it is so I could name it.

As to the Handbook.

Mr. Joe Sher, Hibbing, Minnesota, writes:

> I believe your handbook is beyond praise, therefore will not try to tell you how good it is. I not only read it through once when I got it, but keep on reading it, for I could not get along without it. In my opinion, an operator without the handbook and the Moving Picture World, is like a steam-engine without steam. Also, if all managers would wake up for once and get themselves a handbook, there would soon be better projection all over the country, and no more ushers cutting good men out of jobs; for the simple reason that they, the managers, would know what constitutes a good picture and want nothing but the best. And now for a question: would a half-size lens give a better and clearer picture than a quarter size? We project a 14-foot picture at 84 feet. Is there any way by which the picture could be reduced by about two feet, without getting a new lens?

We appreciate your kind words as regards the book, Neighbor Sher. Naturally we are not going to fight with you on that subject. As to the lens, you could reduce the size of the picture two feet by having a ring made to move the lens combinations farther apart, but the chances are a hundred to one that you would not get a sharp picture with the lens thus remodeled. The best and only scheme is to get a new lens. Probably your exchange would swap lenses with you on a payment of a small bonus. As to the half-size, I do not think you would find much of any improvement, and if you are using an outside shutter machine you might have trouble with travel ghost with the half-size lens.

Stereopticon Flood.

Mr. H. K. Nowlan, Hinton, West Virginia, says:

> In April 26th issue you say you cannot use the stereopticon as a flood. However, I use it to cover an extra large stage with a very short throw as follows: I remove the objective, and run the crater back as far as possible. What is the joke on us all in May 3rd issue? I have a peculiar little trouble of my own. About every four revolutions of the crank there is a come-and-go effect, which only acts on distant objects. I have asked a number of persons if they can notice it and they say they cannot. But just the same it worries me.

As to the stereopticon proposition, I have expressed my views. You get a flood on the back focus of the condenser that way, but it certainly cannot be a very good one. The joke consists in the fact that not only is the lamp connected in the wrong place, but the economizer is connected the same as a rheostat. With an economizer, neither line connects direct to the lamp, but both pass through the economizer. As to the come-and-go effect, I cannot say what it is, unless your film is buckling slightly as it passes over the aperture. But that ought to affect all objects in the center of the picture.

Handbook Errors.

Mr. Chauncey Coleman, of Local 150, I. A. T. S. E., Long Beach, California, says:

> The second edition of your Handbook is a work of great merit. I wish to thank you personally for the information I have secured therefrom.

Brother Coleman then points out a number of minor errors in the book, some of which have already been noted in the department.

We wish to thank him for his kindness, as well as for his appreciation of our work, and to assure him that the errors have been made note of.

Setting the Shutter.

Alfred Fowler, Alliance, Ohio, writes:

> I had a little trouble a month or two ago and I want you to tell me how a machine will cut a film like attached sample. I examined the machine thoroughly and cannot find out what did it. My idlers are not riding on the sprockets at all. I have a method of setting the shutter which is very satisfactory. Thread the machine and frame the picture, then turn the fly-wheel until the dividing line of the picture is exactly half way across the aperture. Now, set the shutter so that the center of its main blade is exactly half way across the lens.

As to the film cutting, it is hard to say what would do it. The cut occurs a little inside the center of the sprocket holes. Some of the uncut sprocket holes show a sharp scratch mark across and some do not. It looks as if there was a very thin knife-edge somewhere, slitting the sprocket holes. The first place I would look would be in the fire traps of the magazines. Such things are sometimes very difficult to locate. Your shutter setting scheme is O. K. with an inside shutter. It can be used with outside shutter also, of course, but the method given in the Handbook is better.

His Medicine and Food.

Samuel McBride, New York City, writes:

> I am not a moving picture operator, but I am nevertheless a constant reader of the department, which forms part of my medicine and food every week. When in trouble, we all deem it wise to consult the editor of the department. Now my whole trouble is I want to make a transparent screen for a street Cinematograph show and I do not know how to accomplish it. Can you make any suggestions, or inform me where I can purchase such a screen? I have everything else planned out for a street motion picture peep-show. The transparent screen is my only difficulty. I have the new Handbook and have had it ever since it came out.

Then, my dear boy, what are you asking these questions for? If you will turn to page 342 you will see how a transparent screen can be made. You will also see that the mirror screen people can supply you with a transparent ground-glass screen. The ground glass screen is the best there is in transparent screens. Address the Mirror Screen Company, Frank J. Rembush President, Shelbyville, Indiana.

Wants to Join.

Pennsylvania asks for instructions how to join the operators' union. I would advise Pennsylvania to communicate with Mr. Charles Shay, whose address is at the head of this week's department.

From New Zealand.

Mr. E. Miles Lamuel, Wellington, New Zealand writes:

> I am not an operator, nor am I connected in any way with the picture business, but I trust I will not prove the less welcome to the department, every word of which I read each week. I have a question to ask: Why is it that an ordinary black and white film projected upon the screen will often show a colored rainbow in spray or falling water? Projection in New Zealand is fair, but conditions in most of the operating rooms would shock you. I was in one the other evening in which there were no spool boxes (magazines—Ed.) in use on the projection machine, the take-up, motor driven, being on the floor underneath the operating table, the film therefore being exposed for its whole length to any chance spark or other means of ignition. This was in an up-to-date theater. Upon my speaking to the manager about it, he said: "Oh, the operators like it that way." Nothing doing for them in the States I guess. In New Zealand there is no test or examination to pass in order to become an operator, with the result that, in many cases, an operator knows next to nothing about his business. Have a copy of your new Handbook which I am greatly enjoying. You are to be congratulated in the avoidance of too technical writing, thereby making the book of as great interest to the outsider as to the manager or operator, for whom the work is intended.

You are welcome to the department, neighbor Lamuel, and I am sure the description of operating room conditions in New Zealand will be interesting to our readers. There can be no colored rainbow effect shown in a black and white film. The colors you see must be due to fault in the carbon setting. Where alternating current is used there is frequently a rainbow effect on the screen, but this ought to show in any light scene as well as on a spray or waterfall. Of course, it is always quite possible that there will be a rainbow effect in a water fall, or anywhere else that there is sunlight and a spray of water, but this would not be reproduced on screen in color. The conditions your describe are very, very bad indeed. No doubt the New Zealand managers will continue this kind of foolish procedure until there is a bad fire, and a lot of people are hurt in the resultant panic. Then the authorities will jump in and enact a lot of stringent laws, going to the other extreme, and causing the managers much useless expense. The managers will then put up a tremendous howl, but, the fact of the matter is, they are simply inviting that sort of thing, and sooner or later they will get it, too.

Correct.

Mr. Travas Rauch, New Orleans, Louisiana, sends the correct solution of the "Joke On Us All." I would like to have a letter from him, or some one else, setting forth conditions in New Orleans, as well as any other matters of general interest.

Some Kickers.

Mr. Frank B. Payne, Adrian, Michigan, writes:

> This is my first attempt to butt in on you. What is your opinion of the enclosed ad? This is a village of 10,000 people and has four shows. We all open from 1:30 to 4:30, and from 6:30 to 9:30. One house runs three reels and two single acts of vaudeville (vaudeville ?? you know the type). My manager says he would not book an act of such brush-lot burlesque if he were paid twenty dollars a night to do it. I, myself, think that such stuff certainly ruins the dignity of the house showing it. This is one of those towns where they want grand opera for five cents, and then kick if the added attraction is not a three-ring circus. We have a six day, three reel service, which insures a good, clean-cut show at all times. Inspectors were through here recently and told me that I had one of the finest equipped and safest operating rooms they had seen in a long time, which was, I thought, quite a compliment. Some of those who claim the best projection for the larger cities will do well to look around a little. I am in a comparatively small town, but if I could not put on my work any better than some I have seen in large cities, I would get a long-handled shovel and apply to the street commissioner for work. I know that some crank artists are only looking for quitting time and pay day, instead of for results on the screen. Yes, unfortunately, that is a fact which cannot be disputed. But here the people are educated to real pictures and we cannot hand them junk and rotten projection and get away with it. They go where good projection and rainless films rule, and the place that has neither of these, stands about as much show as the proverbial snow-ball in Gehenna. I project a 12 foot picture at 54 feet, using 40 amperes, 110 volt, a. c., through an old style Fort Wayne compensarc, which, however, delivers the goods. I have not had to touch my machine with a tool of any description, since setting it up last September. I just use the oil can and a clean rag, as is required, but my oil can does not produce a shower bath. I have been in the game since the two-bushel-sack-take-up days, which, I presume, you will remember; but I am still learning something every day. What do you think of a certain place here who paid a real sweet, young boy-child two dollars and fifty cents ($2.50) per week all winter, for operating a picture machine? I know this sounds fishy, but nevertheless it is true. What would be the penalty for this were you the judge?

I dunno, brother Payne, just what I would do to that gink, but I believe I would condemn him to work twelve hours a day for one year on a salary of bread and water, but I would limit the water. Maybe he would starve to death before the year was up, which would be well for all concerned. The advertisement you enclose is excellent. I thoroughly agree with you with regard to cheap vaudeville. I have often said that it is worse than nothing at all. The manager who cannot succeed without incorporating such junk in his bill is not likely to succeed to any large extent anyhow. No, brother Payne, that kind of stuff does not lower the dignity of the house. It kicks it out the alley door. Very likely, the people of Adrian demand excessive values in their amusement, for the very simple reason that the Adrian managers have educated them to do so and—there you are. No, the good projection is not all in the large cities—far from it.

Joining the Union.

Georgia writes as follows:

> Will you kindly publish the correct address of Mr. Charles C. Shay, International President of the I. A. T. S. E.? I am anxious to join a union but, as I am the only operator in this city, population 6,000, I am barred out, because I cannot overcome such rules as that requiring that I have three union men vouch for me and work the required time in another city, so that I can join. If I were in, say Atlanta, and had worked there a required time, I could join with absolutely no trouble, since, even though I say it myself, I am capable in every way, but am unfortunate in being situated as I am. Read up the rules and regulations of the I. A. T. S. E. and you will understand my position. It seems to me something could be done for operators thus situated, but we can do absolutely nothing to help ourselves. I gave it a thorough trial and, of course, failed. Can you not take our side in this matter and give the I. A. T. S. E. a blowing-up for such foolishness? Of course, such laws could be made to cover our cases. I am sure you would have the thanks of very many small town operators if, through your valuable department, you could help the cause of the "lame operator." I am sure you could help us in this matter. As to your Handbook—well, I simply could not do without it.

This matter has been dealt with in the department and I would prefer not to take it up again just now, since I think it would be taken care of by the coming convention. Most emphatically, if you are a competent operator, as you claim to be, and are able to prove yourself to be a man of good character, the organization ought to be able to take you in. There is no reason why you should be barred. There are, however, things to be said on both sides of questions of this kind, but inasmuch as both sides of the matter were pretty thoroughly discussed in this department (and by some they were cussed, without the dis), something like a year ago, I would not feel justified in taking it up again just now, particularly in view of the fact that I understand the convention will take action which will cover this matter in a satisfactory way. I have forwarded your letter to President Shay, whose address is at the head of the department this week.

Quo Vadis—Magnificent.

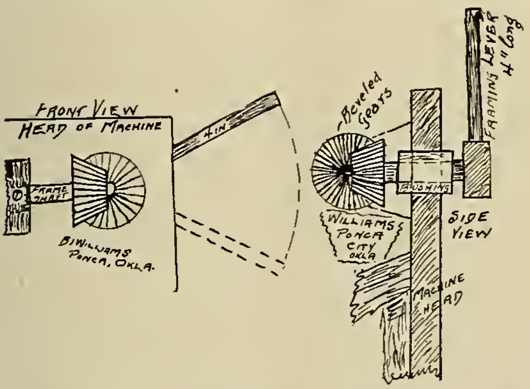
For the first time in all my connection with the moving picture business I have been able to sit through a lengthy moving picture production without finding anything to criticise, or at least the criticisms possible were of such trivial nature as to be practically of no value. Last week I attended the production of "Quo Vadis," at the Astor Theater, on Broadway, from 8:30 until 11 o'clock, with two short intermissions, corresponding to the usual waits between acts in a regular dramatic performance. I viewed the production, which did much to encourage my faith in the future of the moving picture as the permanent form of amusement. The production was put on by operators Thomas Walker and Charles H. Hathaway, both members of Branch No. 2, of Local Union 35, I. A. T. S. E. I take great pleasure in complimenting these gentlemen upon their performance. The light was white, brilliant and magnificently handled. The films were run at the proper speed and there was little or nothing to criticise in the projection. This is indeed a remarkable performance when one considers that it covers a space of two hours and a half, or more than two hours actual running. In all that time there was scarcely a perceptible flaw in the projection.

A Good Idea.

In many instances much trouble has been caused managers in inducing women to remove their hats. You will observe I said women. I use the term advisedly, because a lady would not think of doing anything else. Recently a ticket of the Astor Theater of New York City, came into my possession and I note on the back of it the following: "This ticket is sold with the understanding and agreement that if a lady uses same, she will remove her hat upon the request of any employee of the management." I see no reason why moving picture theater tickets should not be printed with this clause on the back. It ought not to cost much, if anything extra and certainly would be of value when a dispute arose, as they too often do. But I think it would tend to induce women to remove their headgear and thus eliminate the disputes. The idea seems to me to be a good one.

Changing the Edison Framer.

Brother Bertram Williams, Ponca City, Oklahoma, whom I called down, May 3rd issue, for sending in drawings done in colored ink, now submits sketches, in black, of the way he changed the framing lever of his Edison Exhibition Model. In May 3rd issue letter, my honorable stenographer must bear the blame for an error. Inasmuch as the framing lever is never 14 inches long, it could hardly be "reduced to 14 inches long." It should have read four inches, instead of fourteen. Apologies, brother Williams. The accompanying sketch is self-explanatory, and a framing lever thus placed would undoubtedly be convenient to the operator. We therefore thank brother Williams for contributing the idea.



He Lives to Learn.

Mr. H. F. Hawley, Vincennes, Indiana, writes:

> Have been studying the Handbook ever since it was received. Had a chance to sell it three or four times, but nothing doing. Thought I knew considerable about the moving picture business, but after studying that book I came to the conclusion I still have something to learn. I do not see how any operator can get along without it. I know if I were manager of a theater I would certainly see that my operator was supplied with one. We have just taken over another house here and are trying to put it in first class condition. Have installed a gold fibre screen and a new Power's Six-A machine. The operating room is 10 x 12, with a 12 foot ceiling, and has four 24 inch windows, opening to the air at the ceiling. It is lined with asbestos, but we intend to finish it off with iron and automatic shutters. Project a 16½ foot picture, with 60 amperes of 60 cycle current. Have had a lot of trouble here in the past three months. There is a comparatively small number of people who think we ought not to run on Sunday. We have had two trials but with no verdict. I have a charge against me for Sunday operating. Think my case will come up in the May term. And the funny part of it is, one of the ministers who is fighting us has had me run his machine for him on Sunday. One Sunday night, in particular, they had a break-down and sent for me. I left my show and went over and fixed their machine so they could run. Oh—well this is a funny world. We had quite a time here during the flood. Did not get a shipment from our exchange for over a week, but we ran some old junk there was in town and only lost one night, and that was on account of there being so much water in the boiler room that it put the fires out.

I think we will all have to remove our chapeaux and make a courtly bow to that preacher who is going to try to have you put in jail for operating a machine on Sunday evening, but who sends for you to operate his machine on Sunday and to make repairs on it so that he can run his show. Yep, brother Hawley, it is some queer world, all right. Please present my compliments to the gentleman and tell him, from me, to squat down in his armchair for one hour and fifteen minutes, just keep saving over and over "Consistency, thou art indeed a jewel." I have turned the newspapers you sent, over to the editoral department.

A Substitute for Limes.

Mr. C. E. Lindall, Norfolk, Virginia, contributes the following interesting letter:

> I am mailing you sample of Guil Pastil, the new substitute for limes when using oxy-hydrogen light. I have given it a thorough trial and find I can get fully one-third better light than with the old-fashioned limes, and my gas tanks, which used to serve for six nights, now serve for nine, or even more than that. Guil Pastil is not affected by dampness, and one will last as long as a whole box of limes. I have had two picture shows on the road for a long time, playing week stands. We have good music but no vaudeville. With the class of projection and feature films we give, we have no difficulty in getting fifteen and twenty-five cents admission in the small cities and towns we visit annually. In a town where we have never been before, we may encounter a little kicking about the price on Monday, our opening day, and that night the house might be light, but from then on there is no dissatisfaction about the admission fee, and Tuesday night's receipts show that they have the habit, which they keep for the entire week. With one company I used a dynamo, described in the department a little more than a year ago, and gas with the other in towns where we cannot get electricity. The dynamo gave great satisfaction but was a tremendous bother and expense in transportation. I find Guil Pastil to be such an excellent substitute for electricity that I am now using gas with both companies. This first lot which I imported I have already advertised in The Moving Picture World to sell at exact cost, viz., $1.00 each. I have, however, a larger consignment due early in June, on which I will get a discount, and in that way hope to be repaid for my trouble. The Pastil should be laid down flat instead of set upright, with the ends squarely facing the condenser. Use about two-thirds as much gas as usual, and turn it on very, very slowly, especially the oxygen; if not, small pieces of the pastil are liable to snap off. I have holders coming also. To use the ordinary lime cup, fill the cup about half full of iron washers in order to bring the Pastil near the top, and bend in two of the lips of the cup to form a holder for the Pastil. Just a little ingenuity is essential to turn these tricks. No turning or adjustment of any kind is necessary during the show, but rub the end of the Pastil lightly with sandpaper before using again.

I have not received the Pastil yet, brother Lindall, but when I do I intend to put it in the hands of some of our gas-using contributors for test, if they will kindly send me their present addresses. If the Pastil is all you claim for it, it most emphatically is a very valuable adjunct to the gas users' outfit. Moreover, it will have a large field with traveling exhibitors who are now using generators, which are both costly and unwieldy. You will, however, forgive me, my dear sir, if I am just a little bit skeptical until I have been shown. Your claims are very large. I hope they will be borne out by the facts. But we shall see what we shall see.

Wasted Money.

Columbus, Ohio, sends sample of a wire terminal, upon which he is applying for a patent. Now I am going to do a little plain talking in this connection, although I am well aware that plain talking in matters of this kind is by no means popular, and that what I say will probably not convince either Columbus, or others, that I am correct. However, during the past three weeks there have been three wire terminals submitted, upon each of which a patent has been applied for, and none of which, in my judgment, will ever make any money for the inventor. I say this, notwithstanding the fact that each and every one of these terminals is both from a mechanical and electrical standpoint, good. The fact of the matter is, however, there have been a number of excellent terminals on the market for two or three years, some of them, in my judgment, better than any of the recent samples submitted, yet none of them have returned to their inventor a profit on his investment. Why? Because, in the first place, it is hardly within the range of possibility that the inventor can make and profitably market a device of this kind by itself. Such things are only handled at a profit where a number of things are combined into a supply business which is large enough to stand the cost of advertising. But this is not all. Most of the late moving picture lamps have fairly good terminals, and at least one will soon be on the market which will have a terminal that, I think, cannot be improved upon. The whole thing as I see it, lies right here: Columbus, for instance, may sell some of his terminals—granted, but I do not think he will ever sell enough to make it pay, with at least some chances of his not selling enough to even pay the cost of the patent. Therefore why take the chances, since in no event, I think, will he, or the other patentees of wire terminals make enough to pay for the bother?

Now gentlemen, please accept this in the spirit in which it is meant. I am speaking to you frankly, simply because I do not like to see you spending money on something that will not pay you in the end, or at least which I am very thoroughly convinced will not pay you. My advice to you is, so far as the wire terminals are concerned, drop it.

Comments on the Films

"A PERILOUS RIDE" (Lubin), May 22.—A melodrama by Wilbert Melville like many others that he has directed, but with the good points that also are usually found in his work. The good parts are fine and, though we cannot sincerely commend the rest of it, the spectators seemed to like it as a whole. Dolly Larkin, the heroine, certainly earned all her salary. Henry King plays the hero and Joseph Hollan the villain. The photography is fair.

"A WIDOW OF NEVADA" (Essanay), May 22.—A good story produced by Arthur Mackley's company. It is clean and effective, naturally acted and fairly well photographed. The chief weakness of this company is in its sets—we have seen that door with the corn stalks for its trellis and opening into a room of a sheriff's home, and again into the cabin of a railroad workman, several times; in this case it leads into the dining-room of a boarding-house. When that door is pictured from the outside, it is shown without any trellis at all. The story is good and seemed to please.

"INDIAN SUMMER" (Selig), May 22.—A pathetic story of war times by Emmet C. Hall and produced by Lem B. Parker. The hero's memory is temporarily lost after a wound in the head in a battle, and when he is released from the Union prison he doesn't know who he is. His case is quite possible and very sad. He wanders through the South as a tinker and it is not till 1891 that a second knock on the head gives him back his identity and he finds his long-lost sweetheart. It might have been more carefully written and more dramatically worked up; but will go as it is. Herbert Rawlinson, in the leading role, deserves special commendation for his character work and for the stages through which he carries the poor soldier. Eugenie Besserer, in the role opposite to him, also shows the passing years skillfully. The photography is only fair.

"A LADY AND HER MAID" (Vitagraph), May 22.—This is No. 4 in the Belinda Series and, in the first half, it shows only the same qualities that are found in the former pictures; but even this part made laughter. In the middle, it changes and begins to show a real idea. It seemed a pity to us that this should have been treated in just this way; it was worthy of better handling and a comedy was spoiled to make a farce. We find the same players as in the former pictures. Mrs. Breuil is the authoress and Bert Angeles the director.

"THE KICKSVILLE EPICURE" (Biograph), May 22.—A brand new idea with which a lot of good fun might have been made; we got a good many laughs as it was. It shows us a village cop who likes good cooking and a shiftless bum who is a good cook. The cop conspires against the poor man's good intentions with whiskey bottles for the sake of his company in the village caboose.

"CINDERELLA AND THE BOOB" (Biograph), May 22.—We didn't want to laugh at this; we had to. It is a very extravagant burlesque and the fun of it "gets over," will be acceptable, especially where the audience is a little rough.

"GOLD AND THE GILDED WAY" (Melies), May 22.—A picture taken at Gympie in North Queensland. It tells a story that has enough freshness to be welcome, and in new backgrounds that add much to its value as entertainment. The moral is very plainly pointed out when it ends with a scene showing the fruits of dissipation and then a scene showing the fruits of thrift and hard work. We feel that it would have been better with the last two sub-titles left out. The players are all that could be desired, being natural, intelligent and clear-cut in their drawing of character. It makes a pleasing offering that will be widely acceptable, especially in Sunday schools, where the fact that it tells a good story will make it appreciated. The photography is, on the whole, of good quality.

"THE RIGHT OF WAY" (Patheplay), May 22.—A good situation that wasn't really given a fair chance by the director. Its characters are quite conventional and it is acted in a way that keeps it from getting hold of the emotions, from convincing. The photography is very clear, but the backgrounds have nothing artistic in their quality.

"THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S CONSCIENCE" (Lubin), May 22.—This two-part special offering does Director Arthur Johnson credit, so that it is a good picture, is certainly implied. It grips strongly, keeps the attention hammered to the screen. The situation is, in the main, conventional; but much more is got out of it than the usual run of pictures would lead one to expect. Then it has been acted with truth and naturalness, but also with abandon. We have never seen Lottie Briscoe to better advantage and, for that matter, seldom even Arthur Johnson. All the supporting characters, Howard Mitchell as the the man who attempts to seduce the attorney's wife and who is shot by Carl Brandt, a working man, and Florence Hackett, his wife, all stand out with real life in their veins. The story turns on whether the man was killed by the attorney's wife, as the attorney fears and as the working-man claims, or by the man, as according to the wife's story. There's a hole in the net here, if one stops to analyze it; but the passion of the action tends to keep him from stopping. On the showing, the man ought to have been shot. Then, as it approaches the climax, it is not absolutely clear until later. This is the one noticeable fault. It should have had another leader, saying, "The prisoner claims that he saw the wife of the attorney shoot the murdered man." The photography, sets and backgrounds are perfect.

"GLIMPSES OF COLORADO IN WINTER" (Edison), May 21.—The best travel pictures give something of the feeling of a holiday outing even to the spectator; their value comes chiefly from the fact that too few of us can travel or get a chance to see the world, except in this way, which is a good substitute. We find in this some fine pictures of Indians and of cliff homes; but we might find others like them, not so vivid, but still like them, in magazines. The photography in part is clear.

"BRAGG'S NEW SUIT" (Edison), May 21.—Another of Charles M. Seay's comedies, with William Bechtel as Bragg, a teller of long stories who is shown up at his club. The spectators seemed to enjoy it and there was a good deal of quiet laughter. This picture is made along the same general lines as the last of the series, but we have not had too many of them as yet and they still go well. Edward O'Connor has the other important role and furnishes a good part of the comedy. Clara Adams and Yale Benner have roles. The photography is clear.

"THE STOLEN MELODY" (Selig), May 21.—Among the regular releases, not counting comedies, this offering seemed to take best with the audience. It is conventional in outline; but is pleasingly acted, fairly well set and photographed, and dramatic. At two or three points, and these the pivotal places from which the story gets its interest, it very closely resembles "The Stolen Sympathy," produced for the Lubin people by Arthur Johnson, a picture which was much better in every way. If the author, Malcolm Douglas, has not seen the former offering, he deserves credit, otherwise not much. Lem Parker produced it with Al Filson in the cast as an old composer whose beautiful melody is overheard by Al Ernest Garcia, a fraudulent musician, who writes it out and sells it for an original composition. The heroine and daughter of the composer, Kathlyn Williams, is the means of bringing him to justice with the help of Harold Lockwood, a publisher. The photography is very good.

"THE CIRCLE OF FATE" (Kalem), May 21.—An old style picture that is decidedly dull. It was plain that the audience took little interest in it. There were newspapers out and there was much talking among the spectators. The backgrounds are fine.

"THE LETTER'S MISSION" (Essanay), May 21.—There is too little freshness in this picture to make a sure or wide appeal. The same players, in the same doorways and very much the same sets, and even in very much the same business, have been seen too often. We found it uninteresting. It was watched by the majority; but there were newspapers out and some talking. The photography is fair.

"COUNSELOR BOBBY" (Vitagraph), May 21.—A very amusing comedy-offering that is sure to please every one who sees it, every normal person. The story is full of freshness and full of humorous situations; but its chief mainstay is the part of Courtenay Foote as played by him. Mr. Foote is indeed an accomplished actor and in this picture he is truly laugh compelling. Florence Turner and Tom Powers play two lovers who are satisfied with each other. Mr. Foote plays the man whom Father (James Lackaye) wants Florence to marry. Paul Kelley plays her small brother. He has a good role too and is convincing and natural in it. He is retained by Tom to aid in his suit to Florence as against Courtenay, who now proves to have a very weak case. Frank Thomas, the author, can take credit with Larry Trimble, the director. The photography is good. A tip-top offering.

"THE PRICE OF SILENCE" (Patheplay), May 21.—A most melodramatic picture that seems unusually strained and unreal. The audience seemed not to take it very seriously.

"THE NOISY SIX" (Selig), May 23.—A picture of sentiment with a child who has a perfect trust in the fatherly care of God for its central character. Such offerings usually find a wide and appreciative following and we think that this one will. The same script might have been made more convincing if it had been acted and conducted with a bit less constraint. There is that in many of its scenes that rather suggests song slides than motion pictures, a tendency either to open with a fixed pose or to work to one and hold it. No one in it acted better than fair. The photography is clear. It was written by O. A. Nelson and directed by Colin Campbell.

"THE MIDGET'S REVENGE" (Vitagraph), May 23.—A pleasingly comical picture made to utilize a number of theatrical "freaks" in a story of a players' boarding-house. It made a lot of laughter and seemed to please. Lord Robert, the midget, plays a woman dwarf perfectly. It was written by Marguerita Bertsch and produced by Bert Angeles. The photography is good.

"GOING TO MEET PAPA" (Vitagraph), May 23.—A rainy day farce with a few scenes that had to be taken in sunshine. It is a rough and tumble offering, but has a comic situation at the end.

"NIGHT BIRDS" (Patheplay), May 23.—A clearly photographed series of owls. It will interest; but we are not told where the specimens came from. We find none that we ourselves have seen in our own native woods.

"THE AILANTHUS SILKWORM" (Patheplay), May 23.—On the same reel with the foregoing is this, illustrating the Ailanthus silkworm, found in the East. We are not told whether this worm can provide silk for manufacture or not. We are left to assume that it can. That picture of it at its weaving is valuable.

"THE BLACK HAND" (Kalem), May 23.—A farce by the Kalem company on the Coast that is, in substance, like others put out by it. There were a number of laughs and it seemed to "go" with the audience. The photography is very clear.

"THE EGYPTIAN MUMMY" (Kalem), May 23.—On the same reel is this, which is also a love story farce, and made laughter. The same players have the characters and it is lively.

"DETECTIVE DOT" (Lubin), May 23.—Frances NeMoyer plays a would-be girl detective who fails until she has forgotten that she is a detective and, as an indignant woman, "gets" a man "wanted" and so pulls down a big reward. The picture made a good deal of laughter and seemed to please the audience. It is a slight piece written by E. W. Sargent and produced by A. D. Hotaling.

"HIS FIRST EXPERIENCE" (Lubin), May 23.—On the same reel is this comedy love story, which also pleased the audience. The bachelor (Leon Brooks) falls in love with the widow in the next house, played by Mae Hotely. Her little boy (Buster Johnson) plays the part of a human cupid. The script is by W. H. Kitchell and was produced by Arthur Hotaling.

"A RACE TO NEW YORK" (Edison), May 23.—This is the last but one of the series showing us what happened to Mary. This number is almost meaningless except to those who have seen the others or read the story and around us in the theater there was some feeling of discontent at continued or part pictures in general. To us, it seemed better than the others in that it gave us more feeling of suspense; it is more commendably written as a melodrama than either of the latest preceding numbers. Edna Flugrath and Herbert Prior come into it as new characters and, of course, the leads are the same. The photography is inferior in most scenes. C. J. Brabin is the director.

"JEALOUSY" (Essanay), May 23.—In this dramatic study, the Essanay company presents and features Doris Mitchell. It is practically a one-part picture, but it is very well played and will appeal strongly to the discriminating and hardly at all to the gallery. We have not noticed Doris Mitchell before and are glad to welcome her to the screen. Without striking beauty of feature, she is human, imaginative, full of a graceful naturalness and personally pleasing. The Essanay people are to be congratulated on this new addition to their forces, the more because audiences are expressing weariness at seeing the same faces in the same combinations too often. Photographically, it is a very pretty picture and will make a tip-top offering in the right houses. Fine camera work deserves notice.

"CUPID THROUGH THE KEYHOLE" (Vitagraph), May 24.—A farce in which a tramp, more cleverly than convincingly, manages to feast unmolested at the table set for a party. The garret door has an outside catch and serves as a trap for most of the family. The picture was to us, for the most part, dull; but we heard a good deal of laughter from the audience. The script was written by L. Reidel and produced by Van Dyke Brooke. William Shea makes a first rate tramp. The photography is clear enough.

"THE OPEN SECRET" (Patheplay), May 23.—A special two-part offering made in France and telling a story of sentiment that is quite Gallic in complexion; but that will be understood by educated Americans and thoroughly enjoyed. We remember a one-reel picture, also made in France, that developed the same situation in much the same way, yet we were entertained by it the second time. It is a well acted picture and full of humorous character touches that brought out a good deal of laughter. The photography is clear and artistic.

"JUST GOLD" (Biograph), May 24.—The photography of this offering is far below the Biograph standard and, perhaps in consequence, our interest suffers. The picture is rather dull from whatever way one looks at it; yet it has the typical Biograph atmosphere and characters. We find the three brothers who leave the ranch to seek gold, which they find, and die; are killed accidentally yet because of their greed. The tender-hearted son, who remains, gets married and is happy, though poor. Most of what takes place around the gold hole doesn't convince strongly. The weakness of the picture is that it stands for something rather than is something and the mind denies the harsh side of it, because, since the author is seen consistently building up a statement of opinion, we, on our part, are led to be critical.

"BRIGHTENED SUNSETS" (Lubin), May 24.—A story of sentiment dealing with two elderly people in a country town and showing us how the sunset of their lives is brightened by a love story. This offering has the kind of feeling that makes a lively appeal to the majority of spectators and we, ourselves, found it interesting; but it cannot be called an artistic picture. In the first place, it would have been better to have had fewer of the neighbors in the opening and in the closing scenes; as it was, its end suggested the last act of "The Little Minister," and seemed old. There was also no need to have the widow (Mrs. George W. Walters), disliked by her neighbors, in fact, this worked against our sympathy for her; it asked for an explanation. The doctor, who always knows more about his neighborhood than most in it, was wisely chosen as her sweetheart; he is well played by Bartly McCullum. The author is Shannon Fife. The photography is below the usual quality of the Lubin Company. A very fair offering.

"A WOMAN SCORNED" (Patheplay), May 24.—A sensational situation, is found in this picture. It is well written in that the material has been worked up to be as effective as was possible and since it does not convince us, this material is not unpleasant as would have been the case otherwise. As an offering, it is fair for it has action; it isn't dull.

"THE TRANSLATION OF A SAVAGE" (Edison), May 24.—Real sarcasm is not common in pictures and this offering is commendable as having a new atmosphere. It is not intended to convince except just enough to make the spectator gasp at the gall of an English cockscomb of an elder son, who marries a rough woman of the Canadian woods, a trapper's daughter, and sends her home to the castle to spite his parents and the class of society he belongs to. He had been jilted and thought that his parents had played a part against him. Sir Gilbert Parker is the author and it was produced by Walter Edwin. Mary Fuller plays the savage young woman to Richard Tucker's aristocratic young man. Gertrude McCoy, Betty Emerson, Richard Ridgley, Barry O'Moore, Bigelow Cooper and Mrs. Wallace Erskine are aristocrats in England. Robert Brower plays the trapper. The sets are commendable and the photography is clear.

"THE INFAMOUS DON MIGUEL" (Kalem), May 24.—Here is a battle picture with a very fair story too. It gives some feeling of suspense and is clear. The battle is the attack of the American forces on San Juan Hill. There have been several pictures of this and of all we have seen, this picture is the best. Where battle pictures are wanted, this will be a fine offering. The photography is clear. Marian Cooper is the heroine, an American girl on a visit to a schoolgirl friend in Cuba at the time of the occupation. She and her friends are captured by the infamous Don (Harry Milarde). The American officer is Guy Coombs, brother of the heroine. It is very well photographed.

"BRONCHO BILLY AND THE EXPRESS RIDER" (Essanay), May 24.—Like other Broncho Billy pictures. The first part seemed tiresome to us, but there were many in the audience who watched it closely. Photographically, it is below the best by this company.

"BUSTER BROWN, TIGE AND THEIR CREATOR, R. F. OUTCAULT" (Essanay), May 20.—A whole reel is devoted to this subject, which, while a novelty and interesting, has a tendency to flag after a half reel. Mr. Outcault carried his part well. The girl who portrayed Buster was clever; Tige was well represented. The picture will be popular in a matinee audience.

"THE LEOPARD TAMER" (Selig), May 20.—A very short comedy showing how a brave leopard trainer was transferred into a timid husband. Rather weak.

"THE TATTLE BATTLE" (Selig), May 20.—On the same reel is this story of a riot started by two quarreling children and quelled only when a hose was turned on to all the people in the neighborhood.

"THE GOOD IN THE WORST OF US" (Edison), May 20.—There are good situations in this drama produced by the company which recently was in the West. Betty Harte has the role of the mother of a child which falls into the hands of two fugitives from justice, who are being hunted by a posse of which her husband is one.

"IN THE TYROLESE ALPS" (Eclipse), May 21.—A very short picture.

"THE CHICKEN INDUSTRY, CAUTANCES, FRANCE" (Eclipse), May 21.—Besides showing pictures of the raising of chickens and how poultry is packed for market there are other views of barnyard animals. On the same reel.

"BIG GAME AT THE LONDON ZOO" (Eclipse), May 21.—The third subject on this reel. It will interest.

"KIDNAPPING FATHER" (Lubin), May 20.—The best part of this picture is the ending, which is well worked out. The story is not logical at all times. Edwin Carewe has the role of a son who marries in spite of his father's prohibition, and when compelled to go to work obtains a job as chauffeur. Later, when his father is his fare, he kidnaps him and holds him a prisoner until the bride releases him, wins his gratitude and also his blessing.

"THE AMATEUR LION TAMER" (Vitagraph), May 20.—Hughie Mack has a part in this comedy which should be conducive to reduction of weight. He is made a goat, but he makes many laughs. There are some sure-enough lions and they have a lean and hungry look as well as a decidedly ferocious aspect. The escape of the lions from their cage is convincingly carried out. The recapture of one of the lions is a rare bit of realism in which there is no trace of comedy. A good picture.

"A JOCKEY FOR LOVE" (Patheplay), May 20.—Max Linder in this picture has an experience in training down to arrive at a proper weight for a race. He substitutes for a jockey. He has an experience in a bath, in which the temperature seems to be what it is said to be—180 degrees. He is stripped to the waist and you can see the perspiration. He wins the race, though, and the girl. Fair comedy.

"THE CITY OF RAUEN, FRANCE" (Patheplay), May 20.—On the same reel is this fine scenic.

"THE STILL VOICE" (Vitagraph), May 24.—The title refers to conscience and is a good introduction to this strong picture of the conflict in a man's soul between a long-cherished desire for revenge and the memory of his wife's dying plea to forgive. Sidney Drew plays the leading character with forceful truth ably supported by Tefft Johnson, as the man whom he hates. Rose Taply plays the wife; Edith Story, the daughter, and on the other side, is S. Rankin, as the son of the man's enemy and the lover of Edith. Dorothy Kilgour and Rogers Lytton have good parts. All do good work. The photography is of high quality; the story is clear enough to be effective and the offering commendable as a worth-while show.

"RELIGION AND GUN PRACTICE" (Selig), May 26.—There was some reading of newspapers while this offering was on the screen. It tells a conventional Western story in backgrounds that have been used often and has no new characters or new players. There is little convinging action and the photography is wretched. The author is A. W. Corey and producer, William Duncan.

"A VICTIM OF HEREDITY" (Kalem), May 26.—A so-called scientific picture, based on a misapprehension, viz., that the daughter of thieves will inherit a propensity to steal. The picture seems to us to have very little that can entertain a normal spectator; it is rather repellant. The sub-titles are poor and keep it from being clear. The photography is fair and some of the sets very pretty; but the story is not strong. Alice Hollister plays the heroine, daughter of a thief, herself a thieving housemaid whom a doctor, played by James Vincent, cures by a sudden shock and then seems to fall in live with.

"UP AND DOWN THE LADDER" (Vitagraph), May 26.—A farcical love story that is not new nor very convincing. In fact it is one of the weakest of Larry Trimble's productions that we remember seeing. Florence Turner and Courtenay Foote have the leads, but even they haven't been able to put life into it. The scene-making and photography are good; but the script, by Mrs. Breuil, is merely of the commercial, routine kind, far from equal to her really good work. Miss Turner applies for the job of housekeeper to Courtenay Foote, a book worm, and in disguise so that he will think her gray-haired. It turns into a love story, of course.

"DANCES OF THE AGES" (Edison), May 26.—We can not forbear deploring the needless spoiling of this beautiful picture. It gives us a baker's dozen dances by thoroughly competent artists whose grace-filled motions are like nothing so much as music. They are presented as in a dream by double exposure, and are in themselves a joy forever. But, along the table on which their feet keep tune, a dozen men, called dancing masters, but who know nothing of harmony or motion, interrupt continually with jarring discord. It is too bad. Yet, for the shards of poetry that remain in it still, it is a commendable offering; and perhaps, as teaching a needed lesson, the contrast of beauty and ugliness, will make it more effective. J. S. Dawley produced it.

"THE REWARD OF SERVICE" (Lubin), May 26.—From the way this picture started out, we expected a fine offering; but it soon fell into insincerity and became so unconvincing that it was tiresome. There is hardly any truth in it; it is one of the weakest Lubins that we have seen in a long time. Even the photography of those scenes that were taken in Washington is not up to standard. A part of it gives a chance to show glimpses of the White House, the Army Building, etc.

"HIGHBROW LOVE" (Biograph), May 26.—A very rough farce-comedy that is entertaining and made laughter. In it, a young swain gets a letter from his sweetheart, in which she refers to her "beloved Samuel Johnson." It would have been all right if big Sam Johnson, the blacksmith, hadn't lived in the neighborhood.

"THE TRIMMERS TRIMMED" (Biograph), May 26.—On the same reel with "Highbrow Love," is this tramp farce, full of comical action such as we often find in the pictures Dell Henderson makes. It is longer than the former and made more laughter per foot. The characters, their make-up, facial expression, and other eccentricities are what make it go.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY" May 26.—The photography of the weekly topical is not so clear of late as might be. The items this week are worth better camera work. We have some views of Adrianople soon after the taking of the city and some views of Janina, the Albanian city captured by the Greeks. The portraits include the distinguished men who recently met to discuss "universal peace," and a picture of the Siamese prince, accredited to the Court of Spain. The view of the fifteen hundred athletes as they started in the twelve mile foot race, held recently in New York City by the New York Mail, is perhaps the best thing in the number. The Chicago and the St. Louis baseball teams are also included.

Independent

"AN EYE FOR AN EYE" (Gaumont), May 6.—A story of a pretty stenographer in a big store in France. She is loved by both the manager and the assistant manager, who betrays his superior in order to win the girl. She loves the former and systematically leads on the latter until he has ruined himself to buy her the gems she demands, and in the end, she betrays him to the police. The main thread of the story is clear, but there is much in it that is obscure. It is well acted and beautifully set; but the story leaves an unpleasant taste in the mouth.

"THE EYES THAT COULD NOT CLOSE" (Gaumont), May 20.—A hand-colored film. There are beautiful scenes and costumes of the Middle Ages. The story is none too clear; to many it will be incoherent.

"FOR TWO PINS" (Gaumont), May 22.—An amusing comedy. The husband, insisting that his wife conform to the new law and wear a guard on her hatpin, meets refusal. He pretends the uncovered pin hits him in the eye. His wife pretends to sprain her ankle.

"THE IDOL OF BONANZA CAMP" (Nestor), June 4.—A melodramatic story in which the leads are taken by Alexander Gaden, Edna Maison and Harry Von Mater.

"THE HELPING HAND" (Ramo), June 11.—This is a good story. It is about an ex-convict who is taken into the house of a minister. The minister has a son who falls into bad company and loses money gambling. Banknotes the son abstracts from a drawer are taken from him by the ex-convict, and in his possession before he can replace them they are found by the minister. There are some good situations as the truth is revealed. Jack Hopkins has the role of the ex-convict. Will Davis that of the son. The part of the minister is well taken.

"I'M NO COUNTERFEITER" (Ramo), July 9.—Here is a right good comedy. It is of the rural sort, and by no means is this the easiest to put over. Will Davis directs the picture and plays the lead. Miss Guion, as the sheriff's daughter, contributes to the fun. Jack Hopkins is the rube who is rejected by the girl and tries to make trouble for the city fellow who is his successful rival. A flirtation starts in the city, but is shortly transferred to the country. The best of the comedy is in the "business," which is unhackneyed and fresh. The picture will go over good, both in the city and the country.

"THE WORTH OF MAN" (Ramo), June 25.—This is a rapid-fire drama or rather melodrama, and it covers considerable ground. Some of the scenes are well photographed. The picture is ordinary.

"BATTLE OF SAN JUAN HILL" (Bison), June 3.—A two-part feature offering, giving scenes often full of action that suggest very well the landing of the United States forces on the Island of Cuba in 1898, and the charge up to the block house at San Juan. The story is desultory and not perfectly clear. Perhaps it even drags against the battle scenes which might have been better without it. There are places where the picture shows a lack of care that is not wholly excusable. This is noticeable in the costumes of both soldiers and civilians. The offering stands well on its action in the battle and in all the last scenes. The photography is clear enough.

"SECRET SERVICE SAM" (Imp), May 26.—A two-reel subject by Edward Hall. The photography in this is generally good, but there is just a touch of burlesque about the acting in places which robs the production of suspense. International intrigue is the main motive and toward the close there are some brisk, exciting scenes. Jane Fearnley appears as the foreign spy, who assumes the part of a scrub woman in order to steal the treaties in manuscript form. Wm. E. Shay is the secret service man who follows up the crime. In the matter of clues and general detective work, the plot is a little weak. As a whole, it ranks as an average two-reel offering.

"BILLY'S HONEYMOON" (Gem), May 27.—The young married couple, played by Billy Quirk and Violet Horner, are pursued by the mischievous friends from one hotel to another. Their efforts to escape observation, carrying a dog and numerous band-boxes, afford considerable amusement to the observer.

"THE FAITH HEALER" (Eclair), May 28.—This two-reel offering will appeal particularly to thoughtful observers of a religious temperament. It shows how time and circumstance conspire to bring a thoughtless man and an infidel to belief in the Bible. Two love stories are interwoven with the plot. J. W. Johnston appears to advantage in the role of the faith healer, and Guy Hedlund as the unbeliever. Barbara Tennant has the leading feminine part. The photography is very attractive throughout; there is plenty of action of a sincere, convincing nature and the closing scenes are quite impressive.

"THE HEART THAT SEES" (Imp), May 29.—In this, King Baggot assumes the part of a great oculist, with a hunch back. He wins the love of a blind girl, but does not tell her of his affliction. Later it develops she can be cured and he performs the operation. She still retains her love for him in spite of his deformity. A story of simple plot, none too new, but nicely acted and well pictured.

"ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 63." May 21.—The Harvard-Princeton rowing crews, Secretary McAdoo, eight thousand children at play in Central Park, Mayor Alexander reviewing the police force of Los Angeles, the Peace Congress at Washington, auto races at Melbourne—these are among the leading views in this week's number of the weekly.

"HOOKED" (Crystal), June 1.—Frenchy changed the candy boxes on hubby in order to create trouble with the latter's wife, but the wife, discovering this, turns the joke on Frenchy. A half-reel comedy of average merit.

"CLANCY, THE MODEL" (Crystal), June 1.—The Irish model, dressed up as an Indian, becomes intoxicated and goes on a rampage, creating considerable amusement of the slapstick order. On same reel with above.

"A ROMANCE OF THE RAILS" (Frontier), May 29.—A clean, lively railroad story, in which the young fireman gets into many troubles in his love affair, but comes out all right in the end. The photography is very good, as a rule, but there were traces of static trouble in a few places. An entertaining release.

"MARY'S ROMANCE" (Crystal), June 3.—One of the best comedies we have seen for some time, with Pearl and Chester in the leads. The scenes are laid on a farm and the rural effects are attractive. The plot is not new, as it is the old story of the girl being attracted by a stranger from the city, but it holds the interest nicely through an entire reel.

"FLOSSIE VISITS BAR U RANCH" (Frontier), May 31.—Good, clear photography and an entertaining little comedy throughout. The daughter of the ranchman coquettes with the men to her heart's content till Flossie arrives and starts competition. The two pretty girls had on entirely too much makeup. A good comedy reel.

"THE MAN WHO TRIED TO FORGET" (Nestor), June 11.—A film story of compelling interest. The hero falls in love with a lady vampire, who is already married to a gambler. She tries to bleed the hero, but after writing her a check he discovers the truth and gets his money back. He goes West and later saves his partner from a similar fate at the hands of the same pair. The two leading men were good and the girl siren gave a very creditable performance indeed. A fine offering of its type.

"FAITHFUL SHEP" (Reliance), June 4.—Another dog story of a rather conventional sort, but which nevertheless gets over nicely. The dog is a smart Shepherd and he brings little Runa home in her wagon when the search party is looking for her. A pleasing number.

"HEARTH LIGHTS" (Reliance), May 26.—This film story runs along in an entertaining manner. The artist in the city exhibits the paintings of an acquaintance in the country and claims credit for the latter's work. The girl in the case meets the country artist and reveals the truth in a dramatic manner at the art exhibit. Pleasing, without being particularly strong.

"ITALIAN LOVE" (Reliance), June 2.—A typical lower West Side story of the New York Italian section. Irving Cummings appears as Luigi, who marries the daughter of the fruit dealer. Antonio's appearance on the scene brings about jealousy and the exciting duel with knives is stopped just in time to avoid fatal results. The characterizations are fair and the direction very good.

"WHEN LUCK CHANGES" (American), June 2.—This film story has good Western atmosphere, but the scenes are a little jerky. The plot concerns a young prospector, who has been grub-staked by a gambler's wife. Later, the gambler is killed and Jim meets with good fortune, which leads him to marry the young widow. Fairly strong.

"THE WISHING SEAT" (American), June 5.—A very pretty and attractive comedy. The young authoress gives a house party, inviting half a dozen couples. They pair off and desert her every evening. But she sits in the "Wishing Seat" and wishes for a nice young man. A moment later a young artist falls from the rocks above, at her feet. The ending might have been a little stronger, but the film is original and well worth while.

"A DIXIE MOTHER" (Broncho), June 4.—This two-reel film tells a graphic story of warfare. The leading characters are a mother and son. Dick proves a coward in his first battle and runs to his nearby home. The mother, to save him, shoots herself in the arm and pretends the house was attacked by guerillas. Dick is later shot accidentally by his own father during an engagement. The fighting is sharp and spirited and the interest is not allowed to lag anywhere in this double number.

"A TRUE BELIEVER" (Kay-Bee), June 6.—Another two-reel war story. The old minister is deposed and a younger man put in his place.

The new minister acts as a spy. Both of these parts are very well taken. There is also an interesting little girl character and it is through her that the old minister is saved from death when he is suspected of betraying his friends. The younger minister confesses, as a result of seeing the little girl pray for her aged friend. The war scenes in this are of typical excellence and it is a successful offering of the kind.

"VIA CABARET" (American), June 7.—Vivian Rich and Wallace Reid are the principal players in this film story. The girl is violinist in a cabaret and he marries her against his father's wishes. 'Later, he bimself plays for the cabaret and another man attempts to invade his home. The story is not very strongly developed and has a hurried ending.

"HER FAIRY GODFATHER" (Majestic), May 27.—The hired girl is refused permission to go on a picnic. She has a dream in which she sees herself driving away in a chariot, dressed in silks, with the policeman on the beat acting as her godfather. A very slight plot.

"LIFE AMONG THE NAVAJOS" (Majestic), May 27.—These views of life among the Navajo Indians are very interesting. We see them dancing, and the storm effect is very pretty. The blanket making is also worth while. On same reel with above.

"LEGALLY RIGHT" (Majestic), May 25.—Here is a rather novel working out of the old situation in which the girl must live with her uncle and be married under the same roof with him in order to inherit her father's property. Her uncle is put in jail and she and her lover are married in the jail and live there till the legal time has expired. Rather interesting, but the story is a little confusing in places.

"A VICTIM OF CIRCUMSTANCES" (Thanhouser), June 1.—This is a very good comedy offering. The prominent man finds out how easy it is to be wrongly suspected of crime. He is thrown in jail and his photographs and Bertillion measurements taken. The young reporter who loves his daughter saves him. An amusing offering.

"A PULLMAN NIGHTMARE" (Thanhouser), May 25.—A comedy reel, showing a father and son and mother and daughter traveling on a Pullman car. The children are very young and hold a juvenile flirtation. The boy dines on welsh rarebit and ice cream and later has a terrific nightmare, in which he is seen saving the passengers from six train robbers and other heroic deeds. A delightful little comedy, though the ending was a trifle overworked.

"HELP! HELP! HYDROPHOBIA" (Keystone), June 5.—Some mad dogs and a scared fat boy combine to bring about a series of wild happenings in this half reel. Trained Boston bulldogs are employed to good advantage in this.

"HE HAD THREE PASSIONS" (Keystone), June 5.—The fat boy again appears in this. The milking scene will not appeal to refined audiences. There is not much motive to the story, which appears on same reel with above.

"BARNEY OLDFIELD'S RACE FOR LIFE" (Keystone), June 2.—This company of funsters again comes under the wire a winner in this hilarious burlesque. Ford Sterling, the villain in the piece, ties Mabel to a railroad track and steals a locomotive from the train with which to run over her. Six policemen go on a handcar and Mack Sennett and Barney Oldfield, in a racing auto, go to the rescue, arriving, of course, in time to save Mabel. The villain, in rage, chokes his fireman to death and shoots the six policemen. Good burlesque, without objectionable features.

"OWANA, THE DEVIL WOMAN" (Nestor), June 6.—A pleasing variation of the usual Indian tale, in which the "Devil woman" converts the hero into a beautiful spotted pony. The Indian girl remains true to her lover. The pony unties a rope from his own feet and later rescues the girl in a manner that will please children in the audience in particular. Later, the villainous Indian and the Devil woman are killed, which breaks the spell and restores Mona her lover in his natural form. An attractive change in Indian pictures.

"DOLLY AND THE BURGLAR" (Powers), June 4.—This is a nice little story with which to freshen up a heavy programme. The child loves her dolly so much that she takes papa's money box out of the safe and locks dolly in. When the burglar opens the safe and finds nothing but a doll he is disgusted and smashes it on the floor. But of course father is so pleased over the situation that he buys the girl another doll. A clever play.

"MEN WERE DECEIVERS EVER" (Gaumont), June 12.—Good comedy finely photographed. There are many fine scenes of ocean shore. The story is of a wife who is jealous, apparently with sound reason and determines to leave her husband. He pursues her and owing to an accident to her automobile overtakes her. The comedy comes in when it is learned that the only inn in the neighborhood has but one available room, to which the estranged couple are forthwith escorted. The reconciliation is slow, but apparently sure. The husband puts about the couch where the wife is to sleep a large screen. After the couple have kissed and made up the two are shown waving their hands good-night to the camera. The clock in the inn office points to the hour of 12 when they make their first appearance the following day. Before the reconciliation takes place there are several happenings which by many will be construed as suggestive.

"THE MAN IN THE SICK ROOM" (Solax), May 16.—There are in this picture several good situations. The story is of a doctor, unsuccessful in love, who goes down and out. As a burglar he enters with intention to rob the home of the husband of his old sweetheart. The husband is away. When the wife is unable to get a doctor on the telephone for her sick child she discovers the burglar, who ministers to the sick little one. He is found by the returning husband. At the end of the picture there is a scene where the little one is shown at one end of a wire, in her home, talking with the rehabilitated doctor, shown in his office at the other side of the screen. Between the two scenes are flashed the messages that pass between the two. It is very pretty.

"THE PROFESSOR'S TRAVELING ADVENTURES" (Great Northern), May 24.—This is doubtless intended for a comedy; it would be difficult to understand how it could interest a child or adult.

"THE KNIGHT OF HER DREAMS" (Nestor), June 13.—An old situation furnishes the basis of a delightful picture contrasting the days when knighthood was in flower with reality as we find it. The courtly scenes are a dream of a romantic girl and in them she and her friends play the same her real love story, only better. All this has been done before, but never more successfully or amusingly. The offering is full of entertainment and will be liked by all kinds of spectators. The photography is clear and the scenes have often much beauty.

"THE SPRING IN THE DESERT" (Nestor), June 9.—There is some good photography in this Indian picture and the forepart of it is strongly presented. Ortega has visions of the civilization described to him by the white man and leaves Mona to go to college. The pale face boys put up a theft on him and he starts to walk home in disgust. The weak part of the story is its ending. Mona, for some unknown reason, poisons the water in the spring and her lover dies. Seeing this, she and her pony also drink and die; but the pony did not lie still and rather spoiled the effect.

"THE KING CAN DO NO WRONG" (Rex), June 12.—A three-reel romantic drama, written by Lois Weber and with herself and Phillips Smalley in the leading roles. As a rule, the settings are adequate, though not sumptuous. The acting is very intelligent, and while some of the characterizations might have been improved upon, the story is one which holds the attention strongly. Herrick, the faithful soldier, sees both his wife and daughter fall a prey to the king and his son. Many observers will feel that he should have sacrificed his regard for king and country to maintain his personal honor. The story is consistent and retains its hold upon the observer till its tragic close.

"THE PLAYTHING" (Victor), May 30.—Mae Gordon plays well in this picture the role of a confidential secretary determined to rob her employer, through winning his love if possible; that failing, she with the aid of the man she really loves takes the money from the safe. James Kirkwood, who produces the picture, also plays the employer. The story is well told. Most of the incidents occur at a ball and reception given at the home of the employer, and the scenes are well staged.

"HE RUINS HIS FAMILY'S REPUTATION" (Eclair), June 1.—This is one of "Their Only Child" series of cartoons. It will make a lot of fun.

"ALL ON ACCOUNT OF AN EGG" (Eclair), June 1.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this comedy staged in Pawnee City, Oklahoma. It goes over.

"HIS MAGIC HAND—HY MAYER" (Imp), May 31.—Some laughable subjects drawn on the screen. Good stuff.

"THE MAGNETIC MAID" (Imp), May 31.—French farce which will make much amusement in some houses.

"THE SHADOW" (Rex), June 8.—Otis Turner produces a pronounced melodrama. It will strike some observers as if too much stress is laid on the fact that the business man had in former years been a gambler—in other words, that there is hardly sufficient justification for the blackmailer holding up the man he had known in other days. The picture is well staged and will hold throughout. Bob Leonard and Margarita Fischer have the leads.

LEON GAUMONT IN NEW YORK.

Mr. Leon Gaumont, head of the Societe des Etablissements Gaumont, and one of the two leading film manufacturers of Europe, is at present in New York. Mr. Gaumont has brought with him his talking pictures, which have been so long popular at the Gaumont Palace in Paris, and also the Gaumont natural color motion pictures, which have been making such a hit at the Coliseum in London and at the Gaumontcolor in Paris. A private demonstration for the benefit of the trade is being arranged.

ART THEATER, STAUNTON, VA.

J. W. Myrtle, manager of the Art theater, 119 East Main Street, Staunton, Va., was the first man to build a picture theater in this city—the President's birthplace. The Art is the most up-to-date moving picture and vaudeville house in the city. The pictures are changed daily. Mr. Myrtle has two Edison projection machines in his operating room. He says that business with him could not be better and that he could not get along without the Moving Picture World.

"FAITH OF A GIRL" (Lubin).

The loyalty and love of a woman for a man, no matter what he has been, is beautifully demonstrated in this excellent Lubin photoplay, and the reward that follows is richly merited. The shadow of a past crime may darken a man's life, but nothing stimulates the resolve to do right in the future as the faith of a woman. The picture employs the pick of the best players in the Lubin Studio.

When Jim Farley took Laura Mills away amid showers of rice on the honeymoon, Mr. and Mrs. Mills were proud of their handsome son-in-law but he had had a past that he tried to bury. He had done things against the law and the happy couple had hardly left the door steps, when two detectives appeared and told the family that they wanted Jim Farley. The officers followed the couple to the hotel in the big city and there told Jim he was wanted for "a job" which took place six months ago. Farley kissed his beautiful wife and she went back to her parents, who denounced her husband, and Laura refusing to hear words against him left the home to find employment. She secured an engagement in the office of Richard Starley, but her employer was attracted and one evening tried to embrace her. She was horrified and showed a locket with the picture of herself and her husband. Starley ashamed, then became her friend. One day visiting the jail to see Jim a fire broke out, there was a panic, Jim battled with the flames and rescued the warden's little son, both were badly burned and taken to the hospital. When convalescent, the warden and Starley set to work to get Jim's freedom for bravery, and they succeeded restoring Farley to the arms of his faithful wife.

Scene from "The Faith of the World" (Lubin).

PICTURES IN CHINA.

Pathe Freres seems to have the run of the business in the three moving picture houses in Shanghai, China. The pictures are rented to the exhibitors on weekly rates, which vary from $62.50 for Class A pictures, per week, down as low as 5/10ths of a cent per meter for Class C. In addition to the three regular theaters there are a number of outdoor shows in operation during the summer when the weather permits.

Harold Shaw received many congratulations on his new alliance as managing director of the London Film Company. Harold has a host of friends. Their regret at his severance of intimate associations is mitigated by the feeling that he is tackling a man's job and that he is the man for the job. He sailed May 31.

"THE MASTER CRACKSMAN" (Reliance).

The scenario of this two reel feature was taken from the magazine story of the same name by Stephen Allen Reynolds.

Robert Thatcher invents a device for the protection of safes and vaults. Needing money to educate his son, he sells his patent for a few thousands to the Thomas Corporation. Later, he discovers a flaw in the invention and sets about to perfect it. When he attains this, he offers it to the Thomas people for its full value, $50,000. This is refused and he dies alone and in poverty. His boy returns from college, learns the truth and swears to avenge his father. He learns the weakness of the Thomas System and with his sweetheart's help manages to break into every safe so protected. The papers are filled with stories of the mysterious cracksman who steals nothing. Parr, the detective, gets Robert one night as he is breaking into a bank. He listens to the boy's story and his sympathy is enlisted to such an extent that he brings Thomas to terms and sees that the boy gets an interest in the business created by his father's invention.

Scene from "The Master Cracksman" (Reliance).

Pretty Irene Howley, playing Madge, the girl who dresses as a boy to become her sweetheart's assistant, is very pleasing. Irving Cummings as the son, and Ralph Lewis as the father, do good work. Others in the cast are Alan Hale, E. P. Sullivan, George de Carlton, George Siegman and others.

Oscar C. Apfel directed this exceptionally clever picture which was released May 31st.

MENSTRUM GETS C. B. KLEINE'S OPTICAL BUSINESS.

C. B. Kleine, the veteran optician and moving picture supply man, has transferred his business to Henry Menstrum, who has been foreman of the business for many years. Until recently the business was located at 19 East 21st Street, New York, but it has been removed to 385 Sixth Avenue, between 23rd and 24th Streets. A full supply of moving picture accessories, stereopticons, projecting machines, etc., will be carried.

DIRECTOR EDWARD WARREN MADE IT.

In a review of the Solax feature picture, "Kelly From the Emerald Isle," published in last week's issue of the Moving Picture World, our reviewer credited the production of the picture to Madame Blache. Advice from the Solax studio is received to the effect that Madame Blache did not direct the production of this excellent picture, but that the credit is due to Edward Warren, who produced "Beasts of the Jungle," "Dublin Dan" and several other Solax features.

"SHEP, THE HERO" (Majestic).

Shep, the handsome and well-known acting dog, proves, in this film, that he possesses almost human intelligence. His work with beautiful little Runa Hodges is wonderful.

When only a puppy, Shep runs away and is found by an old cab driver, who cares for him. Later, in poverty and illness, Shep remains the old man's only friend. One day, on his way to the village to get medicine for his master, the dog comes upon Baby Runa, who has been caught in the railroad tracks and cannot free herself. Seeing her danger, he runs up the track and stops the oncoming train by barking. The child is saved and Shep and his master, with their old horse, given a comfortable home in the country for the rest of their happy days.

Scene from "Shep, the Hero" (Majestic).

Charles Hoskins makes an unusually effective character study of the old cab driver. Other players are Ethel Phillips, Paul Scardon and Thomas R. Mills. This picture was directed by Lawrence McGill and was released on May 20.

OLDEST SHIP IN A RELIANCE PICTURE.

While making a picture dramatization of "Half a Chance," the well-known novel by Frederick Isham, Producing Manager J. V. Ritchey of the Reliance found himself face to face with a difficulty that seemed impossible to overcome. The story deals with events that took place during the era when Great Britain was exiling prisoners to Australia and part of the action is on board one of the old convict ships of that period.

Manager Ritchey was just about despairing of finding a ship that could be made to look like the genuine article when he located a real "hell-ship" at his very door.

The Success, which lies moored in the Hudson River, is an old convict ship which carried thousands of the one hundred and sixty-five thousand convicts that left English ports while that disgraceful system of transportation lasted—a ship which in the days of her activity carried eighty pairs of handcuffs and three hundred basils with chains to torture the miserable convicts who were forced to make the entire voyage in irons.

The convict ship Success is said to be one of the oldest boats afloat, as her timbers were laid down in Moulmain, British India, in 1790. She is built of teak wood throughout and, in spite of her 123 years of active service, made the voyage across the Atlantic last year—under her own canvas—a trip which took ninety-six days.

The weird old hulk with its rows of gloomy dungeons and its paraphernalia of punishment and torture fitted into the Reliance dramatization of "Half a Chance," as if the book had been written with this very ship as a background.

The picture will be presented in two reels on Saturday, June 14th.

"THE FATAL GROTTO" (Itala).

Gun-powder smuggled and gun-powder exploded plus the gamut of human emotions are the stirring motives of the Itala "Big Film," "The Fatal Grotto." Good old filibuster days on the coast of Italy when plot and counterplot shook the Roman throne is the time and place of the drama. The story, however, does not deal with the intrigues of dynasty, but with the kingdom of the human heart.

It is a well-adapted version of the old dramatic theme of a father coerced by a villain who "knows too much" into acceding to the villain's demands for a daughter's hand. Of course, like all well regulated villains, his plots and plans a la the way of mice and men, "gang aft aglee."

The villainous one makes his demands upon the father of the beautiful daughter so offensively brutal that the father, to destroy forever the smuggling evidence holding him in the bad man's power, determines to blow up the cavern and with it the "goods" the sinister person has "on" him. The father, however, does not reckon upon the curiosity of young folks who, when they see a mysterious opening into the bowels of the earth, are bound to explore it. It happens, therefore, that when the father has ignited the fuse which leads to a powder keg in the cave, he doesn't know that his daughter and her well beloved are going to be buried in the rocky wreckage, neither does he realize that in destroying the cave he is also destroying the formidable enemy who would become his son-in-law.

Trouble is imminent between the bad man and the accepted lover in the sombre grotto when the powder ignites and all goes up in smoke and all comes down in real hard rocks. The cave is inundated by the force of the explosion which diverts the course of a creek, and the daughter and her sweetheart have the time of their lives, and almost of their deaths, in keeping from under the rising flood.

A healthy drama is this and one that will satisfy the craving of the mind for good, clean excitement. There is a thrill in almost every flicker of film, though there will be no need of the censor's ruthless hand. It is two good lively reels of action, acted well and photographed consummately. If you have nothing to do see it. If you have something to do see it anyhow.

"THE GOVERNOR'S DOUBLE" (Patheplay).

The film featuring a double exposure provokes no end of comment and speculation among the witnessing audiences as to just how the peculiar effect is obtained. This discussion is a good thing for the exhibitor, as it starts tongues wagging about the film and then about the theater in which the film was shown. The spectators at the first exhibition of the film tell their friends to see it and soon the exhibitor is displaying the S. R. O. sign. The exhibitors who booked "The Compact," the story in which Crane Wilbur played two parts, will testify to the truth of this statement, as the requests to decide bets as to whether or not Crane Wilbur had a brother, were voluminous.

Scene from "The Governor's Double" (Patheplay).

"The Governor's Double," a two reel Patheplay which will be released June 13th, is another of these much discussed features and for the information of exhibitors, (they may tell their audiences or not as they wish), Paul Panzer plays both Governor Garland and his double, the convict who found himself welcomed to the Governor's office while the Governor was secretly in prison getting an idea of prison conditions, and who decided to keep up the deception, even going so far as to attempt to marry the Governor's fiancee.

The double exposures, which are, of course, perfectly accomplished, are not the only features of this feature film. The settings are truly a work of art and for the proper atmosphere the state capitol at Albany, New York, has been used. The story is a strong one made very plausible and it has a punch that is entirely unexpected. The acting of the leading characters, Paul Panzer and Pearl Sindelar, as well as the company supporting them, is worthy of special mention. The film will be released June 13th.
